Young men enter the ministry knowing that they will probably receive through their active years a salary not more than sufficient to keep them free from worldly care and avocations. What then is to be their lot if old age and infirmity shall come? They leave this to the Lord and our Assembly believes that it is the will of the Lord that His Church shall make some adequate provision to meet the wants of these aged and infirm ministers, and to give aid to the widows and orphans of these worthy servants, after they shall have been called away. Each Presbytery designates the ministers, widows and orphans within its bounds who should be aided and names the sums which should be sent to them. July is the month set apart for contributions to this cause. The Assembly's Central Office has gathered the facts and has sent them to the pastors, but as many readers of the N.C. PRESBYTERIAN may not be in the church when the pastor makes those facts known, they are given here, as follows:

1. For year July, 1894, to July, 1895, not less than thirty-five ministers will be placed on this list by Presbyseries. Twenty or more of them range from about seventy-four to eighty-four years of age. They have done pastoral, educational, Home and Foreign missionary work for the church. The same may be said of the remaining fifteen nearly all of whom, although under seventy-four years, are nevertheless elderly men. Many of the thirty-five are infirm and suffering pain.

2. On the list will be not less than ninety widows, elderly or aged, most of them infirm; many of them are physical sufferers. About twenty other widows, with from one to seven children each, and about ten cases where there are children with both parents deceased, will complete the invalid list. These beneficiaries are scattered through our thirteen Synods, most of them living among relatives or friends, who do much towards caring for them. Some of them, however, live alone, and with most of them the only income they have is the amount received from this fund. Some of the children will be in the Fredericksburg school, some in other good schools.

3. The receipts for this cause increased steadily from about $10,000 in 1894 to nearly $16,000 in 1892. For the last two years receipts have fallen to below $13,000. Meantime the number of families placed on the list by the Presbyteries has increased from about 110 to (next year) over 150.

4. The Assembly's Committee can disburse only so much money as the churches give. Last year the money paid about 86 per cent. of amounts which Presbyteries said their ministers, widows, and orphans should have. This year (ending June 30, 1894) the fund now on hand will pay 71 per cent. of the amounts asked. What shall be disbursed to these Christian friends next year? The July contributions perhaps $20,000, will be needed. The last Assembly in Nashville said: "This Assembly solemnly lays upon the consciences of all churches and pastors the duty of securing in their next collection an increase of at least 50 per cent. upon the collections of last year. If all pastors, officers and people will for a moment consider the suffering condition of these members of Christ's body, they will surely count it a privilege to respond to this call."

NOT LESS THAN $18,000,

Only a few words are necessary. There are persons among us whom God has blessed not only with health, but with comforts, and even with large means. There are Sabbath-school superintendents and teachers whose classes will take profound interest in this cause if they hear of it. There are aid and missionary societies who can give something from their treasury—all such have the opportunity to honor Christ with a contribution and we shall be glad to receive it at their earliest convenience.

ELDERS' AND DEACONS' INSTITUTE.

To the Ministers, Elders and Deacons of Mecklenburg Presbytery, In the Name of Our Master, Greeting:

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg at Lincolnton, April 13th, 1894, adopted resolutions declaring that the permanent establishment of a judiciously conducted Elders' and Deacons' Institute is of prime importance and eminently desirable, and appointed the undersigned a committee with all necessary powers, to arrange for and conduct it.

We hereby call the Elders and Deacons Institute of Mecklenburg Presbytery to meet at Steel Creek church, Mecklenburg county, August 21st to 23d inclusive.

It will be remembered by you last year the Institute was held jointly by Mecklenburg and Concord Presbyteries for seven days. This year it will be by our Presbytery alone and will last only three days. In order that the results desired may be accomplished, it is necessary that we have the co-operation of every minister, elder and deacon in the Presbytery. The object of this institute in the language of the resolution adopted by the Presbytery is "that our office-bearers may be trained and instructed in the nature, duties and functions of their office; be stimulated and inspired; be developed and expanded, and be brought up to a higher plane of efficiency, usefulness and responsibility in the discharge of their important duties. In other words that the sole and simple aim of the Institute be to afford to them such an efficient system of instruction and stimulation, of training and discipline, as shall prompt and enable them to magnify their office." Special pains will be taken to assign topics and obtain speakers so as to produce the best results.

A special feature will be the music under the direction of Mr. R. C. Freeman, who has had much experience in teaching and training choirs and congregations to sing.

The place of meeting is Steel Creek, the largest country church in the bounds of our Presbytery, in one of the most beautiful and prosperous sections of Mecklenburg county, only a short ride from the railroad station of Lodo on the R. & D. R. R. Steel Creek is noted for its unbounded hospitality and generosity, and everything necessary for the comfort of those who attend is guaranteed by the fact that Steel Creek undertakes to entertain all who come.

Special rates will be secured on the railroads and the trains will be met at Lodo by conveyances for all free of charge furnished by the generosity of Steel Creek.

The date should be remembered. August 21st to 23d, 1894. A season of the year when there is much leisure and every one can spare the time to attend.

Some general expense is necessary, in the way of printing, postage, circulars, expense of special speakers who may be secured, &c. To meet this Presbytery instructed the churches to take a special collection during May or June and to send coutributions to R. A. Dunn, treasurer, Charlotte, N. C., by July 1st. Have you done this? If not please attend to it at once.

Finally Brethren. This Institute is yours, and upon you rests the responsibility of making it a success, and of proving that it deserves to be what the Presbytery desires it shall be, a permanent school of help. Every man called of God to bear office in His Church has a grave responsibility resting upon him, for which he will have to account to Him "in that day," and every one ought to gladly avail himself of every means and opportunity presented, to the better equip him to meet that responsibility. So it is your duty, and should be considered a privilege to attend. Come and bring your Bible and Note Book. Come and bring your brother officer with you. Come and get acquainted with your fellow office-bearers all over our Presbytery. Come and get help and give help.

Come every body of every name and denomination.

For information concerning entertainment write R. C. Freeman, Dixie, N. C.; for Railroad rates write Capt. A. G. Brenizer, Charlotte, N. C. For any other information write Rev. F. D. Hunt, Chairman or Capt. A. G. Brenizer, Secretary, Charlotte, N. C.

Talk, work and pray for the Institute and come expecting a blessing from the Lord.

Yours in Jesus' name,

Rev. Frank D. Hunt; Rev. S. W. Newell; Rev. Jesse W. Siler; Rev. Jonas Barclay; Elder A. G. Brenizer; Elder C. E. Graham; Elder John W. Moore; Deacon R. A. Dunn; Deacon John F. Dove; Deacon R. C. Freeman; Deacon J. J. Osborne. Committee.

"Thanks Be Unto God."

Will the Gospel that bringeth "good tidings" fail us in the final hour? Never! Never!

When the tides go out, and the wave-beaten mariner lies stranded and helpless, it is then that an Invisible Presence takes possession of body and soul. It is then that a quiet trust in Christ alone—not in one's own merit—brings holy peace. No one can tell how this can be. No matter. Let it be forever an unexplained mystery. The sacred reality is enough.

How delightful at such an hour to silently repeat the sacred melodies of the Church, to review the goodness of God throughout life, to recall the precious promises and covenants, to retrace the footsteps of the Master through His earthly career, and to dwell upon His love for a perishing world.

"Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Organization of Shearer Church :—On Saturday and Sunday—June 2d and 3rd, what has been known as Shearer Chapel was organized into Shearer church. Starting a few years since as a little Sunday-school out under the shade of the trees, the work continued to grow and prosper till three years ago it was felt that a house of worship must be provided and so a neat little chapel was erected on a lot donated for that purpose. Under the management of the students of Davidson College, three miles away, the Sunday-school flourished and grew stronger every year, until in the fall of '93 the community felt that a church should be established there.

During the past winter this feeling took definite form in a movement to send in a petition to Presbytery to organize a church at that place. At the spring meeting of Concord Presbytery a petition of forty-five names was presented, asking for a church in that locality. The petition was favorably considered and referred to a commission of three who had power to organize the church, "if the way be clear."

The commission met on the ground June 2nd, and after a careful consideration of the request pro and con, decided that a church organization there would be an advancement of the Lord's work in that community. Accordingly the church was organized with a membership of forty-four and elders and deacons were elected. The next day these officers were duly installed and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper administered. It was a great occasion for the people in that part of the country and crowds came from all directions The church could not accommodate all the people, so that about a third of them were forced to remain outside the building. These gathered about the door and windows, some in carriages and others standing or sitting under the shade of umbrellas. The name of the organization was changed from Shearer chapel to Shearer church in honor of the President of Davidson College, who had been largely instrumental in assisting and supporting the work.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE.

Fifty-Seventh Commencement—June 10th, June 14th.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The weather was remarkably pleasant, the number of visitors was very large—the largest in years—the platform speeches of a high order of excellence ; therefore commencement at Davidson was even more attractive than such occasions usually are. Such at any rate was the verdict of many visitors, young and old. Even bridal couples are beginning to make the Davidson commencement the objective point of their tour, if we are to judge by the number who last week saw the honey-moon here at its full. A larger number of alumni than usual awakened so much enthusiasm that an alumni banquet was unanimously voted for next commencement. The session of the Board of Trustees was uneventful. Dr. Shearer's proposal for a chair of Philosophy was warmly seconded, and it is to be hoped that this chair will be established shortly. The personnel of the faculty will remain unchanged for next session, except that an assistant in chemistry will be added. Mr. J. D. McDowell, of the class of '94 will fill this place next session. Dr. S. S. Laws, LL. D., of Columbia Theological Seminary, preached the baccalaureate sermon, a philosophical discourse of ninety minutes, far above the heads of most of his auditors, but interesting to the graduating class especially to graduates in psychology and physics with both of which departments it was very intimately associated. His text was Is. xl : 8. "The grass withereth and the flower fadeth ; but the word of our God shall stand forever." Nature and the Word are the work of God ; the one dies, the other is deathless. Coming from the same author the two must harmonize where they coincide. After discussing eight important topics, such as life, creation, immortality, upon which both science and the Bible had reached conclusions ; the speaker showed that the conclusions of each were substantially the same. So, too, with the five leading topics of philosophy—mind, matter, God, duty, immortality. Here again Bible teachings are at one with the soundest results of psychological research. In conclusion it was shown that (1) The sacred writings have preceded from superhuman intelligence. (2) The teachings of Scripture, so interwoven with all other knowledge, must be as lasting as the human intelligence and its acquisitions of the truth itself.

At night Dr. W. W. Moore preached a rich expository sermon before the Y. M. C. A., on the Call of Moses. Exod. 3 : 10, "Come now, therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayst bring forth my people, the children of Israel, out of bondage."

After calling attention to the calls of Ezekiel, Jeremiah and Isaiah and emphasizing the fact that Moses was doing his nearest duty when called, the splendid circumstances attending the call were vividly set forth. Yet notwithstanding the Divine presence Moses began to plead various excuses, such as his incompetency, his ignorance of God, the unbelief of the people and his lack of eloquence Unlike Paul he failed to respond at once to the heavenly vision. Moses crippled his usefulness by failure to obey promptly. Many are hesitating to-day, though the call for ministers is louder than ever. With the blood-stained cross as his banner Paul was ready to march to every duty. Young men, are you ?

The discourse was very effective. In a brief summary one gathers but little idea of its pointedness of illustration and exquisite English. In its grasp of the realities of life, and adaptedness to the needs of the audience, it shows a marked advance even on the fine baccalaureate preached here six years ago.

Monday night, the senior class held their class exercises : Prophet, J. A. Clotfelter ; Historian, J. W. M. Goodman ; Poet, Anon ; Distributor of Souvenirs, C. F. Rankin ; Secretary, W. A. Hafner ; President, M. E. Sentelle. To the young people this is the most interesting of all the commencement exercises. The poem was excellent and in the distribution of the souvenirs to various members of the class, the hits were unusually happy.

Tuesday night, Mr. R. L. Ryburn, class of 83, delivered the alumni oration before the Philanthropic Society. Subject, "Portia," and Mr. H. A. Banks, class of '88, the same before the Eumenean Society on "Horace Greely."

The medal for the Wednesday night oratorical contest between Eu. and Phi. was awarded to Mr. F. D. Jones, Eu., whose subject was "The Poet as Teacher." The other society medals were awarded as follows : Philanthropic Society : Debaters—C.F. Rankin, Greensboro, N. C. ; Declaimers—C. McI. Matthis, Clinton, N. C. ; Essayists, R. M. Brown, Charlotte, N. C. ; Eumenean Society : Debaters—M. E. Sentelle, Henshaw, Tenn ; Declaimers—D. K. Pope, Huntersville, N. C., Essayist—H. K. Parks, Edmiston, N. C.

Wednesday morning's exercises are anticipated with great interest by all the more thoughtful visitors at Commencement. This year the attendance was unusually good and the two platform addresses were the best your correspondent ever remembers to have heard at Davidson College. Dr. G. B. Strickler, of Atlanta., Ga., delivered a very strong address before the Philanthropic and Eumenean Societies. His subject was "The Conditions of Success in Life." All except the morally defective strive after success, and life is a long fraud if one does not, for compensation is the reward of success. What then are the conditions of success ? There must be such conditions, for law prevails here as elsewhere, and right effort rightly directed is always in some way sufficiently rewarded. Therefore :

(1.) You must resolve to do your best for yourselves, your neighbors and your God Difficulties may confront the man of resolution, but they have a habit of getting out of his way and every difficulty overcome is a gun captured from the fortress of success.

(2.) We must make a wise choice of a profession. Many men are in the professions when they ought to be in the field ; in the field, when they ought to be in the forum. You can't fit a triangular block with a square hole, yet we see men jurists when they ought to be journeymen. Be honest with yourself and with God. Ask Him what to do and remember He will give wisdom abundantly to all that ask for it.

(3.) You must abide by the profession chosen. If you attempt to be physician, lawyer, soldier, you will end by being none of them.

(4.) You must master your profession. The age demands excellence in every department and cannot be long deceived by tinsel and glitter. It will judge your work by its results and only the hard worker will ultimately succeed, Good luck never made a man a successful jurist, linguist or doctor.

(5.) You must have a character for integrity, fidelity, courage, principle, for the necessary basis of all human intercourse is confidence and the only basis of confidence is character.

(6.) You must take as your guide the Bible. Assaulted on everyside for centuries, it stands to-day a firmer fortress of truth than ever. With the infallible Word as a guide life cannot be a failure.

Dr. Strickler is a vigorous thinker and carries in his face the evidences of strength of character and high resolve. His personality imparted momentum to his words. The abstract given above is unjust to the speaker because it fails to recognize his impressive delivery and the felicity of his illustration.

The Alumni orator, Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D. D., spoke on Patriotism and Politics.

Patriotism is of two kinds. The first affords protection from external dangers. The supply of this kind is ludicrously in excess of the demand. The second affords protection from internal dangers. The demand for this patriotism is appealingly in excess of the supply. The second therefore, calls for special consideration, and the small supply is due more to the indolence of the cultured class than to the ignorance of the masses. Every educated man, then, must be a practical politician if America, the scene of the last coming effort of the Anglo-Saxon race is to solve successfully the great problem of self-government.

But where is the influence of the educated man to be felt. At the polls, the primaries, through the press, and from the platform. The primary is the centre of political reform and because educated men neglect the primary fools select our rulers, wise men, elect them.

Every educated man ought also to be an independent. To be a patriot rather than a partisan demands courage of a Spartan type—a civic heroism like Beecher's in 1884.

Dr. Smith's address was brilliant and polished. His pungent epigrams and happy antitheses arrested the attention throughout.

The next session begins Thursday, September 14th.

THE BARNES HOME SCHOOL.

The fifth annual session of the "Barnes Home School for Boys" closed May 31st, and was a season of special enjoyment. In the morning Dr. H. L. Smith, of Davidson College delivered the address, choosing for his subject the "Opportunities and Conditions of Success." The speaker was most entertaining, and showed himself well qualified to say the fitting word to boys and young men preparing for the battle of life. Wise and earnest counsel was given, and the close attention of the whole audience showed the interest awakened by this popular member of Davidson's able Faculty.

The declamations occupied the afternoon and were well rendered to judge by the flowers showered upon the speakers. The medal was awarded to M. B. Wilson, of Mayesville, S. C. Prizes for excellence in scholarship were given to N. R. Stansell of Allenton, N. C., and to H. S. Munroe, and J. G. Ballew, of Lenoir.

In the evening a farewell reception was given to the boys and their many friends in the school parlor and dining room, which served as a most pleasant ending to the days' festivities.

The Barnes Home School, situated at Lenoir, N. C., is becoming well known as a school whose instruction is eminently Christian and home like. By kind care and thorough instruction it has secured the utmost confidence of its patrons. The next session opens August 28th. Catalogues are now ready for distribution.

The Collection for the Invalid Fund in July.

A gentleman who was successful in raising money for good objects was asked how he managed. His reply was "I place before people something which they would rather have than money."

The facts concerning the July contribution have been stated. About thirty-five ministers, aged or infirm, as many as twenty of them far up in the seventies, some of them well on in the eighties ; about ninety widows of ministers, elderly, or aged, not a few of them infirm ; twenty other widows of ministers with families of children, and several cases of children of ministers, both parents deceased. Would you not rather have the blessing of God with reward which He will give to those who from the heart give liberally to His Treasury for the assistance of these His children, than to have money ? You can contribute through your church collection or send directly to the Assembly's Treasurer.

Converse College has closed the fourth year of work and the commencement exercises were all of a very high order. Rev. Wm. M. Grier, D. D., President of Erskine College, preached a very fine baccalaureate sermon on the "Friendship of Jesus," and Rev. Lansing Burrows, D. D., delivered a splendid address before the literary societies on the "Influence of Cultured Homes upon Civilization." Seventeen graduates received diplomas. The music by the students and the essays by the graduates were very fine. The art exhibit was magnificent. The college has enrolled this year 251 students, 150 music students and 70 art students. The strong faculty number 28 members. The standard of scholarship is higher and the work done more thorough than in many colleges for men. The buildings are magnificent and the appointments complete in every way.

To the Ministers and Churches of Concord Presbyterv.

DEAR BRETHREN :—This is the last of the "loving epistles," I am instructed by our committee to address you till the time for the August collections draws nigh. "I beseech you therefore to hear me patiently."

(1) Please remember that July is the month appointed by Presbytery for all our churches to take one collection for the Invalid Fund. About three-fourths of our churches generally contribute to this cause.

(2) As Rev. R. P. Pell, evangelist, is in pressing need of money to complete church buildings already commenced and meet payments now due—buildings imperatively needed in his growing and increasingly encouraging field. I am directed by our committee to earnestly entreat all our churches to take one collection in July for Church Erection as soon as possible and promptly send all funds contributed to Rev. J. A. Ramsay, Treasurer, Hickory, N. C.

Danbury Reporter : Some farmers are cutting wheat this week, and it is said that the crop is fairly good, while some fields are extra, on others the wheat will be too short to save well.

Forest City Ledger : For the past five days wheat harvesting has been in full blast. The crop is very light and will not average more than half in this section.

Shelby Review : Mr. James Spake, while in the woods at work, heard his dogs barking and went to see what they had treed, and to his surprise found a huge snake six feet two inches in length and seven inches around his body. This is one of the largest snakes ever seen in this county.

Charlotte News : The gold business at the Surface Hill continues to be as good as ever. Capt. Vivian, of the Mungo mine, is putting in larger machinery, and says the further he has gone the better the ore has become and he is not afraid of any expenditure. Some very pretty pieces have been taken out there recently.

Never within the memory of the oldest inhabitant have the crops been kept as free from grass as they have been this year. One can travel for miles and never see a grassy field. One gentleman was heard to say a few days ago that all the grass in the cultivated fields of Union county would not make a feed for a hungry ox. So says the Monroe Enquirer.

Third Quarter.—Lesson II.

July 8.—Presentation in the Temple.

Luke ii. 25-38. Commit vss. 27-32.

Golden Text. A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel.—Luke ii. 32.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. The preliminary studies we again give in the form of daily readings for the week preceding the lesson, but this does not mean that the other steps are not to be studied until the daily readings are concluded.

SUNDAY. The Lesson, including vss. 21-24, preceding.

MONDAY. The Law of circumcision. Gen. xvii. 1-14.

TUESDAY. The Law of Purification. Lev. xii.

WEDNESDAY. Redemption by Blood. Ex. xii. 21-30.

THURSDAY. Redemption by Substitution. Num. viii. 13-26.

FRIDAY. Redemption by Price. Num. iii. 40-51.

SATURDAY. Presented to the Lord. 1 Sam. i. 11, 19-28.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: The aged saint, vs. 25; the prophetic promise, vs. 26; the Spirit's guidance, vs. 27; the Word's guidance vs. 27; the fulfillment acknowledged, vss. 28-30; the Messiah's mission, vss. 31-35; the testimony confirmed, vss. 36-38.

Third Step. Consult your helps for any points needing explanation; for example:

Vs. 25. Simeon, the ancient form of Simon. Just and devout. The first term implies integrity in all the relations of life, the second scrupulousness in the exercise of the rites of religion, and not a mere external scrupulousness, but that which springs from devotion of spirit.

Consolation of Israel. Compare vs. 38, iii. 15: John i. 41, 45, for the state of general expectation at this time. The term is from the same word as the "comforter" or Paraclete, that the Lord promised He would send in his place, John xiv. 16.

The Holy Ghost, peculiar to the N. T., in our version, but not different in meaning from the "Holy Spirit" of Ps. li. 11, and the Spirit of the Lord" of Is. lxi. 1, and of the O. T., generally.

Vs. 26. Compare the revelation to some of the Apostles as to the coming of the kingdom in power, i. e., at Pentecost, Mark ix. 1. Lord's Christ. "Christ" was not originally a proper name. It means "Anointed," and is first used in the song of Hannah with the pronoun "his," i. e., the Lord's. I Sam. ii. 10.

Vs. 27. Note that each was following God's guidance, one the inspiration of the Spirit, and the other the letter of the law, and so both were led to the same spot; Simeon to have his long expectation realized, the parents of Jesus to receive this testimony.

Vs. 29. Lord, now lettest thou. Not a prayer as it is so often quoted, but a grateful recognition of a promise fulfilled. The emphasis is not upon the time of his departure, but upon its assured peacefulness.

Vs. 31. All people, properly all peoples; the next verse explains the expression.

Vs. 32. A light to lighten the Gentiles. That the gospel was for the Gentiles was no afterthought of Paul's. Simeon's conception was based upon abundant O. T. prophecy, and is most closely patterned upon Is. xlix. 6.

The glory.....of Israel. Disraeli, a Jew says: "The pupil of Moses may ask himself whether all the bruises of the house of David have done so much for the Jews as that Prince who was crucified on Calvary..... Has he not made their history the most famous in the world? Has not he hung up their laws in every temple? Has not he avenged the victims of Titus and conquered the Caesars? What successes did they anticipate from their Messiah? The wildest dreams of their rabbis have been far exceeded."

Vs. 34. The fall and rising again. Old hopes and expectations were to be disappointed that better hopes should be brought in. Like its Redeemer the nation must die that it may have a resurrection.

A sign that shall be spoken against. When Jesus refused to give His enemies a "sign" it was because He Himself was the sufficient sign. Matt. xii. 38-42. Whatever people think of other miracles, Jesus is Himself the great miracle whose wonder grows with the ages. But—now as then—it is spoken against. He must endure the contradiction of sinners, Heb. xii. 3.

Vs. 35. Thoughts.....be revealed. Jesus is the tombstone of humanity. Every one that is of the truth heareth His voice. John xviii. 37. Others love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. John iii. 19.

Vs. 36. Anna, the O. T., name Hannah; Phanuel, the O. T. name Penuel (or Peniel); Aser, the same as Asher.

Vs. 37. Four-score and four years, the length of her widow-hood, not her age. Eighty-four would not be described as a great, (i. e., an extraordinary) age (vs. 36.) Seven years a wife, and eighty-four years a widow, if we add the period of her virginity—say 14 to 17 years—her age was not less than 105 or 108 years. We recently laid the remains of a widow beside her husband who had been buried just fifty years before.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson and compare it with ours:

SUMMARY. [Mary and Joseph having gone up to Jerusalem from Bethlehem, when Jesus was forty days old, for her purification and his redemption as the first-born] an aged saint named Simeon to whom it had been revealed that he should see the Messiah in the flesh, recognizes Jesus as the Messiah, and giving grateful recognition of God's fulfilled promise, unfolds the mission of the Messiah to be the fountain of salvation to all nations—to lighten the Gentiles and to be the glory of Israel: to pull down the bad and build up the good; to suffer and and to be suffered with; to test and sift mankind. His testimony is confirmed by that of an aged and saintly woman, who continued to bear witness to all who were like-minded, that the Messiah had come.

Fifth Step. Study the topics suggested by the lesson in the light of God's Word.

1. The Mission of the Messiah.
   - To bring salvation, vs. 30; Is. lii. 7; Zech. ix. 9; Matt. i. 21.
   - To all peoples, vs. 31; Is. lii. 10; Tit. ii. 11.
   - To illumine the Gentiles, vs. 32; Is. ix. 1, 2 (compare Matt. iv. 15, 16); Is. lx. 3; John viii. 12; Eph. v. 8.
   - To glorify Israel, vs. 32; Is. lx. 1, 2; Rom. xi. 12-15.
   - To sift, test and renew, vss. 34, 35; Mal. iii. 2, 3; Matt. iii. 11, 12; x. 34-36; 2 Cor. x. 4, 5; v. 17.
   - A witness to the unwilling, vs. 34; Is. lxv. 2; John v. 39, 40.
2. The attitude of faith.
   - Waiting for the promise, vs. 25; Gen. xlix. 18.
   - With expectation of fulfilment, vs. 38; Acts xxvi. 6, 7.
   - With patience and perseverance, vs. 37; Jas. v. 7.
   - With present obedience and service, vss. 25, 27. 37; 1 John iii 3.
   - With fasting and prayer, vs. 37; Acts i. 14.
   - With prompt recognition of fulfilment, vss. 29, 30, 38; John i. 49.
   - With glad reception, vs. 28, 37; Luke viii. 40.

Sixth Step. A prayerful study of the second Bible Reading (immediately above) will perhaps be the best practical application of the lesson. At the same time, remembering the testing of Christ we should earnestly ask ourselves whether the gospel is to us a savour of life unto life or of death unto death.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

There is no connecting history except the few verses immediately preceeding. But the rites and their meaning there referred to should be carefully brought out. Then the class should be questioned until the story is accurately told and all difficulties cleared away. The Bible Readings should then be taken up; younger classes had best take only the second. The lesson of faith should be clinched by Shorter Catechism qu. 31 and 86.

74. What O. T. parallel do you find to Simeon's satisfaction in view of his departure?
75. How many prophetesses are mentioned in the Bible and who were they?
76. What O. T. parent pondered over divine revelations about a son?

Hear that noise! It reminds one of the roar of the sea. It comes from the Sabbath-school. Teachers are with their classes. They ask questions. There is so much noise that the voice must be raised. The scholar answers. Teacher cannot hear or the noise, and asks the scholar to speak a little louder. This adds to the trouble of hearing in the next class. Teachers and scholars speak in tones of increasing loudness, and so the confusion extends throughout the school. It has come so gradually that you were hardly conscious of the road until you stopped and listened. How can the confusion be diminished? By having each teacher and scholar make as little noise as possible. Begin with yourself.—Sunday-School World.

In his death about the last one of the old landmarks of the community has passed away, and the oldest member in Smyrna Presbyterian church has been transferred from the Church militant to the Church triumphant. In his death the community has lost an excellent and highly esteemed citizen; this esteem was evidenced in the large congregation that attended his burial.

He was a man of integrity and of unusual energy and industry—whatever his hand found to do, he did with his might.

He was a kind husband and a fond and indulgent father—he leaves behind a widow and several children who sadly miss him, but we have comfortable assurance that their loss is his eternal gain. He came to the grave in a full age; "like as a shock of corn cometh in his season".

Say Soes.

It is a well-known fact that with the same kind of food and the same quantities of it one man will fail to keep his horses in condition where another will thoroughly succeed.

"But evil is wrought by want of thought,
As well as want of heart."

By want of thought mothers allow daughters to become frail and puny. Over-study in girls induces uterine disorders and weaknesses, and blights their future happiness as wives and mothers. Joined to proper hygienic care, Dr Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a priceless remedy in such ailments, its value becoming even more apparent every year. Using it, the wan, debilitated school girl gains color, flesh and spirits, losing those deathly headaches, tormenting backaches, languor, dejection, and other symptoms of functional irregularities, and nervous debility. It never harms the most delicate girl.

FOR THE FAMILY.

A TAP AT THE DOOR

A hand tapped at my door, low down, low down:
I opened it and saw two eyes of brown,
Two lips of cherry red,
A little curly head,
A bonny, fairy sprite in dress of white
Who said, with lifted face, "Papa, good-night!"

She climbed upon my knee, and kneeling there,
Her meeting finger-tips,
Her pure, sweet baby lips,
Carried my soul with hers, half unaware,
Into some clearer and diviner air.

I tried to lift again, but all in vain,
Of scientific thought the subtle chain:
So small, so small,
My learning all;
Though I could call each star, and tell its place,
My child's "Our Father" bridged the gulf of space.

I sat with folded hands, at rest, at rest,
Turning this solemn thought within my breast:
How faith would fade
If God had made
No children in this world—no baby age—
Only the prudent man or thoughtful sage:

Only the woman wise: no little arms
To clasp around our neck: no baby charms,
No loving care,
No sinless prayer,
No thrill of lisping song, no pattering feet,
No infant heart against our heart to beat.

Then, if a tiny hand, low down, low down,
Tap at thy heart or door, ah! do not frown,
Bend low to meet
The little feet:
To clasp the clinging hand; the child will be Nearer to heaven than thee—nearer than thee.

A SUGGESTION FOR OUR BANDS OF KING'S DAUGHTERS.

Raising canary birds is one of the new things taken up by the King's Daughters of New York, who want to earn money for charitable purposes, without going conspicuously into the open fields of labor. The idea is said to have originated with Mrs. Frederick Vanderbilt, who belongs to a circle of King's Daughters in Newport, and who desired to assist one of her circle without in any way offering charity.

"Take this pair of canaries," she said, "and raise a little nest of them. Next summer I can sell for you at a good price." And the King's Daughter, so the story goes, not only raised a "nest of birds," but taught them to perform little tricks so well that when summer came they were trick birds ready to eat out of one's hand, or swing upon a broom splint, or come out of their cages and sing when bidden. They would even wear uniforms and chirp vigorously when told to "speak." These accomplished little canaries sold at such excellent prices that it encouraged the young trainer to try for another season's sale, with more birds and more accomplishments. And now far up town in New York there is a little "bird farm" owned by the King's Daughters. The farm is not very large—just one fair-sized square room—but it is filled with chirping families of songsters, and if all goes well many accomplished canary birds will be introduced into the families of New York swelldom next summer, for it has grown to be a positive fad among rich New Yorkers to own pet canaries. They go to a great deal of trouble about it, and whenever they hear of one very accomplished bird they want to add it to their collection, just as stamp collectors want new stamps, or autograph hunters try for a rare signature. It is reported that Miss Grace Dodge has fine canaries, so have the Gould children and the Vanderbilts. The Shepards-Vanderbilt-Stokes and Sloane cousins have whole windows filled with them, and carry their birds away for the summer, bringing them back to town again in winter. One of the prettiest canaries in the country belongs to little Ruth Cleveland, who has her pet hung in the nursery window of the white house. Canary Cleveland is a beautiful singer and such an active, ambitious little bird that the president's wife has had to shirr a piece of muslin to spread across the lower part of the cage to keep him from flirting the seeds far and wide. Another exquisite bird belongs to Chief Justice Fuller, of Washington, and still another has been purchased by Patti, who dearly loves birds. She will take her canary to her castle in Wales to be company for the famous Polly Patti, a bird of which every one has heard.

These are only a few hints as to the possibilities for making money by canary bird raising, and the suggestion is placed before the New Orleans organization of King's Daughters. Surely results have proven that it was a very bright idea of Mrs. Vanderbilt's when she asked a King's Daughter if she would not enjoy raising a few canaries for private sale, as an aid to her philanthropic work.—*N. Things Useful.

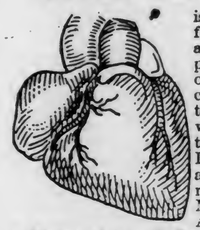
To drive away ants, borax mixed with Persian insect powder.

Ripe tomatoes will remove ink and other stains from white cloth, and also from the hands.

Rice Snow Balls.—Boil one pint of rice until done soft; put in small cups, and when perfectly cold place on a dish; make a boiled custard of one pint of milk, three eggs, half cup of sugar, one teaspoonful of cornstarch; flavor with lemon or vanilla. When cold, pour over the rice balls. This is a simple but nice dessert.



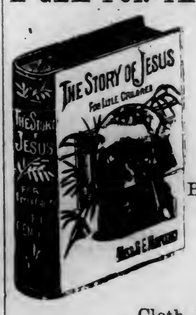
Jellied Veal.—Cover a knuckle of veal with water, add a small onion and a carrot, and let it boil until the meat is ready to fall off the bone. Take the meat and chop it fine, and return it to the liquor after it is strained; give it another boil, add a little cayenne, salt, the juice and grated rind of a lemon. Then pour into a form. Let it stand in a cool place till it jellies. This is a nice dish for lunch or tea.

Beauregard Eggs.—Take five eggs, one-half pint of milk, one tablespoonful corn-starch, five squares of toast, lump of butter size of a walnut, and salt and pepper to taste for ingredients, but first cover the eggs with boiling water and boil for twenty minutes. Take off the shells, chop the whites fine, and rub the yolks through a sieve. Do not mix them. Put the milk to boil. Rub the butter and cornstarch together and add to the boiling milk. Now add the whites, salt and pepper. Put the toast in a hot dish, cover it with a layer of white sauce, then a layer of the yolks, next the remainder of the whites and then the remainder of the yolks. Sprinkle the top with a little salt and pepper, stand in the oven for a minute or two and serve.

Cleanliness of the skin has a great effect on the assimilation of food. It has been proved that swine that are washed put on a fifth more flesh than those that are unwashed.

In case of fire a wet silk handkerchief tied without folding over the face is a complete security against suffocation by smoke; it permits free breathing, and at the same time excludes the smoke from the lungs.

THE HEART



is liable to great functional disturbance through sympathy. Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, often causes it to palpitate in a distressing way. Nervous Prostration, Debility and Impoverished Blood, also cause its too rapid pulsations. Many times, Spinal Affections, cause it to labor unduly. Sufferers from such Nervous Affections often imagine themselves the victims of organic heart disease.

ALL NERVOUS DISEASES, as Paralysis, Locomotor Ataxia, Epilepsy, or Fits, St. Vitus's Dance, Sleeplessness, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Melancholia and Kindred Ailments, are treated as a specialty, with great success, by the Staff of the Invalids' Hotel. THE CHRISTIAN'S SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal

Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem a most superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

MUD CAKES.

A Little Girl's Recipe.

I don't see why the big folks, all
Need to go to cooking school,
For it's easy enough to make a cake,
If you make it by this rule:

First, you must have an apron
That you're not afraid to hurt.
For in this recipe we use,
For flour, sifted dirt.

Then dig, with an iron spoon,
A hole in the cool, dark ground,
And put in dirt and water,
Stirring it round and round.

And then a handful of pebbles,
You'd best put into the dough,
What are these for? In this recipe,
Pebbles are raisins, you know.

And when you get it all thick enough
You make it into a cake,
Then put it on a nice, clean board
And set in the sun to bake.

Dear me! I'd most forgot to say,
You must sprinkle with sugar (nor sad),
And when they're done, no better cakes
Will be found in Babyland.

That's all! You see, to learn to cook
You don't need to make a fuss.
Though mamma says, when she comes to the door,
"Why, Bessie, child! What a muss!"

—Good Housekeeping.

Two Little Girls.

They were both pretty children with lovely blue eyes and luxuriant brown hair waving around fair faces. They were always dressed exactly alike and as they wore dainty gowns tastefully made, they attracted special attention wherever they went, for, you know a beautiful child, beautifully dressed, is an attractive object to look upon. Their names were Margie and Millie Drummond.

Miss Stone was spending a week at a quiet homelike hotel. The first evening she was there she saw a beautiful woman with a little girl on each side of her, enter the parlor. The lady looked pale and sad and was dressed in deep mourning. The little girls were dressed alike in short waisted blue china silks.

"What beautiful children!" said Miss Stone to a lady who sat near her.

"They are indeed," was the reply, "and one of them is lovely."

Miss Stone did not understand, but she had no time to ask what her friend meant, for the lady and her children took seats near by and were introduced to her. In a very little while, however, Miss Stone saw the tablet acted out before her eyes, viz., "One of them is lovely."

Mrs. Drummond remarked to her little girls:

"I must have left my handkerchief on the bureau. One of you run and get it, please."

"O, mamma, can't you do without it?" asked Millie, rather impatiently.

Before her mother had time to reply, Margie was half across the parlor floor on her way to the bureau for "mamma's handkerchief," which she soon brought with a smile upon her sweet face.

About ten minutes later thoughtful Margie noticed that the chair occupied by her mother was not exactly comfortable. Sometimes the lady put one hand behind her back as if the top of the chair hurt her. Margie went quickly across the parlor, where she saw a big easy chair and wheeled it over to her mother.

"There, mamma dear," she said, "you will like this chair better."

Mrs. Drummond thanked her daughter and the smile that she gave her fairly illumined for a moment her sad face.

Then the two little girls sat down in front of a table and began to read some magazines that laid there. They both seemed interested for a little while then Miss Stone heard Millie say:

"O, dear, I don't like this magazine; please let me take the one you've got, Margie; you've had it long enough."

Margie did as requested without a word. She glanced through the magazine that Millie had rejected with but very little interest, however, and finally closed it.

By this time Millie was enjoying a bright story.

A sweet-faced, but delicate little boy, leaning on crutches, approached the table, but seeing that Millie did not notice him, he went away as quietly as he had come. When Millie finished the story she handed the book back to her sister with the remark:

"You can read it now if you want to. That's a good story."

Presently Margie was deeply interested in the story.

The crippled boy, seeing Millie at leisure, came back.

"Please play 'Kan-eo-win-it,' with me, will you, Millie?"

"No," said the latter, shortly, "I don't want to; I think it's a stupid game."

The poor lonely little fellow, cut off from most of the pleasures of boyhood, looked at her pleadingly.

"I wish you would," he urged.

"Well, I won't," said Millie crossly.

Margie's attention was called off from the interesting story by her sister's voice, and she looked up just in time to see the face of the crippled boy flush with the pain of the blunt refusal. He was turning away, but her low, gentle voice detained him.

"Would you like me to play with you, Willie?" she asked.

"But you're reading," he said; "mamma said I shouldn't ask any one to play when they were engaged."

"Well, then," said Margie brightly, "I'll play without being asked. I can finish the story some other time."

Miss Stone saw a lovely picture soon afteward. Sitting opposite each other, playing a game, were the little cripple and the lovely young girl, the former's face all aglow with joy, and the latter's sweet with its beam of tender compassion.

As Miss Stone saw all these tableaux the first evening of her stay at the hotel, you can imagine many more that she saw before the week ended. She said, too, in heart as she thought of the beautiful-faced children:

"One of them is lovely, and the other is——."

What do you think the dash stands for?—Lutheran Evangelist.

Charley's Dam.

BY HELEN CHAUNCEY.

From the time that he came into the world Charley Hulburt was a "water baby." Given a basin of water, a tin can full of sand, and a few stones, he would amuse himself for hours making miniature dams and bridges. His mother called him her "little engineer" as she watched his persevering fingers.

So it happened that as he grew older she chose for their summer home a quiet village among the mountains, through which ran a shallow brook, that the proclivities of her boy might have full scope.

The stream was just back of their barn, dancing and rippling over the stones with a merry song of welcome to its playfellow; for Charley had taken to the water immediately after breakfast on the day following his arrival, and when his mother came to join him an hour later, she found him barelegged, with trousers rolled above his knees, paddling far down the bed of the brook.

"Hullo, mumsey!" was his shout when he saw her. "I've found a bully place for a dam. Come on in, and help me build it!"

Nothing loath, the young mother followed his example. Leaving shoes and stockings on the bank, she kilted up her skirts, and waded down to where he had begun to lap the foundations of the dam. Her stronger hands filled in the chinks with mud and sand, packing them firmly, while Charley brought the stones and placed them in position.

All day they worked like beavers, pausing only when the noon hour came to sit on the bank and eat their luncheon.

As the sun was setting, and they heard in the distance the lowing of the cows at milking-time, the last stone was laid, the last handful of dirt was mortared in. The two builders retired a little, to gaze proudly at their work, which looked solid as a wall of masonry.

"Isn't the brook mad, mumsey?" laughed the boy, as he watched the water chafe against the barrier. "You can't break it down, old fellow! When mumsey and I build, we build to stay."

That night the rains descended and the floods came. Mrs. Hulburt awoke very early in the morning to hear the rain pouring in torrents on the roof of the piazza. Going to the window, she saw that the village street was flooded, and on the surface of the water floated pieces of wood, hand-rails, and planks.

Into the adjoining room she flew, and, rousing her sleeping boy, she cried:

"Charley, Charley, get up! The footbridge is down, the street's afloat, and it's all the work of that horrid dam!"

Huddling on their clothes, they crept downstairs, wrapping their rubber coats around them as they went, and stopping only to take the long-handled spade and hoe from behind the kitchen door. A look in at the barn confirmed their fears. Poor Brindle, the old farm-horse, stood ankle deep in water, and his whinny of reproach seemed to ask, "Who dammed the brook up yesterday?" The ducks were swimming over the floor, but the hens still clung to their perches, and clucked to each other in dismay.

As the authors of the mischief came round the rear corner of the barn, they saw the brook dashing over the dam, a small cataract, and the meadows overflowed. Down the stream, pell-mell, helter-skelter, through water and mire and mud, they raced rather than ran, till they reached the scene of yesterday's labor. Balancing themselves on the edge of the bank, wielding shovel and hoe, they pushed with might and main until they had dislodged the firmly wedged stones, and an outlet was made for the angry waters. For an hour they worked till every vestige of the dam was destroyed.

The lesson of that night was one that Charley Hulburt never forgot. Forethought for others became the rule of his life. Often, in later years, when about to enter on any undertaking which promised good for himself, the memory of "that horrid dam" would come to him, and he would say once more the verse of warning that his mother wrote for his guidance at the time:

"Build strong, and build to stay,
But never build in such a way
That what you build can, any day,
Another's work in ruins lay,"

Equitable Life

DURHAM, N. C., Mar. 27, 1894.
Mr. W. J. RODDEY, Rock Hill, S. C.
Dear Sir:—When the settlement of my policy for $50,000 in the Equitable was first made, I expressed some dissatisfaction at the outcome, but since I have had more time to look into the matter, I am persuaded that I have had cheap insurance. I have always regarded the Equitable as one of the strongest insurance companies in this country, and am carrying at present a policy for $25,000 on my wife and one for $50,000 on my own life, and have had these policies in force for more than 10 years.
Yours, very truly,
J. S. CARR.

The Electropoise

The Electropoise is a little instrument weighing less than a pound, which when attached to the body causes the whole system to absorb oxygen—pure oxygen from the atmosphere. It introduces this potent curative agent—oxygen—into the remotest and most recondite parts. It purifies the blood. It vitalizes every organ. It makes war on disease by destroying its producing cause. It eliminates the morbid and noxious elements that act injuriously or that lower vitality

It neutralizes or expels all poisons, either of malaria, contagion, or from effects of powerful drugs. With the body plentifully supplied with oxygen and freely oxygenized blood, it is impossible for disease to exist, because the conditions that made it possible have been removed—burnt out.

It is harmless. As the Electropoise simply induces the absorption of oxygen, no injury can possibly result from its application:

Abandoned cases have been treated from all sections, and the results fully warrant the claim that "the Electropoise cures when all else has failed." Do not despair if you have tried physicians, specialists, change of scene and climate—everything, in the vain hope of cure, and are desperate. Remember the Electropoise has made its reputation by curing cases that were supposed to be "incurable," and pronounced by physicians as such.

Investigation courted. We solicit the closest investigation into the Electropoise—its workings—our methods—results that attend its use, etc. Especially do we ask physicians and scientists to investigate the matter. Thinking people of all classes will be interested in our book. Statesmen, jurists, clergymen, scientists, physicians and intelligent members of all classes of society use and endorse the Electropoise. In our book their certificates are given, together with other information about the Electropoise, its price, method of applying, ease of application, certainty of effect, absence of shock, or other sensation except increase of vigor, its total difference from the "electrical appliances" commonly known. This book mailed free to any interested applicant. Write for one and learn more of this remarkable home cure for disease without medicine. Electrolibration Co., Gould Building, Atlanta, Ga.

TRUST AND STAY.

The children of GOD have doubts and difficulties arising from the study of the Scriptures and the very many problems presented and questions arising thereby. There are difficult and sometimes perplexing passages which do not yield a meaning to us, or yield a meaning inconsistent with our philosophy or our view under some theological system. The difficulty is really with our theological system or our mistakes under it, or to our false philosophy or our misunderstanding or not understanding the passage at all. That does not remove the difficulty for we are ignorant of its cause. The darkness of doubt is dominant. In our desire to know both sides of a question we sometimes read books that are hypercritical and misleading. We sometimes hear the carping criticisms of conversation carried on by half-informed or ignorant enemies of the truth and we are face to face with supposed difficulties and plunged into darkness. Men of learning, without humility, exalting reason to a place above the authority of the Scriptures and searching the Scriptures with the clouded lantern of the intellect instead of the light of the HOLY SPIRIT, or befogging themselves in questions without value, run upon difficulties. Even devout souls have seasons of doubt and perplexity. The words of Mr. SPURGEON on Psalm xxxix. 1., are timely, here: "They should not hasten to repeat them, but should fight out their inward battle upon its own battle field. The foremost believers are exercised with unbelief, and it would be doing the devil's work with a vengeance if they were to publish abroad all their questionings and suspicions. If I have the fever myself there is no reason why I should communicate it to my neighbors. If any on board the vessel of my soul are diseased, I will put my heart in quarantine, and allow none to go on shore in the boat of speech till I have a clean bill of health." This is timely counsel as we have reason to know. But our purpose here is to show that intellectual difficulties exist and beget doubts which plunge our souls into darkness. Other sources of darkness we have suggested in a former article. Every reader may modify the statements according to experience. The weakening of faith or fainting of hope may be traced above all and certainly where there is any willful transgression of GOD'S law and want of respect to His Word and neglect of known duty. These, each and every one of these, must be sought out, marked, confessed and forgiven. Any sin indulged, cloaked and unconfessed will surely rest as a thick cloud between us and the face of our Heavenly FATHER and be darkness and no light to our souls.

What then? No matter what the source of doubt, difficulty and darkness the child of GOD has this message from the HEAVENLY FATHER: "Let Him trust in the name of the LORD." GOD'S name is all that whereby He maketh Himself known. It is the revelation of Himself in the lives of His saints. It is His wisdom, power and love. His name is: "The LORD, the LORD GOD, merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty." It will greatly aid our understanding and assist our faith to look for the names of GOD in the Bible and the conditions and circumstances which they signalize. Thus the words: "Thou GOD seest me," HAGAR uses, are really a name of GOD as He seeth and sympathizeth. The less familiar phrase of Exodus, xv: 27, is a name JEHOVAH ROPHEKA, "The LORD that healeth thee." It will richly reward us to study these and others which teach us how mighty and how merciful GOD is, that we may safely trust Him to sustain and strengthen, to guard and guide us. The figures chosen to represent GOD are very helpful. The LORD our Rock, with many lesser truths teaches the unchangeableness and the permanence of GOD'S support. God has taken to Himself and declared to us some name or representation that will suit every situation and need in our lives. What time we are afraid let us search and find the name for that need and trust in that name.

The prophet further exhorts to stay upon GOD, not merely in a general way as GOD, but specifically as our GOD. "Let him stay himself upon his GOD." GOD gives Himself, just as He is needed and all that any one can receive of Him to every one, in every time of need as His child. We must seek to have Him as our GOD and stay on Him. Fires of our own kindling in infidelity, hypocrisy, superstition, or of enthusiasm, and delight in creature comforts or the so-called supports of philosophy, are false fires that seem to shine, but only in miasmatic marches, and will lead us into dismal swamps and sluggish streams that drown men in perdition. They must be refused as helps while we stay upon our GOD, wait upon Him in prayer, and cast ourselves upon Him in faith until He give blessing of forgiveness of sin and His tender mercy from on high, until He restore unto us the joy of His salvation and upholding us with His free SPIRIT, put a new song into our mouths, even praise unto our GOD.

To stay on GOD is to lean on Him continually and entirely. In this even He is a jealous GOD, not dividing this privilege of sustaining His saints and guiding His perplexed ones and bringing them out of darkness into His marvellous light, the light of the knowledge of the glory of GOD in the face of JESUS CHRIST, the light of His favor and His peace.

A STEP IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION.

One action of the General Assembly, which has just come under our notice, and upon which we have seen no comments in the papers, seems to us to be of the greatest importance. It is the recommendation to the Theological Seminaries to adopt the six months session and the four-years course, instead of three sessions of eight months each as at present. This is the custom of the Scotch seminaries, and had we modelled after them instead of after secular institutions, we would have escaped the many problems that have vexed our educational work. The advantages of such a system are numerous:

1. It reduces to a minimum the problem of beneficiary education. With six months of work and only six months of study, students after their first session in the seminary can practically take care of themselves.

2. It will greatly promote the efficiency of our ministers when they are ready for regular work. Instead of eight months of vacation work—which is, the utmost attainable under the present system, they will have had eighteen. This will give them abundant opportunities to make most of their mistakes before they take a settled charge. At the same time the work that they do will seem to them more like real work; they will learn their own needs more; and they come to their studies with a zest and enthusiasm that will enable them to get almost as much good from the six months as from the eight; so that the last term will be almost clear gain. A man who comes to that last session—after eighteen months work in the ministry—is more than a mere "Seminarian;" he has passed into the dignity and earnestness of a minister, and that last term will be to him what it would be to some of us, who often long for the opportunity to get out of harness, and broaden and deepen foundations.

3. It will go far to solve the problem of our vacant churches. If our Presbyterial committees have at their command from 150 to 200 students for six months of the year, many churches that are now languishing can be revived, and there need be absolutely no churches vacant for more than six months, and the period during which they will be supplied is the best period of the whole year for work in our country churches.

4. Another great advantage will be to our Seminary Professors. They will it is true have no less teaching to do than now, for while it will take them four instead of three years to carry one class through, they will have four instead of three classes on hand at once. This will necessitate teaching more hours a day during the six months than they now do during the eight. But to a professional scholar a long vacation is of inestimable value. It gives the opportunity for research and authorship that is of absolute necessity to real advance in scholarship. It will give further opportunity for our Professors to come more into relation to the people, to visit our larger churches and our Institutes and Conventions, that a wider circle may reap the benefit of their abilities and attainments.

The only consideration of any seeming weight on the other side is the assertion that our students would not take the four years course, and that the result would merely be the shortening of the session. We do not for a moment believe it. If our Church cannot make a law and hold to it, where is our boasted claim to be a law-abiding people and a constitutional Church. The Methodists have no difficulty in keeping up a four years probation. Two points, however, may be noted relieving this difficulty to any who feel it. (1.) Many of our students teach for several years between their College and Seminary course. Some do it because they do not think it wise to enter the ministry under a certain age; others to secure the necessary means for getting through the Seminary. Under the proposed system, whichever their reason, they could leave off a year's teaching and so get into the ministry at the same age. (2.) It is not proposed to keep students four years as candidates. The proposed change in the matter of licensure dovetails exactly into this change. Candidates would be licensed at the end of their first term in the Seminary, the license valid for three years. Of these three years they would spend eighteen months in work and eighteen months in study, and at the end of their Seminary course they would be ready for ordination. Thus they would enter the full work of the ministry as early as they do now, as ordination is usually about a year after graduation.

This is the plan recommended by the Assembly. If the Presbyteries shall adopt the one part of the scheme, and the Boards of our Seminaries the other, we shall look for great advance in our Church.

HERE AND THERE.

IT IS NOW SETTLED THAT MR. GLADSTONE will not be a candidate for re-election by the Midlothian constituency, and so may be regard as having retired permanently from politics. The papers are now discussing the radical contrast between him and his successor in the premiership; not so much as to governmental ability, for unquestionably they are both astute politicians and neither is accounted as being seriously deficient in statesmanship.

BUT IN PRIVATE CHARACTER AND IN disposition there is a marked contrast. Mr. GLADSTONE is certainly a religious man and it would seem does not omit to present that consideration when it serves a good turn in politics—say in explaining why he adopts a line of policy, otherwise, not easily explicable. Lord ROSEBERRY on the contrary, and not to his disadvantage politically, it may be, in his conduct runs counter to generally accepted good morals, and sneers at those who would rebuke him, as being thoroughly inconsistent if not positively hypocritical. So it has been when the public has been shocked by ROSEBERRY'S jocketing propensities.

IN TEMPER IT MUST BE CONFESSED Lord ROSEBERRY shows to great advantage beside Mr. GLADSTONE. The former seems to be perfectly self-contained under raspings that would throw Mr. GLADSTONE into a frenzy of nervous excitement. This difference is largely due no doubt to the great disparity in age between the two statesmen, but however explained it exists and must be taken into account in comparing the two leaders.

THE STATE SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION meets this year in Durham. We give more extended notice elsewhere. We are glad to note the following from its statement of objects of organization: "The State Sunday-school Association makes no plea for union of schools or churches or creeds. It desires, particularly in its active ranks, the strongest champions of their respective creeds in the various evangelical denominations. And it simply seeks to have these sit down in council together for a fair look at the field as it actually is, to devise ways to carry the gospel to the neglected districts, to reach the million unsaved souls, particularly the youth of the State, to urge each other to co-operation in holding these councils or conventions in the interest of the great work, and to encourage all to go back to their own denominations and according to such ways as are approved by their respective churches, to reach out a longer and stronger arm until the fields actually cultivated shall touch each other, and there shall not lie between a "no man's land" where immortal souls are dying without Christ.

MANY OF OUR FRIENDS HAVE CONTRIBUTED from the "New England Primer" we thank them all. As promised we give JOHN ROGERS' Advice on our second page.

STOP!

BY REV. H. H. HAWES, D. D.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

"Stop what?" You will learn presently. We are told that, on one occasion, had Stonewall" Jackson sent for his mail on Sunday, he would have been summoned to the side of his wife, who was thought to be sick unto death. He persisted in keeping the day holy unto God. His reward came Monday morning, in a letter bearing tidings that his wife was no longer in danger. He had learned of her illness, and that Sunday was an anxious day. But had he sent to the postoffice he would have been called away from important army duties, and to take a long journey—a useless one, as events proved. Well, my Sunday-mail-getting brother, stop! Don't send, or go for your mail on Sunday. Why? Because of General Jackson's example? No; but because you need not do it; and, moreover, you cannot do it without mixing up your business with Sunday duties to the hurt of the latter, and your own soul. You are teaching yourself and others to attend to worldly business on Sunday. What do you want with your letters on Sunday? Are they not business letters—and don't you know it? Will they not keep? You cannot attend to the business before Monday. They will be just as safe in the postoffice, as in your pocket—perhaps safer. What is this Sunday mail-getting, any how? It is several things:

1. Distrust of God. You are not willing that He should watch over your worldly affairs while you wait upon Him on Sunday duties.

2. It is violation of His holy day just so far as you dare to make a business violation of it.

3. It is rivetting your thoughts to worldly business to such extent, that you are gradually stealing God's day away from Him.

4. It is training yourself, "little by little," it may be, but surely, to lose respect for God's day.

5. It is injuring your use of God's means of grace. In proportion as you allow your mind to dwell on the business matters, of which your letters treat, to that extent you unfit yourself for spiritual duty and culture.

6. It is teaching the world that people need not care much for what God says about keeping His day holy.

Keep on thinking, and you will find more of the same sort.

It is time for reform, in this matter. Hoot, and "pooh-pooh" if you will. But it is true! The conduct of God's professed people is responsible for the very rapidly increasing tendency, in our land, to ignore Sunday. Business is pushing it out of the way; and the hands of many who profess to be God's servants, are pushing about as bad as any other hands. If you get out your letters on Sunday, it is because you want to attend to your business on Sunday; and because you are forgetting three special things:

1. Your obligation to honor God.

2. Attention to your soul.

3. The influence of your example on others.

Now read three passages in your Bible, (or have you learned to neglect that, also?). Matt. v. 13–16. Jno. xiv: 15; xv: 14. But perhaps you are too busy or indifferent to do this. Let me save you time, by putting them here:

Matt. v: 13–16. "Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? It is, henceforth, good for nothing but to be cast out and to be trodden under foot of men. Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set upon an hill cannot be hid; neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick, and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine that men may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven." Jno. xiv: 14. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Jno. xv: 14. "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I have commanded you."

Upon which may be remarked:

5. Don't keep your "salt" sewed up in a sack. Use it!

2. Give the world reason to respect your religion, even if it be at the expense of being called "cranky."

3. Turn over your "bushel," and see if you have forgotten and left your light under that, if you have any at all.

4. You don't glorify your Father in heaven, by showing want of respect for His commandments, however small. Consider, therefore! Is it not time to "stop?" Those who "make" by trying to outwit God, will certainly lose. The proof is seen often. Several cases have recently come to knowledge. Don't try it! Property so gained, will be the sure forerunner of loss! "Stop!"

REV. JOHN ROGERS' ADVICE.

Some say before his death, he (Rogers) wrote the following advice to his children:

Give ear, my children, to my word,
Whom God hath dearly bought;
Lay up his laws within your heart,
And print them in your thought.
I leave you here a little book,
For you to look upon,
That you may see your father's face,
When he is dead and gone;
Woe for the hope of heavenly things.
While he did here remain,
Gave over all his golden years
To prison and to pain—
Where I, amongst my iron bands,
Enclosed in the dark
Not many days before my death,
Compos'd for you this work.
And for example to your youth,
To whom I wish all good,
I leave you here God's perfect truth,
And seal it with my blood.

To you my heirs of earthly things,
Whom I do leave behind,
That you may read and understand
And keep it in your mind;
That as you have been heirs of that
Which once will wear away,
You may also possess that part
Which never will decay—
Keep always God before your eyes
With all your whole intent:
Commit no sin in any wise
But keep his commandment.
Abhor that arrant whore of Rome
And all her blasphemies;
And drink not of her cursed cup—
Obey not her decrees.
Give honor to your mother dear,
Remember well her pain,
And recompense her, in her age,
With the like love again;
Be always ready for her help,
And let her not decay.
Remember well your father, all,
Who should have been your stay.

Give of your portion to the poor,
As riches do arise;
And from the needy, naked soul,
Turn not away your eyes
For he who doth not hear the cry
Of those who stood in need,
Shall cry himself, and not be heard,
When he does hope to speed.
If God hath given you increase,
And blessed well your store
Remember you are put in trust,
And should relieve the poor
Beware of foul and filthy lusts—
Let such things have no place;
Keep clean your vessels in the Lord,
That he may you embrace.
You are the temple of the Lord;
For you are daily bought.
And they who defile the same,
Will surely come to nought;
Be never proud, by any means;
Build not your house too high;
But always have before your eyes,
That you are born to die.

Defraud not him who hired is,
Your labor to sustain;
But pay him well, without delay,
His wages for his pain.
And as you would that other men
Towards you should proceed,
Do you the same to them again,
When they do stand in need.
Impart your portion to the poor.
In money and in meat.
And send the feeble, fainting soul,
Of that which you do eat.
Ask counsel always of the wise,
Give ear unto the end;
And ne'er refuse the sweet rebuke,
Of him who is your friend.
Be always thankful to the Lord,
With prayer and with praise,
Begging of him to bless your work,
And to direct your ways.
Seek first, I say the living God,
And always him adore.
And then be sure that he will bless
Your basket and your store.

And I beseech Almighty God
Replenish you with grace,
That I may meet you in the heav'ns
And see you face to face.
And though the fire my body burn
Contrary to my kind,
That I cannot enjoy your love
According to my mind—
Yet I do hope, that when the heav'ns
Shall vanish like a scroll,
I shall see you in perfect shape,
In body and in soul.
And that I may enjoy your love,
And you enjoy the land,
I do beseech the living Lord
To hold you in his hand
Though here my body be adjudg'd,
In flaming fire to fry,
My soul, I trust, will straight ascend
To dwell with God on high.
What tho' this carcass smart awhile?
What tho' the life decay?
My soul, I hope, will be with God
And live with him for aye.

I know I am a sinner born,
From the original,
And hat I do deserve to die
By my forefather's fall;
But by my Saviour's precious blood,
Which on the cross was spilt,
Who freely offered up his life,
To save our souls from guilt—
I hope redemption I shall have,
And all who in him trust,
When I shall see him face to face
And live among the just
Why then should I fear death's grim look,
Since Christ for me did die?
For King and Caesar, rich and poor,
The form of death must try.
When I am chained to the stake,
And faggots gird me round,
Then pray the Lord, my soul in heav'n,
May be with glory crown'd.
Come, welcome death, the end of fears,
I am prepar'd to die;
These earthly flames will send my soul
Up to the Lord on high.

Farewell my children, to the world,
Where you must yet remain;
The Lord of hosts be your defence—
Till we do meet again.
Farewell, my true and loving wife—
My children and my friends;
I hope in heav'n to see you all
When all things have their ends.
If you go on to serve the Lord,
As you have now begun,
You shall walk safely all your days
Until your life be done.
God grant you so do end your days,
As he shall think it best,
That I may meet you in the heav'ns
Where I do hope to rest.

POPULAR TALKS ON LAW.

The Right of Petitioning.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE.

(Concluded.)

When our English ancestors landed on the shores of the new world they brought with them the letter and the spirit of the laws of their native land, and from the first the right of petitioning was recognized and frequently put to practical use.

The first amendment to the constitution of the United States declares that Congress shall make no law abridging the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances. The case of the United States vs. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542, declares that two rights are protected by this provision; the right of the people to assemble themselves together, and the right of petition; but these two rights are protected as against Federal action only. By the word "people" here is meant not only those who have a share in the government, but the whole people, including those who are not electors. Not only the religious, social and industrial value of the right was in view in adopting the amendment, but its political value, Judge Cooley says, was no doubt principally in view. Further Judge Cooley says, special meetings and industrial meetings are seldom likely to be disturbed by the authorities except when they are believed to contemplate public disorder and are in open defiance of the law; but there must be an actual breach of the law before they can be intermeddled with. Non-electors may meet for petition or remonstrance, or to express their sense of wrong at being excluded from political privileges, and to demand a right to participate with others. A demand for equality of political privileges by a disfranchised class persistently made and pressed has often made itself heard, and the Constitution of the land has been altered in response to it. Statutes have been enacted, modified or repealed in deference to the appeals of those who are not allowed to vote; and perhaps the right of assembly on their part is more important to the State than the same right on the part of those who may make themselves heard through their direct participation in the government. The exercise of the right of assembly was, and still is, subject to reasonable regulation by law. The English parliament has been compelled to interpose strict regulations when a great tumultuous body of people threatened to appear at its doors to present a demand for change in the law.

The right to petition is not co-extentive with the right to assemble, for in its nature it can have no place in merely social affairs, though it has a limited range in religious and industrial organizations. Petition is for the redress or prevention of grievances, and is addressed to some person or body having in respect to the matter in hand superior authority. It applies to all recommendations to office, or public position, or privilege, as well as to remonstrances against them, and to appeals of every sort and for every purpose, made to the judgment, discretion or favor of the person or body having authority in the premises. Judge Cooley says, a petition is nevertheless merely a privileged publication, and the right to be heard by means of it may be so abused as to take away the privilege. One must not resort to it for the purpose of visiting his malice upon others through the publication of false charges; but when the action is proper for petition good motives in presenting it will be presumed. The petition must be for something within the authority of the person, or body, addressed, to grant, or must in good faith be supposed to be. It is not to be supposed that the amendment to the constitution originally conferred this right. The right existed prior to and at the adoption of the constitution. The amendment guaranteed the continuance of the right against congressional interference. In the case of the United States vs. Cruikshank, above referred to, it is further stated that the very idea of a government republican in form implies that right, and an invasion of it presents a case within the sovereignty of the United States.

There can then be no question but that upon a proper occasion and in a proper, manner, the people, whether voters, or not, have the right to peaceably assemble and petition Congress for the redress of grievances either actually existing or in good faith believed to exist, and which Congress has the power, or in good faith is supposed to have the power, to remedy. The moment, however, that the petitioning body steps beyond the bounds of its right to peaceably present its petition, either by threats of violence or show of force for the purpose of intimidation, or by the actual use of force, or in the carrying out of its purpose, disobeys or disregards the law of the land, that moment may the petitioning body be looked upon as forfeiting its right and liable to apprehension and punishment. The right of petitioning, although a fundamental right, and one dear to the people, is one to be enjoyed subject to restrictions just as are all other elementary and fundamental rights of the individual.

Walking with God.

Very little does the Bible say about Enoch; but what little is said means a vast deal. In a terse way it is said that he "walked with God." It does not say that he walked behind God, nor that he walked ahead of Him; but he just walked with Him. This, we take it, means that Enoch kept even step with God, side by side with Him, going neither faster nor slower than God did. This gave that splendid saint all of the blessed advantages which it is possible for any human being to receive in a companionship with God. It was thus that Enoch was constantly near God. He could not be any nearer. He was so near that he could not only hear God talk, but also every gentle whisper. In whispering speech he could make known his requests to God. What sweet and delicate communings they must have had! Let us remember that if we want to know much of God we must walk close by His side, and have our ears so sensitive that we shall hear every word that He says, and let Him do the most of the talking. It becomes ignorance to be very modest while in the august presence of infinite wisdom. Our walking with God will be profitable in proportion to our capacity to listen reverently and teachably to all his utterances.—Baptist Courier.

The Fountain With the Cup.

We find in a contemporary an account of a certain public benefactor who placed a fountain by the wayside and hung a cup just above the water by a little chain. He was told sometime afterwards that a great art critic had found much fault with the design, both of the fountain and the cup. He smiled, and said that he was not disturbed by the criticisms, but inquired rather anxiously whether many persons drank at it. He was told that thousands of poor people—men, women and children—slaked their thirst there. He smiled again and said:

"Well, that is all I care for and I hope the critic himself may one day fill the cup and be refreshed."

The Bible is the fountain with the cup. Just now there are many critics,

Sometimes we fear that confidence may be shaken and the use of it slacken. But let us be sure of this, that the only question with the munificent designer is: "Do many persons drink at it?" If they do he will be satisfied—and so may we be, too.—St. Louis Republic.

The Standard to Follow.

Men desire some guide for their conduct, some teacher for their faith. No such guide, or leader, has been given to us. We are to search out the truth for ourselves. If we will use our faculties, in the way in which they are designed to be used, we may discover with sufficient accuracy what we need to do in reference to the various demands made upon us in the course of our lives. We are sometimes in doubt, compassed with low-hanging clouds and pressed down to earth with heavy burdens. Yet we may always find the pathway of rectitude.

There is nothing to oblige us to find, or to walk in the true way, but there is a voice low, but clear commanding us in imperative tones to take our course along the strait and narrow way. That road is peculiar and differs from all others. If we desire it we may easily see the marks of distinction. The power of the intellect by which we find this out is the moral faculty, the conscience, by which we perceive through a direct mental exercise the qualities of actions, whether they are right or wrong. Thus we always have light enough to determine our course when our way is darkest, In all important matters, near enough for all practical purposes, we may see the right way and choose it before all other crooked and perverse courses. It is the eye of the mind by which moral intelligence comes to us with its light to warn and instruct us. We cannot say we knew not the way, for we were so made as to be enabled to exercise this power and behold with a degree of clearness the stretched out line that was to be followed by us. Our Lord and Creator will never require of us that we possess and use more knowledge than can be gained from this source. He demands nothing beyond the range of our abilities, but does require of us the exercise of these, and that we do not trust to anything else, that we be convinced in our own mind before yielding to any human authority. No other man's personality can become ours. No other man's eyes can become ours, but if we are to see, it must be through our own organs of vision.—Religious Herald.

How.

How may I become sure of my election? writes one in great anxiety of mind. We do not see that you need to give yourself trouble on that point, for the mysteries of the divine purpose are with God. This is enough for you: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "Believe on the Lord Jesus and thou shalt be saved." Do you believe? Then why doubt or fear? God will keep you unto eternal life—United Presbyterian.

The Pastor's Work.

A pastor's work is never done. There is always more work in the average pastorate than any man can do well. Much must of necessity be left undone. The membership can do much to supplement the pastor's labors. They can visit the sick, the poor, the afflicted, and pray with them, quite as well as the pastor. They can look after absentees and build up the prayer-meeting. Thoughtful people can find a thousand ways in which to help their pastor in order that he may spend his precious time largely in his study, preparing the divine message for the people.—Herald and Presbyter.

REMINISCENCES, FAYETTEVILLE CHURCH.

PROVIDENTIAL CRICUMSTANCES.

A violent cold was the instrumental cause of my becoming the 12th pastor of Fayetteville church. Having received, while at the Theological Seminary, an invitation to Greensboro, Ala., and preferring to begin my work in a newly settled part of the country, I purchased a horse, with all the appurtenances for traveling. But, when I reached Columbia, Dr. Witherspoon told me, that Judge Potter had written an urgent request for me to visit Fayetteville. The Professors in the Seminary united with him, in urging me to comply. As I shrank from the thought of taking charge of such an old, large church, over which so many eminent men had presided, Dr. Jones said to me, "It is good for a man to bear the yoke in his youth." I finally yielded. But as I had issued a circular to the Alumni of our Seminary to meet during the sessions of the Synod of South Carolina and Georgia, at Augusta, for the purpose of forming an Alumni Association, I left my horse in Columbia, and took the stage for Fayetteville, so that I might return within a week. On that trip, having to travel all night in an open coach, I contracted a very severe cold. On the morning of the Lord's Day, I read a sermon, with difficulty. In the evening, I used no manuscript and preached with less difficulty. I was too sick, on the two following days to venture a trip by stage, I remained in F. and preached on the two succeeding Lord's Days. The Session invited me to become their Stated Supply for six months. I thanked them for the compliment, but declined their invitation saying, that I perfectly agreed with them, that a novice, like myself was not suitable to become the pastor of their church. I was really glad of this loophole for escape, and left F. But a unanimous call for my services overtook me in South Carolina, and though put into a quandary by it, feeling that I was "not my own," I accepted it. That "cold" changed the whole course of my life.

I have always been a strong believer in the doctrine of a special providence. Here is an illustration. On a certain Monday afternoon, I visited Elder Miller. As I passed through the sitting room of his hotel, I noticed a man sitting by the fire. When I went into Mr. Miller's room, and had exchanged salutations with him and his wife, I asked who the man was that I had just seen. "A stranger" was the response. "Well" said I "that man is not fit to be in your house." "Why? Do you know him?" "I do not," was my answer, but villain is written on his face." The next afternoon, I was driving with my young wife towards Haymount, and she said to me: "You had better not be showing off that $200 horse of yours, some body may steal him." He was stolen that night. I followed the tracks of the thief, until Saturday, p. m., when I lost them. At the house, at which I was accommodated, I was told, that their would be no preaching on the Lord's Day, but, that there would be a prayer-meeting at a Baptist church, seven miles off. I found my way to the place. While loosing the horse from the sulky, two men approached me, and asked, if I was a preacher. I told who I was, and how I happened to be there. At their request, I conducted the services. Presuming, that the congregation was composed, chiefly, of members of the church, I chose for a text: "Take up the stumbling blocks out of the way of my people." I was greatly surprised at the manifestation of strong emotion. At the close of the services, I was requested to preach in the evening at a large house in the neighborhood. A Methodist brother invited me to go home with him. On the way, he asked, if I had noticed the feeling in the congregation, I responded, that I had; but did not know what to make of it. "Well," said he, "if you had known that church, as I have, for ten years, you could not have timed your sermon better. The members of that church have been at sword's points with one another all that time, and they will think that God sent you, here as a special messenger to rebuke them for their sins." At night, the house was crammed, I preached to the impenitent. As sobs greeting my ears, while preaching, I said at the close of my sermon: "If any of you are anxious about your souls, and would like special prayer to be offered for you, please kneel at your seats. A dozen or more knelt. Six months afterwards, a man from that neighborhood accosted me on Main Street, and told me, that on their next conference day, after I had preached at the Baptist church, the members, talked about my sermon; said, that God had sent me there to rebuke their sins; confessed their faults to one another; agreed to let bygones be bygones; and from that day on to live like brothers. Seven of those who knelt for prayer at night, made profession of their faith in Christ, two months afterwards. That thief was the instrumental cause of my healing a breach in a Baptist church, and of leading seven precious souls to Christ. Was this accidental? My horse having been recognized by the keeper of the hotel in Lancaster, S. C., where I usually stopped, on my trips to Chester, the thief was sent back to North Carolina and flogged. The thief was the man, that I had seen at Mr. Miller's.

A deeply affecting case occurs to me—a marriage the occasion. Elder Leete's second daughter was a lovely girl, of delicate constitution but not pious. Old Dr. Robinson visited her and urged her not to attend the wedding of her friend, but, if she did, by no means to wear the light wedding costume. At noon of the appointed day, the wind began to blow strongly from the North. At 6 p. m., it was freezing. At 10 p. m., on my way to my quarters, my ears were well nigh frostbitten. The dear girl had not heeded the Doctor's warning. On the day following she was confined to her bed. She lingered for months, a great sufferer, with hopeless consumption. But her sufferings were sanctified to her. She never murmered at her lot. Though in agony at times, she was patient and resigned. Two weeks before her death, the Session, with several of the members of the church, who had just partaken of the Lord's Supper, assembled at Mr. Leete's house where I administered the ordinance, at the dear girl's request. The light of Heaven seemed to rest on her face, indicating the peace, that reigned within. In token of remembrance, she gave me her beautiful Griesbach's Greek Testament. Only a year after that marriage, I followed her lifeless body to the grave.

When most beloved; when needed most,
She fell; but fell to rise and reign.

A Thanksgiving Occasion:—Last Sunday, June 24th, the morning service at the First Presbyterian church, was made an occaaion of special thanksgiving upon the securing subscriptions for the prompt and full payment of a debt of $2,100 contracted about two years ago in building the Second Presbyterian church, and also in improving the property of the First church. The pastor, Rev. R. E. Caldwell, selected as the basis of his discourse, the remarkable thanksgiving of David and his people at the abundant and overflowing gifts of the nation of gold, silver, brass and precious stones for the house of God as recorded in 1 Chron. 29th chapter. He took for his text the 9th verse. "Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly, because with perfect heart, they offered willingly to the Lord; and David, the king, also rejoiced with great joy."

The speaker especially recognized the grace of God in putting into the hearts of the people in these trying times of business depression to rally with such unanimity and cheerfulness to the needs of the Lord's cause. The remarks of the pastor were exceedingly appropriate and encouraging to the flock. While cautioning against any spirit of pride, he urged that this same generosity and zeal should not abate, but become a permanent characteristic of their hearts—for, after all, it was but a return to the Giver of all things, that which he had bestowed.

Rev. T. R. Sampson, D. D.: Made us a nice visit at Amity and Newell on the 27th and 28th of this month. He presented the cause of Foreign Missions to our people in his interesting and impressive way, and I hope has done good work for his Lord.

The Chinese Mission, New Orleans:—The Southwestern Presbyterian says: An interesting event took place at this Mission on the evening of Saturday, the 23d inst. It was the marriage, of which announcement is made elsewhere, of Jung Gang Tune, the secretary of the school, to Dong Mai Lai, a young Chinese lady, who has recently come from San Francisco. The groom is well known to all who are acquainted with the Mission and its work, and possesses the confidence and esteem of those who are engaged in that work, and have the best opportunities of forming a correct judgment. He is one of oldest scholars in the Mission, and has been for several years an earnest and consistent Christian. After much correspondence, and as the result of a trip of Mrs. Radford to San Francisco, on this matter, the bride arrived with Mrs. Radford in New Orleans on Saturday last; and the same evening the marriage was consummated, everything passing off to the satisfaction of all concerned. The bride is a young woman of pleasing appearance and manners, speaks English very well, is an intelligent Christian, and has made a most favorable impression on all who have met her. On Monday evening, a most enjoyable reception was held at the Mission, when many friends met the happy couple, and gave expression to their good wishes. It is hoped that this is to be the beginning of Christian homes and Christian families among this people in our city. If so, it will be a decided step forward in our mission work on their behalf.

HYMN 335 IN LAUDES DOMINI.

Brightest and best of the sons of the morning!
Dawn on our darkness and lend us thine aid;
Star of the East, the horizon adorning,
Guide where our infant Redeemer is laid.

Cold on his cradle the dew-drops are shining;
Low lies his head with the beasts of the stall:
Angels adore him, in slumber reclining,
Maker, and Monarch, and Saviour of all!

Say shall we yield him, in costly devotion,
Odors of Edom, and offerings divine?
Gems of the mountains, and pearls of the ocean,
Myrrh from the forest, or gold from the mine?

Vainly we offer each ample oblation,
Vainly with gold would his favor secure:
Richer, by far, is the heart's adoration;
Dearer to God are the prayers of the poor.

Brightest and best of the sons of the morning!
Dawn on our darkness and lend us thine aid;
Star of the East, the horizon adorning,
Guide where our infant Redeemer is laid.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., June 27th, 1894.

The first anniversary of the Anti-Saloon League of the District of Columbia was celebrated by a public meeting held this week. Among the speakers were Mr. John N. Stearns, of New York, Secretary of the National Temperance Society; Rev. James Yeames, of Boston, who was chaplain of the juvenile templar institute; Mrs. T. B. Knapp, superintendent of the Juvenile Templars in Michigan, and Rev. Luther B. Wilson, president of the league. The annual report shows that the league is making progress in uniting all churches and temperance organizations under its banner. Already it has upon its rolls representatives of thirty-five churches, the Good Templars, Rechabites, Sons of Jonadab, Sons of Temperance, W. C. T. U., The Father Matthew Total Abstinence Society, The Newman Loyal Temperance Legion of the Congregational Church, and the Central Union Mission. The league has done good work by compelling saloon keepers to comply with at least the outward forms of law before they can have licenses issued to them.

In the course of a sermon appealing for funds for the missionary work in Cuba Rev. Arthur C. Mellen, who has lately returned from the island, made a statement that will doubtless be as new to your readers as it was to me. He said that in all the 1,500,000 inhabitants of the island there was not a single descendant of the Cuban race, the Spanish enslavement having resulted in destroying an entire race of people. He spoke of the large number of Bibles that have been sold in Cuba since 1882, when a certain degree of religious toleration was established, and expressed the belief that grand results would follow the sending of young and enthusiastic missionaries to work among the benighted beings, who are neglected by the State-paid priests, who openly countenance Sunday bull-fights and other heathen amusements, and many of whom lead immoral lives.

It is beginning to look very doubtful as to whether the Senate will take up the bill for the admission of Utah as a State, at the present session. The bill has passed the House of Representatives and, although there was at first considerable opposition to it in the Senate Committee on Territories, an informal agreement was sometime ago reached that it should be favorably reported to the Senate with some amendments. But just as soon as the tariff bill is passed the Senate will have to take up the regular appropriation bills, not one of which has yet been passed by that body, and there will hardly be time to take up the Utah bill, unless it could be passed without opposition, and that is not probable.

Walter! Beefsteak, Ham and Eggs for One.

"God gave us meat, but the devil sent us cooks," is a trite saying. From bad cooking, fast eating and overeating, comes a whole train of diseases—indigestion, dyspepsia, biliousness, catarrh of the stomach, headache, dizziness, and the like. God also gave us a brainy man, who compounded the "Golden Medical Discovery," a corrective of all the ills resulting from overeating and bad blood. Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, has furnished in the "Discovery," a great desideratum in America, where everybody are in such a hurry to make money, they have no time to eat, and scarcely any time to live. It invigorates the liver, cleanses the blood and tones up the system.

Delicate diseases of either sex, however induced, speedily and permanently cured. Book of particulars 10 cents in stamps, mailed sealed in plain envelope. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

IN MEMORIAM OF ELDER JAS. W. REID.

In Lowell, Gaston county, N. C., at the home of his son-in-law, Dr. Frank P. Robinson, on the 15th of May, 1894, this faithful servant was called to his reward.

He was the last member of the original family of Wm. and Nancy Reid. These parents like just Simeon were devout, pious Presbyterians. Young Reid from parental instructions imbibed parental traits. At the age of 16 he accepted Christ as his Saviour and joined New Hope church. With consistency he adorned the life of a private member for 15 years, at which time he was elected and duly installed an elder. This shows the esteem of this brother, for it was not the usage of the church to lay hands on one so young.

The life of this patriarch in the flesh was 77 years, 10 months and 20 days. Sixty-two of these, fifteen as a private and forty-seven as an officer were spent in the Master's service. What a recompense of reward to the departed—what a stimulating example to the young—what a heritage to the church, and what a precious legacy to the sorrowing ones. Obadiah-like "he served the Lord from his youth." From youth to hoary age, it was his will his Master's calling to fulfill."

With David, he could say, "O Lord, thou art my trust from youth.

Elder Reid was a Bible student, hence his mind was stored with Bible truth; he had a clear conception of the plan of salvation, and he was well grounded in the standards of the Church; so you see how these qualifications would fit him for the office of elder, an office to him not a sinecure, but of honor, responsibility and usefulness. Moreover he was a man of prayer—prayer was his vital and death-bed air. Fidelity in all things was a strong point in his solid, self-willed (though sanctified by grace) character. To show this take one item: He did not miss a business meeting of the session for forty-two years, and was present at the reception of every member (500) during these years. How few can equal this noble record. If all were saved to whom he gave the right hand of welcome here below, what a happy greeting and hearty welcome awaited him on the other shore. For many years he was clerk of the session, and his book shows the accuracy of the man. As a superintendent of the Sunday-school, he was in this, as in all his Christian duties, faithful. As a counsellor he was wise and conservative, liberal and progressive. To the poor and widow he was a helper, and to the fatherless and despondent a wise consellor As a husband he was kind and sympathetic, and as a father firm yet tender and gentle. His household as many servants of the gospel can testify was well ordered—husband and wife loving each other and not provoking their children to wrath, and the children giving them all due honor.

A man possessing the noble character of the deceased we might well expect to be in esteem by his countrymen, so he was. Twice when party lines were well drawn he represented them in the Legislature, and his efficiency was such, and the confidence of the people in his ability and integrity was so great that we have understood had he been willing he could have gone a third term. Of his citizen life this is the verdict—faith. Two years before his death, he living in the bounds of Lowell church an offshoot of New Hope, removed his membership to the former. This to him was sad, but it was a sense of duty, and with him that was the end.

Mr. Reid was a man of fine personal appearance, an appearance indicative of his character. Above many of his fellowmen for the major part of life he enjoyed good health, scarcely knowing above a headache pain, but the Lord loved him and in the two years preceding his death, in the form of a cancer he chastened him sore, but he was patient and resigned. In him patience had her perfect work.

Taking the man as a husband, father, Christian and a citizen we think this truth: A prince and great man hath fallen in Israel. As the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance, so I as an heirloom for the family write the above.

R. A. MILLER.

Near Concord, N. C., June 21st, 1894, Mrs. ELIZABETH L. McLELLAND, widow of the late W. C. McLelland and daughter of Wm. Morrison, Sr., in the 78th year of age. For many years she was growing weaker with some nervous affection. Frequently her suffering was so great that her mind would be overcome. She was a firm believer in the blessed Master. Before the infirmities of age came upon her, she was kind to the sick and the poor. She was very active in caring for all her neighbors who needed assistance. She was of a retiring disposition. Four children out of ten are left to realize that they are motherless. "Be ye also ready."

PASTOR.

Columbia College for Women.

The commencement exercises of this well known Presbyterian institution, of which Dr. W. R. Atkinson is president, were held the first week in June. Rev. Dr. McConnell, pastor of the Greenville, S.C., church preached the Baccalureate sermon and delivered the annual address the following night. The sermon was remarkably fine in thought and expression and well suited to the occasion, the subject, Woman's Service of Love; the text, Mary anointing her Lord for His burial. The address was equally fitted to the occasion the subject being the Wrongs of Woman, instead of the hackneyed Woman's Rights. They were wrongs however, to be corrected, by woman herself.

Two young ladies received the diploma of a full graduate, Miss Fannie G. McAden, of Charlotte, N. C., carrying off the first honor, and nineteen were awarded certificates for the completion of partial courses in several, but not all of the "schools" in the collegiate department. The standard of scholarship is very high and bona fide, the requirements of which are rigidly exacted.

During the past year concerts and recitals were given by the College for Women, both by its own students and also by distinguished artists, such as Scharwenka, Burmeister and others, that warrant the statement that few colleges offer such advantages for musical culture as this college of which Presbyterians are so proud.

The next sessfon, with increased advantages, will open September 19th.

The Best Men Wanted.

"Yes, we want the strongest and best men among the readers of your paper to represent us in their respective localities, either devoting all or any part of their time to our business. Men and women who stand well are offered exceptional opportunities for profitable work." That is what B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., say in reference to their advertisement.

STATE CONVENTION.

State Sunday School Workers to Meet in Durham August.

The thirteenth annual convention of the North Carolina State Sunday-school association will be held in Durham, August 21, 22 and 23d next. Bishop W. W. Duncan, of the M. E. Church, South, will deliver the opening address Tuesday night. International field superintendent Mr. William Reynolds, will be present at all the sessions. His valuable instructions, helpful suggestions and personal enthusiasm will give a great uplift to the Sunday-school work of our State, if we all do our duty in the way of attendance. It is expected that either Professor H. M. Hamill or some other well-known Normal Institute conductor will attend. A primary worker of national reputation will conduct conferences upon primary class methods. Several of the best Sunday-school workers in the State will take part in the exercises and work of the convention. Entertainment will be provided for all the delegates. Reduced railroad rates will be secured over all transportation lines. Many county and township Sunday-school conventions are being held in different portions of the State and there has been considerable advancement in Sunday-school methods and interest in the work during the past year. These township, county and State conventions are proving to be very helpful to the workers who attend them, and through them the schools of the State are greatly stimulated and benefitted. It is confidently expected that the approaching State convention will be the best one ever held in the State.

WHAT THEY SAY.

Philadelphia Presbyterian:

Love the Church, not merely the favorite pastor. Confess your faith in Christ, because it is right and will honor your Master, not because the minister wants you to do so. Be faithful to Christ and His cause, not merely while the minister of your choice and attachment preaches and works, but because they are dearer to you, and more needful to others, than any preacher however able and acceptable. Stand by God's ordinances no matter by whom administered, and be truest to them when the necessity for fidelity and activity is greatest.

Herald and Presbyter:

Every aggressive pastor will have enemies who will oppose him. Satan, is never so ill at ease as when an energetic Christian is laboring enthusiastically to build up the Church of Christ. Satan will put every possible thorn in the path of such a man. But Christian people must hold up the hands of their pastors else they will soon cease to be the friends of Christ or his Church. There are always persons to be found whom Satan can use to drag the good name of a minister in the dust. Christ said it would be so, but God's people must turn a deaf ear to the whisperings of those whose hearts are filled with hate and wrong.

Christian Intelligencer:

We venture to add our personal conviction gradually formed. It is that the most rascally, contemptible feature of modern literature is the treatment of the Old Testament by the chief men among the higher critics. It deserves only the severest condemnation.

The Christian Teachers' Assembly and Summer School will begin its first session at Littleton Female College July 2d, and continue four weeks. There will be four Departments of Instruction, and a variety of subjects will be taught. Board may be secured at the College, or at any one of the hotels or private boarding houses at reasonable rates. For further information address Rev. J. M. Rhodes, Littleton, N. C.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The News and Observer announces that it has passed into the hands of a receiver and will be sold on 16th inst. The paper though conducted with marked ability, and conspicuously a power in North Carolina politics, has been obliged to yield to a lack of financial support. We hope it will be continued with Mr. Samuel A. Ashe at its head. Mr. Ashe is exceedingly popular and his editorial qualifications are unquestioned.

Charlotte News: The storm up on the Catawba river and west of that stream yesterday afternoon was extraordinarily severe and shook things up considerable. At the little town of Maiden, between Newton and Lincolnton on the Narrow Guage road, the electrical display was terrific. A man named Wilkins was going toward his house in the place and was killed instantly by a stroke of lightning.

Wilson Mirror: We heard a well informed business man say the other day that the farmers would make their cotton this year at a cost of about four cents a pound.

Charlotte Observer: Mr. R. M. Ross lives in Sharon. He will have cause to remember the thunder storm of Monday. When the rain came up he drove his two fine Jersey calves under a tree, which is a few feet in front of the house. Lightning struck the tree, killed the calves, tore the framing from the front door and shattered one of the front windows. Mr. Ross would hardly have sold the calves at any price. They were full-blooded Jerseys and very valuable.

DOMESTIC.

Special to the N. O. Picayune: Birmingham, Ala., June 26th.—A storm which passed over the lower portion of St. Clair county last evening did much damage. Lightning tore up many trees, and several farm houses were struck. The house of Bud Simpson, near Leeds, was struck, and his two daughters, Rosa and Fannie, aged 12 and 16 respectively, who were standing on the front portico, were instantly killed. A ball of fire which rolled along the floor of the portico, entered the front door and knocked down Mrs. Simpson, the mother, tearing her shoes from her feet and inflicting injuries which will prove probably fatal. The ball of fire then entered the adjoining room and striking two younger daughters down, injured them badly.

Press despatches from San Francisco, 29th, say:

An Italian mass-meeting, called to express regret for the assassination of President Carnot, turned into a riot last night at Garibaldi Hall. Garibaldi Hall is in the heart of the Italian quarter.

Joseph Caligaris, the chairman, is one of the leading men of the Italian colony. He took his place on the platform and stated the opject of the meeting Then bedlam broke loose. The crowd became hooting maniacs. Screams of "Down with the French!" and "Italy forever!" came from half a thousand throats.

The speaker was forced off the platform. Two policemen interposed and prevented the mob from crushing the speaker, Never for a moment did the shouts and curses cease. The policemen forced through the excited mass of men as far as the door, guarding Mr. Caligaris. On the street the mob, reinforced by hundreds, joined in a chase after Caligaris to the Commercial Hotel, where the crowd was expelled by the police.

Charles Borreo, an Italian, spoke for the riotous element as follows: "The people who assembled last night felt that the protest and condemnation of President Carnot's murder were out of place. The French made no protests or apologies when Crispi was assaulted by a Frenchman, and they have made no apologies for their treatment of the Italians at Lyons."

FOREIGN.

Casimir-Perier has been elected President of the French Republic. The event gives satisfactlon to Russia and to continental nations generally.

The Baltimore Sun says under date June 29th, from Rome: The police arrested three anarchists this morning in the precincts of the Chamber of Deputies. They were taken to the police station and searched. Each one of them had upon his person an accurately drawn plan of the hall, lobbies, entrances, &c., of the Chamber of Deputies, showing almost conclusive evidence that their design was to explode a bomb or commit some other outrage in the building. The police in other cities in Italy have made a large number of arrests in consequence of the reported existence of an international anarchist plot to blow up public buildings and murder prominent political personages.

The police of Marseilles have ascertained that the assassination of President Carnot was the culmination of a plot. The conspirators met last in Cette. They drew lots to determine who should kill the President and the task fell to Santo. The police say they have clues that will lead to the arrest of other guilty men.

Third Quarter.—Lesson III.

July 15.—Visit of the Wise Men.

Matt. ii. 1-12. Commit vss. 9-11.

Golden Text. They saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshipped him.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. In Luke we had gotten to (2. 39): "And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth." The events narrated in this and the next lesson (The Flight into Egypt) can not have taken place before the Presentation in the Temple, for after the excitement raised in Jerusalem by the visit of the wise men, the Child would have been exposed to the wrath of the king had He then been presented in the Temple and received the testimonies of Simeon and Anna. The flight into Egypt must have followed immediately upon the visit of the wise men (Matt. ii. 13). The verse quoted above from Luke is simply a summing up of a considerable period without mentioning the intervening events. It simply states the fact: that after the fulfilment of the law, and before the going up to the Passover in His 12th year; the residence of Jesus had been changed from Bethlehem to Nazareth. From Matthew we infer that Joseph and Mary—moved by the prophesies—would have made Bethlehem their permanent residence, had not the fear of the first Herod driven them into Egypt, and the fear of his successor made them turn aside to Galilee. Why they chose Nazareth we would not know from Matthew except that it was to fulfil prophecy. But from Luke we understand that it was "their own city." Thus the two narratives supplement, but in no way contradict, each other.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson until you have the narrative accurately fixed in your mind: The strange visitors and the troubling question, vss 1-3; the royal inquiry and the Scriptural answers, vss. 4-6; the secret examination and the crafty command, vss. 7, 8; the Heavenly guide and the joyful discovery, vss. 9, 10; Divine homage and royal gifts, vs. 11; royal craft divinely circumvented, vs. 12.

Third Step. Study with your helps any points needing explanation:

Vs. 1. Herod. See Bible Dictionaries for full biography and character. He is the first of the Herods and is the one called "the Great." His father, Antipater, was an Edomite who married the daughter of Hyrcanus the Jewish High-priest, and was appointed procurator of Judea by Julius Caesar. Herod was made governor of Galilee and was afterwards appointed tetrarch of Judea by Antony, and, finally, king by the Roman Senate. His authority was of course, subject to that of Augustus. He imitated Augustus in his lavish expenditure for public works and sought to conciliate the Jews by rebuilding their temple with great magnificence. He was cruel beyond conception, causing the murder of his grandfather Hyrcanus, his wife and wife's mother, and three of his sons—all for jealousy for his royal power.

Wise men from the East. Magi, a class of men found in Babylon and Persia, who studied the course of the heavenly bodies, and the course of human events, and were supposed to be able to trace a connection between the two. Many of them were mere impostors, and from that idea we get our word magician; others were honest students, and their honest search might be rewarded by God even if their science was faulty.

Vs. 2. Where etc. The knowledge of such a ruler to come from the Jews had doubtless been preserved among them since the prophecy of Balaam (who was of their order) in Num. xxiv. 17. Then too, the association of their order with Daniel, and the residence of the captive Jews among them for several centuries, would have increased their expectation of such a king, while both the Balaam prophecy and their own science would lead them to study the heavens for an indication of His coming.

We have seen his star in the east. The last clause indicates where they were when they saw the star, not the part of the heavens where the star was. "The east" must be interpreted by its use in vs. 1 as indicating the region from which they came. Had the star been in the eastern heavens it would have led them to India or China and not to Palestine.

His star. Astronomers have calculated that their occurred a remarkable conjunction between Jupiter, Saturn and Mars at just about this time. This probably aroused their attention and then directed their steps to Palestine. The description in vs. 9 seems to indicate a miraculous appearance in the lower atmosphere. It is in accord with the Divine method to give more light to those who follow the light they have.

Vs. 3. Troubled. Herod and his courtiers might well be troubled, but why "all Jerusalem"? Simply that Judea was worn out with centuries of turmoil and strife, in which it had been fought for by the Syrian and Egyptian successors of Alexander; then by Roman and Egyptian, then by the rival claimants for Roman supremacy, until worn out between Julius Caesar and Pompey, Antony and Augustus it was content to have even the cruel rule of Herod rather than return to the devastations of conflict—armies which seemed threatened by the rise of a rival king.

Vs. 4. Christ. Properly "the Christ"—not a proper name but the familiar designation of the expected Messiah; a title not a name. It shows how prevalent was the expectation of the Messiah's coming that the Magi's question should be at once understood to refer to the Messiah.

Vs. 5. By the prophet, i. e., Micah (ch. v. 2).

Vs. 7. Inquired diligently, rather precisely.

From this vs. 16 it has been assumed that Jesus was nearly two years old when the visit took place. This fails to allow (1) for the time that Herod would have waited, (2) for the very liberal allowance on the side of cruelty that he would have made to make sure, and (3) for the probability that the star might have set the wise men on their search sometime before the birth of Jesus actually took place.

Vs. 9. And, lo! An expression of surprise indicating that they had not seen it for some time. The same is shown in vs. 10, which they saw in the East, i. e., which they had before seen when they were in the East.

Vs. 11. Worshipped Him. The term used for worship is used generally, though not uniformly for Divine worship. Yet it is the term used in iv. 10, Thou shalt worship the Lord.....and Him only, and in Rev. xxii. 8 where the angel says, "See thou do it not." It should be noticed that while "they saw the young child with Mary his mother," they worshipped Him—not them.

Gold, frankincense and myrrh. Some say, Gold, as to a king, frankincense as to God (from its use in worship), myrrh as to a mortal (from its use in burying. Certainly they were the choicest products of the East, and show that we should give our best gifts to God.

The visit of the Magi is the first testimony of the Gentiles to Jesus, as the visit of the shepherds and the prophecies of Simeon and Anna were the earliest testimonies of the Jews. The latter came first as the Gospel is "to the Jew first." It is also the first tribute of the world's wisdom and of the world's wealth.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson and compare it with ours:

SUMMARY. After the birth of Jesus and before the death of Herod the Great some Magi from the East came to Jerusalem inquiring for a new King of the Jews whose birth had been indicated to them by a remarkable star. Herod being troubled at the prospect of a rival, and his people by fear of new disturbances, inquired of the religious teachers where the Messiah was to be born, and ascertained that it was in Bethlehem. After inquiring the time of the appearance of the star, Herod sends the Magi to search for the Child at Bethlehem and bring him word, with hypocritical pretense of a desire to worship him. The star again appears and guides them to the house, where they find the Child and His mother, and worship Him with divine homage and royal gifts. Being warned of God, they return to their country without reporting to Herod.

Fifth Step. Study the principal topics in the light of God's Word.

1. The light of the Gentiles. In the last lesson Simeon announces that he would be the light of the Gentiles, and in this we see them coming to the "brightness of His rising" as had been sung by psalmist and prophet (Ps. lxxii. 10, 11; Is. lx. 3) and promised in the covenant with Abraham (Gen. xii. 3). Further illustrations during our Lord's life are the centurion of Capernaum (Matt. viii. 5-13), the woman, of Samaria (John iv. 26), the Syrophenician woman (Matt. xv. 21-28), the Greeks in the Temple (John xii. 20, 21), the centurion at the cross (Matt xxvii. 54). After His resurrection, the Great Commission (Matt. xxviii. 19; Acts ii. 8); the ingathering at Pentecost—Jews, but out of all nations, as a seed—(Acts ii. 8-11), the revelation to Peter (Acts x. 19, 20, etc), the commission to Paul (Acts xxii. 21).

Sixth Step. Make for yourself a brief Bible Reading on "the Gifts to Bring to Jesus."

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Get from the scholars (1) a distinct idea of who and what the Magi were; (2) of the star, its direction when first seen, how far it might have been a natural appearance and how far miraculous; (3) the impression made at Jerusalem; (4) their worship and gifts; (5) the significance of their visit. Subordinate points for more advanced scholars are: the order of events—whether before or after the Presentation; the bearing of this narrative on the date of Christ's birth. Teach your scholars Bishop Heber's hymn:

"Brightest and best of the sons of the morning."

[Hymn 335 in Laudes Domini.]

[For want of room here we print the hymn in another place.]

"Ere sin could blight or sorrow fade,
Death timely came with friendly care,
The opening bud to heaven conveyed
And bade it bloom forever there."

On June 19th, 1894, near Philadelphus, Robeson county, N. C, MATTIE, the three year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Kelly. "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God."

On May 27th, 1894, after two years of patient suffering, at her home near Wakulla, Robeson county, N. C., Mrs. MARGARET McNEILL, widow of the late Neal McNeill. She had been a consistent member and faithful worker in Philadelphus church for nearly thirty-five years. Before her death she gave her children and friends the blessed assurance that she was ready to go and be with her Saviour.

Near Concord, Iredell county, N. C., June 20th, 1894, Mrs. DORCAS J. WATT, aged 68 years. In January 1889, Mrs. Watt was stricken with paralysis. She suffered at times very intensely, but she was meek and lowly in spirit. Hence she complained not, to be kept away from the house of God was very trying to her, for she was a mother in Israel and delighted to meet with those who worshiped in the sanctuary. Her end was peace, passing away as one falling into a profound slumber. An only daughter is left to lament the departure of her mother. Many friends mourn, but they are not without hope.

AGNES SCOTT INSTITUTE.

ONE OF THE SOUTH'S MOST POPULAR SCHOOLS.

THE WORK IT IS DOING.

The next session of this noted Presbyterian boarding and day school for young ladies, commences on September 5th, next.

Already applications for catalogues are being received and the promise is of another prosperous year.

The past year has been one of widespread financial depression, but notwithstanding this fact, the Institute has had a prosperous year.

No school in the South has enjoyed more constant and brilliant success than the Agnes Scott, and the causes of this success are evident:

1. Its location in North Georgia is unrivaled; the local surroundings are ideal, Decatur having long been noted for its refined, educated and religious society.
2. A large and accomplished corps of trained and experienced teachers, each member of the faculty having been selected for his or her character and special qualifications for the chair occupied.
3. Thorough work. The utmost effort is made to do thorough teaching, and no careless or antiquated methods are used. None of the officers or teachers have any financial interest in the management of the Institute, and each teacher is able to give her or his entire time and undivided and disinterested attention to the work of instructing. Pupils not making satisfactory progress or not improving their time are not allowed to waste the money of parents by further attendance.

The curriculum is already high. It is rigidly pursued and is being steadily advanced as the school grows in years. It is the desire and aim of trustees and faculty to place the Agnes Scott as the leader in elevating the standard of female education in the South.

The special departments, as music and art, are well equipped and under charge of skilled specialists, are fully abreast of the times and the best schools.

4. The low scale of fees, these having been fixed, not with the view of money making, but simply to cover current expenses, repairs and equipment.
5. The superb buildings were constructed especially for school purposes after the best approved plans. They are all of brick, heated by steam, lighted by electricity, scientifically ventilated and supplied throughout with hot and cold water and fire hose.

The roof is humble, colored low and soft
With lichens, fashioned by the quiet years
With moist artistic fingers. Not a room
Has carven blossom or dim silken flow
Of broidered curtain; but beside the sill
A company of lilies all alive,
Uncurl their petals to the sweetheart Sun
The eaves drop woodbine swings, where fairies sit
Invisible, and frolic till the stars
Melt their bright silver in the flames of dawn.
God's hand its perfect decorations wrought,
And lavished on its table fruit and corn.
If any like the place, be pleased to come;
For every friendly open heart 'tis home.

Items for Lady Readers.

The birthday of Miss Jennie Cassidy, founder of the flower mission work of the W. C. T. U., was celebrated all over the United States by the members of that organization. Miss Cassidy has passed away, but the beautiful work that the afflicted girl began lives, and from every branch of the W. C. T. U., both in Europe and America, bands of young girls and women will go forth to-morrow, carrying flowers and fruits and delicacies to the hospitals, the prisons, the jails and houses of refuge, and leaving in each a few freshly cut flowers and other offerings, together with a gospel message on a printed slip of paper. Simultaneously with the celebration in the various cities, in Louisville, Ky., which was the home of Miss Cassidy and the birthplace of the flower mission, a beautiful monument to the deceased national superintendent and foundress will be unveiled. The monument was the united offering of the school children of Louisville.

Mrs. Hattie E. Weymouth is the superintendent of the flower mission in New Orleans, and her work, as planned out for the day, will be indeed an offering of a bunch of as sweet posies as ever were twined by a woman's hand. The ladies under her direction will visit the charity hospital, particularly the children's and women's ward, the Shakspeare almshouse, the boys' house of refuge, the parish prison, the Memorial Home, the Little Sisters of the Poor and the Convalescents' Home, carrying with them flowers, fruit, cake, reading matter, and scripture cards for distribution. The public are invited to assist in the generous work of the mission. All contributions of fruit, flowers, cakes, needles, thread, quilt pieces and literature will be received at the Bible House, on Camp street, up to 9.30 a. m., to-morrow, when the ladies will go forth on their beautiful errand of spreading mercy, love and sunshine in the lives of the neglected and desolate in the name of Him who said "that even a cup of cold water given in his name should not go unrewarded."—*N. Things Useful.

Tin Cans.—Instead of throwing away tin cans when emptied of their contents, save them. Melt off the tops and bottoms, paste stout cloth over the bottoms, fill the cans with well prepared soil, and plant in each one two or three seeds and set them in a sunny window. Transplant all the surplus growth, and set the can, without disturbing the central plant, into the garden bed, first cutting open the cloth bottom. The growth of the plant is not checked by transplanting, and it is protected from cut worms.

To make apple slump, a famous New England dish, sift a quart of flour; add a teaspoonful of salt and a tablespoonful of butter with half a teaspoonful of soda; mix to a soft dough with buttermilk. Have six large tart apples pared, quartered and cored; put them in the bottom of a baking dish with one pint of water; roll out the dough; spread over the apples; cover the dish, and stew slowly in the oven for half an hour. When done, dust with sugar and serve with hard or soft sauce.

Mrs. B. W. W.—To thoroughly clease a chenille table-cover shake it free from dust and put it into a bucket containing one quart of boiling water and one quart of benzine. Cover and allow it to stand for fifteen minutes. Remove the cover, shake up and down in the water, wring, shake and hang on the line to dry. If it still shows any soil repeat the process. Have neither light nor fire in the room at the time.

Croquante of peaches is made by boiling a pound of sugar and a teacup of water together until they jelly. Take from the fire. Grease a two-quart mould with fresh butter. Have a dozen ripe peaches pared and cut in halves; dip each half in the syrup; cover with syrup, and press against the sides of the mould; continue until the bottom and sides are lined, and stand in a cold place to harden. When firm fill the centre with Charlotte russe, and set on ice for two hours. When ready to serve turn the mould upside down on a plate, wet with a warm cloth, and lift off carefully.

When bathing, on leaving the water one should rub down with a coarse towel until the skin is heated and reddened, and after dressing rapidly a brisk walk for a short distance should be taken to quicken circulation.

THE CHRISTIAN'S

SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal

Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

MY MOTHER.

I must not tease my mother,
For she is very kind;
And everything she says to me,
I must directly mind.
For when I was an infant,
And could not speak or walk,
She laid me on her breast to sleep,
And taught me how to talk,

I must not tease my mother;
And when she wants to read,
Or has the headache I must step
Most silently indeed.
I will not choose a noisy play,
Or trifling trouble tell;
But sit down quiet by her side,
And try to make her well.

I must not tease my mother;
She loves me all the day,
And she has patience with my faults,
And teaches me to pray.
How much I try to please her,
She every hour shall see;
For should she go away, or die
What would become of me?

The Frog's Fourth of July.

Happy little Frog! Of course he was going to see what Bobby, and Nelly, and Mamie, and Lee, and Louis, and Edith, and Philip intended to do. Afraid of fire-crackers?—who? he? No, indeed! So he did not heed his mother's warning, but hopped off to the lovely grove at Woodreve, the children's summer home.

The nurses Kate, and Annie, and Mary spread a nice luncheon of cake and lemonade on the grass under the trees. It was very warm, and the children played, and swung, and fired torpedoes, and set off fire-crackers. They were getting restless and tired, when Bobby said: "Let's fill a tomato-can with fire-crackers, turn it bottom up, tilt it a little, and set fire to one of the crackers with a match tied to a long pole." The plan was hailed with delight. So they fixed it all, and then sat down to enjoy the great fright of the nurses, who were sewing and knitting under a tree not very far from the can, but with their backs to it.

The little frog had heen hiding in the grass near by, and he did not understand at all why everything was suddenly quiet—so he hopped, and he hopped, and he hopped, and at last he hopped up on the can, so that he might see better. There he sat, puffed out with pride and staring all about, while the children stared back at the foolish fellow—when bang! bang! went the crackers—up went the can—and over went little Mr. Frog into a blackberry bush! The nurses screamed, the little girls shrieked, the lemonade was turned over, the cake upset, Edyth's bottle of milk was broken, and such a time! But it did not last long, for fresh supplies came from the house. One of the ladies came out to ask what was the matter; and then all the children told the story, and laughed and laughed, at the fun. But the little frog rubbed his legs and scratched his head, wondering what had happened, and then hopped away to his home as fast as could he go—the most surprised little frog that ever saw a Fourth of July.

The Best God Could Do.

It had been a sad, hard winter for Mrs. Thorp and little Bennny: whooping cough and bronchitis had seized the little fellow like two cruel jailors, and held on to him all winter. These jailors would not let him rest by day, and would not let him sleep at night; they would not let him eat his breakfast in peace; they often made him lose his dinner; they shook him, they racked him, they made him sad and tired; oh, it was a hard time for Benny, and a harder time for Benny's mother.

One day the postman, in a big overcoat, with a cape to it, came pounding at their little door, and left a letter for "Mrs. Amelia Thorp, No. 9 East Front Street." What do you suppose that letter held? Bushels and bushels of sunshine, white and yellow daisies, butterflies and birds!

How could one little carry so much? Why there was money in it from Cousin James, to bring mother and Benny down to Georgia, where spring-time had come already, though we were walking on snow and ice.

When Cousin Susie first carried Benny, in her strong young arms, out to the sunny Georgia field, and he felt the sweet soft air, heard the mocking bird singing like a choir, and saw the yellow jessamine running mad over everything, he laughed aloud with delight, then, drawing his thin little face into soberness, "Cousin Susie," he said, "I don't believe God can make any place prettier than this, do you?

But Benny will know some day, when his time comes to cross the river of death, that God has made our heavenly home more sweet and beautiful than we can ever think or imagine here—Sunbeam.

THE ELECTROPOISE

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Executive Department,
Raleigh, N. C., Feb. 8, 1892.

In reply to yours of the 5th inst., I have to say that I have used your Electropoise occasionally, and have always found relief from its use.

I have not had an opportunity to use it as I would like to have done, as I am so situated that I can only use it occasionally. At those times, however, I have always had good results.

Yours very truly, THOMAS M. HOLT,
Governor.

ASTHMA AND BRONCHITJS.

Hickory, N. C., May 23, 1893.

Mrs. Cline had been in bad health for more than twenty years with Asthma and Bronchits and sometimes for weeks she was confined to her room; could not go or sit where the draft would strike her. Since using the Electropoise she has been able to go where she wanted day or night, and seldom ever has any trouble from the Asthma. In short, her health is better than it has been in the last twenty years. She has not taken any medicine since she used the Electropoise. We have had other splendid results from it. Yours truly, M. L. CLINE.

FOUR YEARS EXPERIENCE.

Wilmington, N. C., November 27, 1893.

The favorable opinion formed and my recommendation of the Electropoise after an experience of six months has been confirmed by its constant use in my family the past four years. It has been my good fortune to receive favorable reports from personal friends in several of the Southern States whom I advised to try it.

Very respectfully,
Secretary Chamber of Commerce.
JOHN L. CANTWELL,

BRIGHTS DISEASE.

Williamston, March 7, 1892.

I have found more relief in Bright's Disease from a few month's use of the Electropoise than from all the patent medicines, physicians' prescriptions, mineral waters, "faith healing," sea voyages and a winter residence in a warmer climate.

REV. SYLVESTER HASSEL.

The above from a prominent Baptist minister of Eastern N. C., shows what an intelligent use of the Electropoise will do.

REV. DR. FRANK L. REID.

THE ELECTROPOISE—The results achieved by that wonderful invention, the Electropoise, are simply marvellous. We have tried it enough in our own family to believe pretty thoroughly in it, and we have had observation of its effects on others sufficient to justify us in advertising it to our readers, and in commending its use to the afflicted everywhere. We know one of our preachers who says it has made almost a new man, physically, of him. We know others who have tested it thoroughly, and speak in the highest praise of it. We believe every afflicted person who can would do well to give it a trial.

The certificates we publish speak for themselves. When such men as Gov. Holt, Judge Davis, Mr. J. C. Buxton, Rev. Alex. Walker, Col. Cantwell and many others try a thing and commend it, it means much. It is a good thing.—Editorial by Rev. F. L. Reid, Raleigh N. C. Christian Advocate, March 2, 1892.

EFFECTS OF LA GRIPPE.

Fayetteville, N. C., Aug. 16, 1892.

I gladly give you my opinion of the Electropoise. I consider it Science's Best Gift to Man. It has been of such wonderful benefit to me that I feel as if I could not say too much in its favor. A very severe attack of Grippe in the winter of 1890 left me with a shattered nervous system and almost no digestive power at all, and for eighteen months people in Hades had as much fun and as good a time as I did. I tried all Allopathic, Homeopathic and "jam of the fence" remedies all to no good. The Electropoise has made me almost myself again, and I believe will eventually make me a better man. It has been used on every member of my household of seven children, from the youngest up to the mother (who is also a convert) with marked beneficial results; so much so, that I have not paid one penny for drugs since it entered my house, the first of last March. I have recommended it to many who have taken my advice and I have never known of any one to regret doing so. It is the most economical physician on earth. I would not be without one under any circumstances.

Yours truly, JAS. D. McNEILL.

RHEUMATISM.

Asheville, N. C., August 17, 1893.

When I bought your Electropoise I had no special use for it, but having a large family, I thought I would have one in readiness for any emergency. When I received the little thing I thought there could not be much good or harm in it, that I would test it myself; so I put it on night after night for about twelve nights, and it worked like a charm. To test it more fully I had a friend who was very much afflicted with rheumatism in her ankles and knees, also her wrists and fingers so bad some times that she was helpless. Her husband got almost everything he could hear of to give her relief, but without success until they had lost heart. I let them have the Electropoise and after trying it a short while she is about as stout as she ever was. The other day she walked to the top of a large mountain, four miles, and back home, without much fatigue. Yours truly, JAMES BUTTRICK.

MRS. JUDGE DICK'S EXPERIENCE.

Greensboro, N. C., Oct. 23, 1892.

The Electropoise has been wonderful in its effects upon me, curing me of dreadful indigestion and insomnia and relieving me in a great degree of liver trouble. I am like a new person since I began its use. I wish all suffering humanity could be relieved as I have been by it. I would not be without mine for any consideration. With highest regards, etc. MARY E. DICK.

CATARRH OF STOMACH.

Tarboro, N. C., Aug. 14, 1893.

For years I have been a great sufferer from indigestion and tried all sorts of medicines for relief. About two years ago I had a severe attack coupled with catarrh of the stomach. I was given up to die. I bought an Electropoise and within a week was at my office attending to my duties and rapidly improved, gained in a few months twenty-five pounds and am in better health to-day than I have been for twenty-five years.

About two weeks ago I had a severe attack of sciatica, could not lie down. Suffered severely. I applied the Poise and on the following morning awoke relieved; continued treatment for a day or two and have not had one particle of pain since. I believe in it and would not for many times its cost be without it. I used it for cramp on one of my children with instant success. If people will use according to directions I believe it will do anything claimed.

Yours truly, THOS. E. LEWIS.

FEMALE COMPLAINT, ETC.

Newton, N. C., August 12th, 1892.

I feel it my grateful duty to testify to all sufferers, particularly weakly worn-down females, of the great benefits I have derived from the faithful use of the Electropoise. I have been raised from such a depth of suffering and misery that those who knew my condition a few months since consider me a walking wonder. I have suffered for twelve years from a distressing affliction, peculiar to my sex, and for a whole year past my entire system has been involved. Constipation, most obstinate indigestion, fearful periodical headaches, and worst of all, sleeplessness and nervousness, which no remedies would relieve. I had best medical attention, and just lived on tonics and medicines, but found little, even temporary, relief. I could not walk to my nearest neighbor's for three months, and suffered almost agony when on my feet. So much for my condition when in April last I began using the Electropoise. In one week I could sleep soundly all night, with no nervous attacks, and am entirely relieved of my distressing female trouble, constipation and headache, appetite and digestion good, and I have walked two miles without inconvenience. My sleep is sound and refreshing. I have used the Electropoise with great success in my family, have cured croup, bronchitis, cramps and inflammation of the kidneys, with which my family have suffered. Several others here are using the wonderful little instrument with like success. I only recommend it to others for what it has done for me and mine. Suffering, worn out wives and mothers are to be found everywhere, and I earnestly beg them to try the Electropoise, the woman's friend. Where can you find one suffering from female complaints who has been cured and her health built up by by instruments and medicines? Yet many can be found who are well and strong from a few month's use of the Electropoise, without medicine. I feel that under a kind Providence, I owe my life and health to the 'Poise, and bid adieu to medicine, for I have my doctor and medicines always at home, in the never failing Electropoise. It is cheap at any price, for it cures where other remedies fail.

MRS. J. M. BROWN.

Dec. 14, 1893, Mrs. Brown writes: "I would not part with the Electropoise for worlds; it is my best friend."

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

WALTER CLARK, ASSOCIATE JUSTICE.
Raleigh, N. C., January 26, 1894.

We have found the Electropoise very valuable—especially for children. I got one last May, and I am sure I have saved three times its cost already in doctors and drug store bills. From my experience with it and observation, I can safely recommend it.

Yours truly, WALTER CLARK.

PARALYSIS.

Atlanta, Ga., August 20, 1892.

It affords me pleasure to add my testimony to that of the many others who have been cured by the Electropoise. I testify both from personal experience and from what I have seen it do for others.

Last May I was stricken with paralysis, which deprived me of the power of articulate speech, my right hand was also affected so I could not write intelligibly. After a short treatment I was able to articulate so as to be understood, and have continued to improve ever since.

Our nephew, a youth of seventeen, suffered with nausea, headache, fever, diarrhœa, which developed into a very stubborn case of typhoid fever. We used no medicine, but simply the Electropoise, and in seven days he was up, and in ten days he was at his work.

I cannot doubt the power of this remedial agent, which under God, works such cures as these. It is the poor man's friend. He will never have physicians' bills and druggists' prescriptions to pay; he will have a "little doctor" always in the house, ready at all hours, night and day to render its valuable services. Yours respectfully,

REV. JOHN J. ROBINSON.

FIRST ELECTROPOISE SOLD.

Hawthorn, Fla., June 23, 1890.

Rev. M. H. Houston,

Dear Brother—Yours of June 20th received. I have had almost two years' experience with the Electropoise, and must say it far surpasses even skillful medication; and I have treated more than two hundred cases of various diseases with marked success. I have broken chills and fever of several weeks' duration in from one night to three nights. It is impossible to have chills while using the Poise properly. I have treated more than fifteen cases of fever, the majority being typhoid-malarial, curing them in from two hours to four days. Diarrhœa, dysentery and cholera-morbus I have cured in from one hour to eight, generally. Rheumatism in from three hours to three days, in one case making the patient throw away his crutches and straighten his deformed limbs in four hours, and one more day's treatment made a permanent cure.

It is beyond doubt the greatest remedy God has permitted us to know. The instruments are now placed all around me, and I am treating people day and night. It has given me influence here as nothing else can. My confidence in the treatment is almost unbounded; it cures promptly and permanently.

I will mark a few certificates in the enclosed circulars of cures effected by myself. The certificates of cures in Florida could be made much stronger than given in the circulars.

Yours fraternally, C. N. MORROW.

Sept. 20th, 1893. Rev. Mr. Morrow writes: "I am still having the most wonderful success with the Electropise."

ECZEMA.

Maxton, N. C., Jan. 4, 1894.

One of my children has been greatly afflicted with Eczema on the hands, arms and shoulders. Medicine did no permanent good. As an experiment we tried the Electropoise, and improvement commenced at once and in eight weeks it was cured entirely. We use the Electropoise whenever in need of any treatment and the results are uniformly gratifying. Yours truly,

REV. A. D. BETTS.

NEW YORK EVIDENCE.

The following is from Rev. W. H. De Puy, A. M., D. D., LL. D., editor of the People's Cyclopedia and several other well-known works, and now assistant editor of the Christian Advocate at New York; a position which he has filled more than twenty years.

New York, Dec. 20, 1893.

Myself and family have received so much benefit from the use of your Electropoise, and I have become so thoroughly convinced of its practical value as a curative agent that I feel warranted in commending it without reserve to the public. One of my friends a widely known and highly esteemed clergyman and educator, after using the Electropoise for nearly two years in his family, said to me more than once, after thoroughly testing its merits, that if he could not get another he would not take a thousand dollars for it.

I cheerfully give you my permission to use this brief note in any way which may aid you in introducing the instrument to the attention of any community.

Very truly yours,
W. H DE PUY.

PROF. TOTTEN'S OPINION.

Professor Totten, of Yale College, is one of the most advanced thinkers, reasoners and Bible students of the age, and all of his scientific works are of the highest standard. On page 228, volume 7, of this work entitled "Our Race," he writes as follows: "But thanks be God, there is a remedy for such as be sick—one single, simple remedy—an instrument called the Electropoise. We do not personally know the parties who control this instrument, but we do know of its value. We are neither agents nor are in anyway financially interested in the matter."

AFTER PHYSICIANS FAILED.

Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of South Carolina, Charleston, S. C. writing under date of January 20th, 1890, says: I was truly glad to learn that an office had been opened in our city for the sale of the Electropoise. I have friends who after suffering for years the most excruciating pain, which the most skillful physicians North and South had failed to relieve, have been cured by the Electropoise. It is a panacea for nervousness, brain fatigue and general debility. It only needs a trial to convince the most skeptical, and when I hear the testimony of Hon. Wm. C. Sibley, of Augusta, the Rev. T. W. Moore, D. D., of Florida, and others, whom I personally know and who have been benefitted, I feel it a duty I owe suffering humanity to say, try the Electropise.

LOCOMOTOR ATAXY

Hot Springs, Ark., Nov. 24, 1890.

I began the use of the Electropoise on the 8th or 10th of July. I was obliged to quit bathing and was full of despair; was growing worse daily, and could not rise up with crutches Had a constriction around the chest, continuous pain and paroxysms, paralysis of the bladder, was growing numb about the waist, and the muscles of the left leg were badly wasted. * * * In the first charge it attacked the bladder, and one by one each nerve in turn, and now the constriction around the chest is gone; have regained control over the bladder both as to retention and incontinence. My feet have lost the wiggle and I can place them where I desire; sensation is slowly returning in feet and knees. The muscles of the atrophied leg are filling up and look almost normal; complexion much improved, gastric trouble in stomach and liver gone, appetite improved, and can rise upon my feet without any aid whatever; can balance on each hip joint and step out like a child.

I consider this most remarkable improvement in my case, because I thought I was beyond hope, and I do not feel that I have given it a fair test either.

It certainly will revitalize; it drove out a vast amount of eruptions, and my bladder improvement indicates that it attacks the cause. By all means give it a trial.

Yours truly,
T. B. SCHNATTERLY,
of Pittsburg, Pa.

DRAWN BY RHEUMATISM.

Vinton, Va., Aug. 22, 1891.

I began using the Electropoise twenty months ago. At that time had been in bed, or only able to sit on a chair when lifted for six months. My disease was muscular rheumatism of the most acute type. I was so low that I had to be turned on a sheet, for weeks, and my knees were so drawn I could not straighten or use them. Now I can walk a half mile, and though I get tired, I halt but very little. One knee is still drawn slightly, but not stiff. I have been under the doctor twice, but I know the Poise did me more good than medicine. I really did not hope to ever walk again when I applied it, and so I feel more than grateful for it. Yours, with best wishes, MRS. GILES GUNN.

Dec. 14, 1893, Mrs. Gunn writes: "My limbs are now straight and supple, and every day increases my appreciation of the Electropoise."

CURVATURE OF THE SPINE.

Miss Lena Nagler, Freeport, Mich., recently wrote as follows: "I have been a confirmed invalid for over twenty years, suffering untold agony most of the time, and wishing many times that the next breath might be my last. I suffered from severe kidney and liver troubles, which reduced me to a helpless condition. I was also afflicted with paralysis, female weakness and curvature of the spine. My brother, Prof. Nagler, of St. Paul Park College, instructed the Electropoise Co., to send me an instrument and as a result, in less than a week my kidney troubles were all gone; the invigorating effects were such that I became frantic with joy; and now, two weeks later, there is a general improvement going on. I am able to sit up and sew, which I have not done in many years."

STRIKES.

We agree that labor has its grievances and that it has a right to organize and combine in self-protection and promotion of its interests and education of members and to economize its strength for the general good. The centralizing tendencies in government and combinations in trades and products and manufactures have made labor unions at least a certainty if not a necessity. The various departments of labor have unquestionably the public sympathy in their alliance to redress real wrongs and secure relief from just grievances.

But there are always two sides to a question. Capital held and controlled by individuals, or companies, or corporations, or trusts, is not necessarily wrong because it has power, simply because it is capital. Labor, whether single-handed or combined is not right simply because it is subject to the power of capital and under its control—simply because it is weak. In any case of complaint of the employee at work against the employer directing, under decision as to wages or conditions, both sides have a right to be heard and the general public, holding the balance of power in the public opinion, and the arbitrament of law will insist that the right must prevail. That right will look not merely at any great bulk or large sums which may make an individual rich or a corporation powerful, but at the risks and responsibilities which capital must assume and meet, the demands and prices for the products of the labor employed. It will on the other hand consider not merely what actual wages capital pays but also what consideration and kindness capital shows to the employed. It will ask for the laborer not merely whether wages are high or low in actual amount or whether they have been increased or reduced, but what is their ratio to the piece product and price sales and market demands for the product and the competition of similar products in the market, and the cost of living, the relative market value of food and the cost of rents and fuel and lights and the risks of health and life and limb.

It will at once appear that questions which arise are not so simple as the mob makes its votaries claim. Even this is not the whole statement when pending the settlement of grievances or complaints. There is the possible want of families and communities immediately affected, and the possible effect on interstate commerce, overland mails and the interchange of values and products and food supplies in such amounts as seriously to affect prices and expenses of living which bear most seriously upon people of small means and particularly wage earners and their families. Where there are competing factories or producers all such questions are within the general scope of demand and supply, which will in this land and our times most nearly secure justice eventually. This will not apply to Trusts sanctioned or supported by any manner of law or principle of government. These will inevitably give advantage to capital and are therefore counted as financially and economically immoral and are being condemned by the rising sense of true statesmanship and political purity.

Under these and like conditions our land is distressed and great interests are disturbed by what are all too familiar—strikes. So far as these undertake to forbid and prevent others from working where and as they will, and according to their best interests at honest trades and righteous business it is anarchy. So far as it does tend, and generally tends, to create mob-violence and arson it must be suppressed. It is just here that strikes generally forfeit sympathy and fail of the support which their real grievances may justify. There may have been injustice to miners in certain districts of which they had cause to complain. There may have been wrong in Pullman, but these have a public to which appeal may be made and legal redress of real wrongs and until these are tried and fail there is no call for strikes and no justification of boycott, violence or arson.

The trouble is not precipitated usually by the sufferers, but by those who have succeeded in getting a little brief authority without due preparation and experience. Their rashness reacts terribly. These not only fail to get what they hastily demand, but they fail of sympathy and lose what they may have already gained. This man DEBS makes a touching, general appeal for his complainers at PULLMAN, but the Savings Bank statement and its already decreasing deposits with the show of demand for products of the factories make a serious contrast and offset by the company.

Two other results inevitably follow. The depression of business out of which strikes come will warrant reduction of force and wages and strikes will give the opportunity. This is in point here when this very American Railway Union will by its strikes give the railroads opportunity to do this very thing. What will the workman say then? They will have to work fewer than before and at reduced wages. Besides this the general government will begin to make statutes in this direction to protect mails and interstate commerce, which with the present tendency to centralization will make the condition for the laborer more trying.

Strikes are serious weapons. They are too often selfish and generally overreaching. They are justifiable only as temporary and limited and whenever precipitated by designing demagogues or rash enthusiasts and pressed beyond this justification will do damage and end in disastrous defeat.

The true view will appear if we make this concrete. It is not right for any number of persons to do as a company or corporation what it is not right for each one to do as an individual. In that negative proposition it is easy to see the evil and the wrong of all strikes, boycotts and destruction of property. It is plain that the rights of one are limited by the rights of others and the liberties of each are bounded by the duties to every other. If we bring all these difficulties to this test we may have their ready solution.

AN AMUSING CASE OCCURRED IN THE courts of the Province of Quebec recently. Two editors of rival Roman Catholic papers quarrelled and when epithets had been well nigh exhausted one called the other a Methodist. Immediately legal action was taken and the accusation was adjudged to be damaging to the extent of $200.

LICENSURE AND ORDINATION—FOOTSTEPS BACKWARD.

In the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN of July 5th, 1894, appears a prominent article, "A STEP IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION." This article gives the real significance of the action of our last Assembly, touching Licensure and Ordination—a significance which many of the members of the Assembly forecasted but which, until now has not been very distinctly or prominently avowed. Let the whole Church know that the supreme object of that action is not entirely "to prohibit unlicensed preaching" but also to "dovetail" into a recommendation to theological seminaries "to adopt the six months' session and the four years' course, instead of three sessions of eight months each, as at present:" "to reduce to a minimum the problem of Beneficiary Education:" "to promote the efficiency of our ministers when they are ready for regular work by "licensing candidates at the end of their first term in the seminary, the license valid for three years" and, as the law provides, subject to renewal for three years more; "to solve the problem of our vacant churches" by putting these demi-preachers in their pulpits six months a year for the three or six years; to give our Theological Professors "opportunity for research and authorship that is of absolute necessity to real advance in scholarship" (shades of Addison Alexander, Hodge, Breckenridge, Thornwell, Peck! Insufficiency of Dabney!); to let these Professors "visit our larger churches, and our Institutes and Conventions" (things not provided for in Presbyterianism.) The article says, "The only consideration of any seeming weight on the other side is the assertion that our students would not take the four years' course" and concludes that as "the Methodists have no difficulty in keeping up a four years probation," we can surely do like "the Methodists."

Now upon the whole subject it is the purpose of this writing to suggest that the foregoing is not "the only consideration of any seeming weight" in opposition to this alarming innovation. Let the Presbyteries when they come to action distinctly understand:

1. That this movement is sweepingly revolutionary. Theologically, it overthrows the whole doctrine of our Church with reference to vocation, as taught by Breckenridge, Thornwell, and Dabney, and breathing through our Book of Church Order, substituting for it the machinery of Wesley's Methodism. Practically, it must unsettle our Theological Seminaries, make our Professors half-Professors and half-preachers, visitors to "Institutes and Conventions." It will subvert our historic plan of Beneficiary Education. It will put our churches for years under the instruction of men authorized to preach before the course of Theology has been completed, or even extensively studied. It must inevitably divert the minds of our students and lower the standard of qualification for the ministry. The basis of all this is, the old war-cry of Cumberlandism, "We must supply the destitutions." The whole thing is a virtual admission that, in the chief controversy between that body and ourselves, we stand to-day without the justification of truth.

2. This movement is nothing in the world but a revival of the attempt made a few years ago to lower the standard of education by practically introducing a new order of clergy. All disclaimers here are cordially accepted as expression of honest intention, but the logical consequence rivets itself upon us immovably. Let this law be enacted, and the Presbyterian Probationer disappears, and we must have, instead, a local Methodist Preacher, or an Episcopal Deacon. The present law makes the licentiate a probationer, on trial as to whether he can edify the Church; the coming law, assuming that he can do this very thing, sets him to doing it, for three or six years, thus clearly making him an order of preachers. The experiment of prolonged definite licensure has been tried in Japan and our Presbyterian missionaries there tell us that the effect has been to produce the impression that we have two distinct classes of preachers, one of a lower and one of a higher order, one licensed and one ordained, but both regular preachers. Are we prepared for this retroversive evolution, so destructive of ministerial parity? Are we ready to make practical proclamation to the world that we have adopted a feature of Methodism which is in itself a relic of modified Prelacy—a twofold, if not a threefold, clergy?

3. This new order in the ministry will necessarily give rise to a new order of rulers in all our congregations, sessions, Presbyteries, and Synods. Give the right to teach, and the right to rule, accruing logically, must develop practically and almost simultaneously. Herein is a deep reason why our Book makes ordination to government, so swiftly follow licensure in all ordinary cases. Can it be dreamed that these preachers, ministering to churches six months a year for four or six years, present in church sessions, at Presbyteries, making reports of work, influencing action by personal presence, by private expression and possibly by public speech, will not become a power in our Church courts—a power all the more dangerous because exercised without ordained authority and in such an anomalous way as to be utterly beyond ecclesiastical cognizance and control. Carry this measure, and it should be written down in our constitution: "The Presbyterian Church South has two orders of clergy, the licensed, the ordained; and two classes of Presbyters, those who sit in the sessions and Presbyteries, consult and vote, and those who preach, sit informally, consult more or less openly, do not vote, and rule "in a mild degree" for three or six years, without ordination as rulers and without legal responsibility." These men as the religious teachers of congregations will be often the counsellors of our sessions. They will be influential with our congregations—it may be, in their immaturity,—disastrously influential—and yet as rulers they will be responsible to nobody.

4. This leads to the thought of supreme importance in this discussion: it is not Presbyterianism to put a long stretch of practical preaching and ruling between licensure and ordination. The closeness of connexion between the two, as at present, is the inevitable sequence of those principles of vocation grandly elaborated by Breckenridge, Thornwell, Dabney, and never to be repudiated by us. They are, briefly, as follows: When a Presbytery receives a candidate, the vital question thenceforward is, "Does God call this man to preach?" Three elements of evidence are essential to determine that question. (1) The man's own spirit—wrought character and conviction. (2) The conviction of God's people. (3) The conviction of the court. Now, when, as under the coming law, a Presbytery licenses a man, not to try whether he can edify the church, but to edify it, for three or six years; if the second element of evidence is furnished by a call, and all the elements are substantially admitted by the court in this new doctrine of licensure, it follows as the night the day that the Presbytery has already admitted that the proof of God's call has been made out. And, as ordination is not the authentication of God's call, but rather the act of the court formally declaring and pronouncing it authenticated by the evidence adduced, this law which in one breath admits the sufficiency of the proof by licensing the man for three or six years, and putting him to teach God's people, and, in the next breath, arbitrarily refuses to ordain him, is un-Presbyterian from head to foot. If the Presbytery says: "We have admitted that God calls you to preach for three or six years, but we decline to ordain you because we prefer to educate you some more," the overwhelming retort will be, "Why, is it possible that you did not think me sufficiently well educated to preach when you licensed me for three or six years to do this very thing? "How is that licensure and ordination instead of being things profoundly significant of the results of investigation as to the evidences of a Divine call, are thus resolved into matters of arbitrary and almost capricious Presbyterial invention and enactment, the court beforehand binding itself by law not to heed God's voice saying, "Separate me this man"—refusing for three years after the court has practically admitted that it has every element of evidence necessary to authenticate the call as Divine. We may be sure that the founders of our Form of Government builded wisely when they bade us tremblingly to pause long ere we admit as much as is implied in a young man's licensure. Nor did they ever dream of putting into licensure the overwhelming admissions which this new law proposes. If training is to be given, let it precede this momentous event. Let us refuse to put into our constitutional law the doctrine that we license a man, not to try his gifts whether he can edify the church, but to edify it, and then stultify ourselves by refusing to ordain him to do the very thing which we have admitted God calls him to do and which we have appointed him to do for three years, it may be, for six years.

5. From all this it follows indubitably that this law, if enacted, cannot be enforced. Presbyterian legislative enactment has binding potency only in so far as it is the expression of the will Divine, and mere arbitrary ecclesiastical methodizing cannot be sustained against our doctrine of vocation, the jus Divinum at the basis of all our proceedings with reference to our candidates for the ministry. Young men licensed to preach, especially for six months a year for three years, with the privilege of a renewal of the licensure at the end of that time, will take it for granted that the Presbytery licensing them so sweepingly to do this thing, believes that they can do it; and if they and some congregation, especially an influential one, concur with the Presbytery in this conviction, and appear in court and urge ordination upon the evidence of God's call so largely furnished by the Presbytery itself, that ordination will be granted. Our Presbyteries cannot, will not, refuse it. In so doing, after so extensive a licensure, they would stand self-stultified. Thus, premature licensure must inevitably lead in numberless cases to premature ordination, and the three-year regulation, without foundation in God's law, would be practically without foundation in any law, and would be swept away alike by the inexorable logic of the Presbytery's own admissions as to the man's right and fitness to preach and by the plainest principles of common sense. The standard of education for licensure will be, must be, practically, the standard for ordination. The logic of our doctrine of vocation demands it: the logic of events after licensure will compel it. The reception of a candidate is in order to training; training, to licensure; licensure, to a call; a call, unless for unforeseen cause, to ordination. Let us in these things have no footsteps backward!

E. DANIEL.

HERE AND THERE.

READERS SHOULD NOT FAIL TO READ the article on our second page on the subject of "Religious Liberty." We wish too to call the special attention of the people of Fayetteville Presbytery to the matter of the Red Spring's Tabernacle.

THE INDEPENDENT SEEMS TO THINK that the action of the Southern Assembly in proposing that the Home Mission Committee be constituted a bureau to bring together vacant churches and unemployed ministers is introducing the episcopal order without the name. It suggests that it is a sort of supervision of a diocese. The Independent overlooks that the essential element of episcopacy is power and authority, and that is precisely what is lacking in the Assembly's plan.

THE ALTERED MOTTO.

Oh! the bitter shame and sorrow
That a time could ever be
When I let the Saviour's pity
Plead in vain and proudly answered,
"All of self and none of Thee."

Yet He found me. I beheld him
Bleeding on the accursed tree;
Heard Him pray, "Forgive them, Father!"
And my wistful heart said faintly,
"Some of self, and some of Thee."

Day by day His tender mercy,
Healing, helping, full and free,
Sweet and strong, and oh, so patient!
Brought me lower, while I whispered,
"Less of self, and more of Thee."

Higher than the highest heavens,
Deeper than the deepest sea,
Lord, thy love at last hath conquered;
Grant me now, my soul's desire,
"None of self, and all of Thee."

POPULAR TALKS ON LAW.

Religious Liberty.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE.

Religion, morality and knowledge are generally assumed to be essential to good government. The Ohio constitution so declares.

Religion in the sense here used means the religion of mankind, and not the religion of some one class of men. The constitutions of nearly all the States declare that there shall be free exercise on the part of citizens of religious profession and worship, without discrimination, but it is not to be understood that constitutional provisions looking to this end prohibit legislation concerning religion, or avoid legislation tending to promote religion.

In this country, to all persons is conceded the full and free right to entertain any religious belief, to practice any religious principle, and to teach any religious doctrine which does not violate the laws of morality and property, nor infringe personal rights. The law knows no heresy, it contributes to the support of no dogma, the establishment of no sect. Laws cannot interfere with mere religious belief, they are rather made for the government of actions; practices and not opinions are the subjects of legislative control.

The words "religion" and "religious," although used in the National constitution are not defined in it. The word "religious" is found in Article 6, Clause 3, where it is provided that "no religious test shall be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States." The first amendment reads, "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." The only way to get at the meaning of these provisions is to refer to the history of the times in which they originated. Before the adoption of the constitution the people were taxed for the support of sects to whose tenets they could not subscribe, and punishments were prescribed for non-attendance upon public worship, and even for entertaining heretical opinions. In Virginia, in 1784, the legislature had under consideration a bill establishing provision for teachers of the Christian religion. Strenuous opposition to the bill was developed, and a remonstrance by Mr. Madison, numerously signed, declared that religion, or the duty we owe the Creator was not within the cognizance of civil government. The proposed bill was defeated, and at the same session a bill for establishing religious freedom, drafted by Mr. Jefferson, was passed. About a year later the convention which framed the Federal constitution met. The instrument framed and adopted contained no declaration expressly insuring freedom of religion. At the first session of the first Congress, however, the first amendment was proposed by Mr. Madison, depriving Congress of all legislative power over mere opinion, and leaving it free to reach all nations which are in violation of social duties or subversive of good order. Mr. Jefferson said of the amendment, "It builds a wall of separation between Church and State." It cut off the means of religious persecution, excluded rivalry among Christian sects, and prevented any National Ecclesiastical establishment. The general, if not the universal, sentiment was that Christianity ought to receive encouragement from the State so far as not incompatible with the private rights of conscience, and freedom of religious worship. Any attempt to level all religious, to make it a matter of State policy, to hold all in indifference, would have created universal disapprobation, if not universal indignation, says Mr. Story. This restriction in the Federal constitution of course applied to the United States government alone. It made no provision for protecting the citizens of the respective States in the exercise of religious liberty. That was left to the constitutions and laws of each State.

The provision against religious tests was intended to cut off every pretense of alliance between State and Church, and prevent any sect from securing a monopoly of the offices of government. The constitutions of the States also forbid the establishment of any particular religion. However broad may be the meaning of the words "religious" and "religion," as found in the constitutions of the various States, these words have often been held to refer to the Christian religion. Thus in a will, "religious books" has been held to denote such publications as tend to promote the religion taught by the Christian dispensation; so held in a case in Maine. A Kansas judge declares that the separation of Church and State is not so complete that the State is indifferent to the welfare and prosperity of the Church; that this is a Christian commonwealth and that religion lies at the basis of morality, and that for the purpose of securing the best and most thoroughly extended morality, it is fitting that religion and the Church be recognized. The provisions in the State constitutions vary somewhat in the different States, but all agree in establishing religious equality and not in mere religious toleration.

Judge Cooley enumerates the following things as not lawful under any of the American constitutions: First, any law respecting an establishment of religion; second, compulsory support by taxation or otherwise, of religious institutions; third, compulsory attendance upon religious worship; fourth, restraints upon the free exercise of religion according to the dictates of conscience; fifth, restraints upon the expression of religious belief. Under the second head it may be said that neither can the Legislature favor one sect more than another. In a Louisiana case it was held that a city ordinance granting one sect a privilege denied to others was void. Under the third head, a celebrated Wisconsin case decided that the practice of reading the Bible in the public schools is an act of worship, and that under the provision of the Wisconsin constitution, to the effect that no man shall be compelled to * * * erect or support any place of worship, taxpayers who are compelled to contribute to the erection and support of the common schools, have a right to object to the reading of the Bible therein, and further, that as reading of the Bible in the common schools is religious instruction, the drawing of money from the State treasury for the support of such schools is prohibited. There are several cases to the effect that it is not unconstitutional to permit school-houses to be made use of for religious worship when not wanted for schools. Under the fourth head, it may be said it is not permitted for one to break the law and plead in his defense, that his actions were in the exercise of his religion and according to the dictates of his conscience. Laws are made to govern actions and not opinions. To allow one's opinions to govern would be to make the professed doctrines of religious belief superior to the law of the land. It is no defense to a prosection for bigamy, to plead that polygamous marriage is one of the tenets of the defendant's church.

Some few States still retain in their constitutions, provisions disqualifying for office certain classes of persons on account of their religious belief, or want of belief. By the constitutions of Arkansas, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Texas, a man cannot hold office who denies the being of Almighty God, or the existence of a Supreme Being. On the other hand, the constitutions of Delaware, Maryland, Kentucky and Tennessee, make ineligible to civil office, all persons who exercise the functions of clergymen, priests or teachers of any religious persuasion, society or school.

In some States the common law rule rendering witnesses incompetent for want of religious belief, has been abrogated. Where it still obtains, however, it is said to be no violation of religious liberty. Again, it has been repeatedly held that laws punishing blasphemy and prohibiting ordinary employment on Sunday are not unconstitutional, but Ringgold, the author of "The Legal Aspect of Sunday," says: "It may be doubted if Sunday laws can be supported upon principle, even as an exercise of police power."

CHURCHES OF FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

TABERNACLE AT RED SPRINGS.

At the request of the committee of arrangements, the writer makes to our church officers and members, the following statements of facts, and appeal for help:

After mature consideration the committee, charged by the Presbytery to make arrangements for the annual meeting of the Elders' and Deacons' Institute, have deemed it best to locate it at Red Springs, and to erect there a tabernacle which will accommodate all who attend. The yearly expense of providing a cloth tent for this purpose, and the inadequate protection afforded by such a tent, from inclement weather, have rendered such a plan needful. Steps have been taken to erect a structure 110 feet long by 90 feet wide that will seat 2,000 persons. The estimated cost of such a tabernacle will be about $575. The lowest bid, by a competent contractor, for doing the work is $140.

About $400 have been subscribed by the following churches:

Red Springs, Antioch and Philadelphus, $225; Maxton and Centre, $50; St. Pauls, $50; Laurinburg, $38; Ida Mills and Laurel Hill $16.50; Gulf, $20. Total $394.50.

Six churches in Robeson, three in Richmond and one in Chatham have pledged the amount above mentioned, and we lack about $175 to complete the work. Surely the remaining sixty-five churches in the Fayetteville Presbytery will raise this amount. If the Elders and Deacons' Institute increases the intelligence and efficiency of pastors, elders, deacons and church members it is for the Lord's glory and for the advancement of Christ's Kingdom. Therefore he who deems himself God's steward, may invest money in it not only for his own improvement and enjoyment, but from a desire to honor his Divine Saviour.

We have eight counties in the Presbytery, but the churches in Montgomery and Johnston are few and weak, and we cannot expect much from them. But in Cumberland, Moore and Harnett we have some strong churches and in Richmond and Robeson we have churches and church officers who have not yet given us aid that are quite as able to help this cause as any who have contributed. Then brethren, show that you belong to the Presbytery of Fayetteville, by aiding the committee to do the work assigned them by that body. They are giving time, toil and money to this enterprise.

Do not let their efforts be in vain, because of your lack of co-operation with them. Let every "wise and willing-hearted" church officer in the Presbytery send his contribution, or subscription to this tabernacle payable August 1st or October 1st 1894, to Mr. John McKay, Treasurer, Red Springs, N. C.

A Refuge in Trouble.

This is a time of trouble—of real and serious trouble—of trouble that depresses the spirits and weighs down the heart. We have passed through a winter of trouble, in which many homes have been darkened by unusual anxieties, and many hearts saddened by disasters which were unlooked for and overwhelming. The bright spring has come, and still the trouble continues; the days of sunshine have not chased it away. Painful solicitude touching the future oppresses some, and real want in the present presses sorely on many a household. The savings of the past have melted away, and the spectre of want stands at the door. It is a time of trouble.

At such a time men look to their fellows for help, and Christian men, if their faith is real, look up to God. They turn instinctively to the Word for some portion which may bring comfort. For such sad hearts and there must be some, perhaps, many among our readers, we would write down, and bring before their eyes and thus up to memory, one utterance of Christian faith, containing within it, at least by implication, a clear, sweet, uplifting promise: "In the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion." We are told that, in the days of his wonderful ministry, the saintly McCheyne was wont to give to his people, at times, some promise from God "to hide in their hearts." He might wisely have chosen this text as one to be deeply hidden in the heart, as one always suitable to be fixed in their minds, and made the subject of constantly recurring thought.

Hidden in the pavilion of God! How safe must they be who are within that sacred enclosure! The strifes of earth can never enter there, and violent hands, which do so much ruthless work in the world, can never reach those whom God has hidden securely within. Without, desolations may be everywhere visible, and great disasters overtake men, but they touch not the pavilion in which God's presence abides. Death, the fear of which is to many most real of troubles, when it comes, will only make the security, which they have felt in life, more permanent, and lift them to the immediate presence and the infinite joy of the Lord.

Free from painful solicitude, also, should they be who are hidden in the pavilion of God. Cares may come—they must come—and anxieties may burden the heart, but those who are thus "hidden" know upon whom to cast their cares. Disquietudes may be felt—they are felt to-day in many Christian households—but there is One at whose feet they may be laid. It was a dweller in this pavilion who once said, as he meditated upon the grace promised to him, "O my soul, expect everything from the Lord Jesus. He is encircling thee in his arms of love, ever watching to preserve thee from danger. Thou hast only to whisper, or, rather breathe, complete dependence upon him, and ask him to work for thee, by thee and through thee." Painful solicitude should not vex the hearts of those hidden in the pavilion of God.

How calm should be the lives of all these hidden ones. There is unrest outside in the world, and it seems to increase. Men walk in a vain show, and it seems to increase. Men walk in a vain show, and they are disquieted thereby. A modern writer says that this was a "tired world from the first, but never so tired as now." This weariness should not belong to those who are kept in the secret place of the Most High. For here should be content—that deep abiding content of the soul which is akin to the peace of Christ, and which makes the heart in which it dwells to be at rest. This fits us for the future, and this relieves us of any fear of it; for, as the same writer says, "retirement with God is the only preparation for success, and the only medicine for failure." This is the refuge which calms the heart, and keeps it calm. Enter into this pavilion, O troubled souls! Dwell there, for it is meant to be a covert in the day of storm and distress, and it may prove to be to you as the secret of God's tabernacle, in which you may hide and be at rest.—Presbyterian.

Working and Waiting.

We have ministers of the Gospel in mind. The lives of those who live to be old are divided, as to time, into working and waiting. A young man is brought, as he hopes to Christ and called to preach the Gospel. He spends long years in preparation for his work, then buckles on the harness and starts out as one of those who are commissioned to preach the Gospel to every creature. Matthew 16:15.

He loves his work, gives himself to it and turns aside from every other opening, however inviting, for it.

His aim is not only to preach the truth, the whole truth from Sabbath to Sabbath, in the sacred desk, but as he goes from house to house and wherever he goes during the week. He aims to be, not a preacher only, but a pastor. In thus serving the church the most of Christ's faithful ambassadors fill up life. Many of them go home in the midst of their days, from the midst of their work, while their bow yet abides in strength. If they turn aside from their work, to rest awhile, as the Savior once instructed His Apostles to, it is to recruit their wasted energies for the more vigorous effort in it for time to come. These serve in working and by it.

Others are retired from it by reason of age or infirmities. They are no longer equal to the demands of it. They must serve, if they serve, by waiting and often by suffering as well. They are to wait upon the Lord "all the days of their appointed time till their change come" whether those be few or many.

God's time for His people, whether they be waiting, working or suffering is the best time for them.

And they are to wait patiently, well satisfied that our Father, who knows just what our good requires will not lay upon a child of His one feather's weight more than their individual personal well being demands.

They should wait also with much self examination, meditation and prayer. In the midst of parochial duties every moment needs to be used to the best advantage, but the danger is that at times even the hours that are appropriated to these family or personal duties will be encroached upon. But when one is set aside from work, he is at liberty to spend much time in the exercise of them. And he should avail himself of it, grateful that he is spared to look into his own spiritual state after he has worn himself out in the service of others. God calls upon his own people once and again to consider their ways and complains of them that they do not. There was never more occasion for such a call than during this bustling age in which we are living.

Every good and perfect gift, whether great or small cometh down from above and we should wait upon our Father for our need.

Whether waiting or working we owe it to ourselves to trace them up to Him.

And what encouragement we have to wait upon the Lord! No one ever truly waited upon Him in vain. He will encourage their hearts and strengthen their hands. Their salvation is sure. His grace is sufficient for them whatever the circumstances under which He calls upon them that wait upon him.

In a word, men have not heard nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen what He (God) hath prepared for them that wait for Him. Isa. 64:4.

We may wait upon the best of men and be disappointed. Their circumstances may change and render it impossible for them to do what they had promised. But God's circumstances do not change. He disappoints none whether working or waiting upon Him. High as they may place their expectations, they fall far below what He will do for them. Blessed are all those who wait upon Him in a proper manner. But it requires more grace to wait upon Him in such a manner than it does to work for Him—Rev. R. Taylor, D. D.

REMINISCENCES.

Some other incidents have occurred to me, that may interest the present members of Fayetteville church, and possibly other readers.

ELDERS.

James Banks was a nephew and clerk of the Scotch confectioner, of whom mention has been made. His appearance and deportment so won my regard, that I became much interested in him. As a debating society existed then in Fayetteville, I suggested, that it would be advantageous to him to join it. When he demurred on account of his limited education, I told him, that by diligent reading, he could prepare himself for the discussion; that practice would fit him for "the trade of talking," as Cataline had been made to style it, and that I would aid him as far as I could. He acceded to my wishes, and in no time became a ready debater. Having discovered, by my intimacy with him, that he possessed more thanordinary ability, I urged him to study law. I ought to have urged him to think of a far higher calling, the ministry of reconciliation. But, I was thinking too much of his worldly advantages. He left Fayetteville; went to Wilmington, engaged in business there, for a time; commenced the study of law, returned to Fayetteville; was admitted to the bar, and became a partner of that eminent lawyer, Mr. Eccles.

After I left Fayetteville, in 1840, I knew no more of him, until I met him in Lake City, Florida, whither I went after the terrible battle of Alustee on Ocean Pond, to labor for the wounded in the hospitals. Col. Banks invited me to make his house my home. I spent nearly two months with him, enjoying delightful social intercourse, in the intervals of business. I learned from him that prior to the war, his practice at the bar had yielded $15,000 annually!

I cannot refrain from narrating an anecdote, connected with the matter of singing, of which we were both fond, which he communicated to me, during my sojourn with him. Another member of the bar, Gen. Smith, formerly a minister of P. M. church, often united with Col. Banks in singing, "There is rest for the weary," was at that time both new and popular. Judge Dawking, whom I knew, when he was at S. C. colleges, having heard them sing that hymn, during the sessions of court, at Gainesville, Fla., said: "Do you call that a new tune? Why I have heard it many a time." "You must be mistaken," said Col. Banks. "Well," responded the Judge, "just sing" "Wait for the Wagon," and I will leave you to decide." Accordingly, they struck up that well known melody, and were rather chagrined at discovering that their favorite new tune was little more than a variation of the oftsung melody.

Elder Banks figures in another incident. An elderly widow, member of our church, childless, without any relations, owner of a half dozen fine looking mulatto men, brothers, employed Col. B. to draw up her will. In that instrument she devised $3,000 to each of the men, on condition, that they would settle in a "free State, providing, that, if they were unwilling to do so, they should be sold in Fayetteville. Col. B. was appointed her executor. Accordingly he went to Oberlin, Ohio, to seek information, taking the men with him. He succeeded in selling all, but the youngest of the brothers, who preferred to return to Fayetteville and be sold, rather than stay, as he said, among people, who did not treat colored people as they were treated in the South. The Abolitionists were so indignant, that they determined to get hold of him and prevent his return to Fayetteville. A number of them followed Col. B. and his charge from point to point, but he succeeded in foiling their scheme, and brought his charge back to Fayetteville in safety. After his return, he made arrangements with a friend to become the nominal purchaser of the young man, that the terms of the will might be complied with. The slave was afterwards freed. I may as well state in this connection, that three respectable colored men, mechanics, members of our church, whose family I visited as their pastor, visited Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, with a view to emigration; but, returned, utterly unwilling to leave the South for the North. As an indication of the kind feeling of the people of Fayetteville towards the negro race, I may state an incident, occurring during my pastorate. The hearse bearing the remains of an elderly negro man, who had for years labored as a harness maker, and had accumulated a good deal of property, was followed to the grave by a good many of the prominent citizens of Fayetteville. And yet, at that very time (as since) we were traduced, maligned and villified, in churches, lecture-rooms, school rooms, papers, pamphlets and books, as though we treated negroes as brutes. In further illustration of this matter, it occurs to me as worthy of mention, though not connected with Fayetteville, that Bishop Elliott, of Texas, told me, that when his father, Bishop of Georgia, was about to be buried, the wardens and vestrymen of the Episcopal Church for colored people in Savannah, established by his father, requested of the family the privilege of bearing to the grave the casket, containing the mortal remains of their venerated friend, the Bishop of Georgia. The very long procession, on that mournful occasion was headed by those devoted, colored wardens and vestrymen, conveying with their hands the funeral casket. Bishop Elliot told me, that this incident very deeply affected the family, and their numerous friends. Was the like ever known among "the negrophilists?"

Mr. John McDonald was an elder during my pastorate. He was a carpenter and engaged by Mr. Charles Mallett (I think) to superintend the erection of a factory on Rockfish, seven miles below Fayetteville. All the families around that site for two or three miles, with the single exception of a Universalist, belonged to the Fayetteville congregation. My immediate predecessor, Mr. Douglass, visited that neighborhood once every month, and preached in the afternoon of the Lord's day. Following his worthy example, I rode down once a month, after the morning service; took dinner with Mr. McDonald, and preached to a large congregation, assembled in the workshop, seats of rough plank having been arranged on the day previous by the good elder.

After having pursued this course for some months, the elder, on one of my visits, told me that a minister of another denomination had visited the neighborhood, and had made an appointment to preach at Rockfish, three weeks from that day. Said I: "Brother McDonald, did you ask that minister to make that appointment?" "I did not," was his response. "Did any member of our Church request it?" "Not as I know," he answered. Is this a destitute field?" "Mr. Douglass and yourself occupied it for several years" he rejoined. "Is there any family in the neighborhood, except that of the Universalist, not connected with my pastoral charge?" "Not one," he said. "Well," I remarked, "as no one has any right to preach to my congregation without consulting me, I shall not make the proposed appointment. When the said minister returned to Rockfish and learned from the Universalist, at whose house he lodged, that I had declined to make an appointment for him he was by no means delighted. But he did not make another. Had I, through fear of appearing unamiable, yielded on that occasion, it is somewhat doubtful, whether in the roll of churches in the Presbytery of Fayetteville, the name of Rockfish would have been recorded for so many years. Ministers, as well as others need to regard the words of the Apostle: "He that provideth not for his own, and for those of his household hath denied the faith, and is worse than infidel." Has not our Church lost much by neglecting "the outside rows?"

This incident reminds me of another, which despite the appearance of unamiability, I shall relate. "The Right Reverend, Levi Silliman Ives, Bishop of North Carolina" (there were, as a matter of course, no other Bishops in the State, your humble servant, with divers and sundry others, being nothing more than unordained preachers to conventicles,) caused to be issued a notice, that at a certain time he should visit Fayetteville, and deliver a course of lectures ON CONFIRMATION. Note that. At the time appointed, the Episcopal church was crowded, at least one-half of the congregation being Presbyterians, with three Presbyterian ministers among them. The text of the Right Reverend was Rom. x: 8. "The word of faith which we preach." In his first two lectures, he accommodated the text to an exposition of the views of his own church, as to the matter of preaching, and as to faith. He seemed to overlook the fact, that the mark of punctuation at the end of "faith" is only a semicolon, and that the ninth verse is exegetical of the eighth. This is too simple for the Ritualist. So far nothing was said about CONFIRMATION, the theme of the promised course of lectures.

The topics of third lectures was, "The CORRUPTERS of the faith." The Arians were "handled without gloves." Then the Papists were held up as objects of detestation. Then the Calvinists come in for their share of vituperation. The question flashed across my mind: "What does my duty as a pastor demand? We have come here to listen to a course of lectures on CONFIRMATION, but not to reviling. I must administer a rebuke to that Right Reverend." Accordingly I took up my hat; arose; left the pew; walked very slowly down the aisle, and returned to my room. On the next morning, as I was informed, it was said, on the street, with a chuckle: "The Bishop was too much for the young pastor?" In the afternoon, the chuckling gave way to other emotions. By his action, the young pastor had called attention to the fraud that had been practiced, in the notices, that had been given and to the discourtesy of the Bishop to a large part of his audience. He must have known, that the Episcopalians were a minority of that audience. The young pastor was, of course, severely criticized for his treatment of the Bishop; as he was duly informed. But he was not deterred from further action. He wrote immediately to his friend, Eells, at Wilmington, informing him of these occurrences, and urging him to follow his example, if the Bishop repeated his attacks on the Calvinists in that place. Eells wrote to him, subsequently, that the Bishop omitted his lecture on the corrupters of the faith, when in Wilmington.

Mirabile dictu! The Right Reverend, Levi Silliman Ives, D. As he had long won the canonicals, he was reluctant to lay them aside entirely, and accordingly went to Rome to ascertain the possibility of entering the priesthood, while having a wife. He was assigned to the position of professor, I think, in a Roman Catholic institution in this country. But, he eventually returned to the Protestant Episcopal Church, not however to resume the Bishop's lawn.

I must really stop, lest your readers, worn out with the garrulity of an old man, and animated with the feeling, that stirred the breast of Tully when he delivered his second Philippic against Cataline, should vehemently exclaim: Quo usque tandem abutere nostra patientia.

EDUCATIONAL.

AGNES SCOTT INSTITUTE.

ONE OF THE SOUTH'S MOST POPULAR SCHOOLS.

THE WORK IT IS DOING.

The next session of this noted Presbyterian boarding and day school for young ladies, commences on September 5th, next.

Already applications for catalogues are being received and the promise is of another prosperous year.

The past year has been one of widespread financial depression, but notwithstanding this fact, the Institute has had a prosperous year.

No school in the South has enjoyed more constant and brilliant success than the Agnes Scott, and the causes of this success are evident:

1. Its location in North Georgia is unrivaled; the local surroundings are ideal, Decatur having long been noted for its refined, educated and religious society.
2. A large and accomplished corps of trained and experienced teachers, each member of the faculty having been selected for his or her character and special qualifications for the chair occupied.
3. Thorough work. The utmost effort is made to do thorough teaching, and no careless or antiquated methods are used. None of the officers or teachers have any financial interest in the management of the Institute, and each teacher is able to give her or his entire time and undivided and disinterested attention to the work of instructing. Pupils not making satisfactory progress or not improving their time are not allowed to waste the money of parents by further attendance.

The curriculum is already high. It is rigidly pursued and is being steadily advanced as the school grows in years. It is the desire and aim of trustees and faculty to place the Agnes Scott as the leader in elevating the standard of female education in the South.

The special departments, as music and art, are well equipped and under charge of skilled specialists, are fully abreast of the times and the best schools.

4. The low scale of fees, these having been fixed, not with the view of money making, but simply to cover current expenses, repairs and equipment.
5. The superb buildings were constructed especially for school purposes after the best approved plans. They are all of brick, heated by steam, lighted by electricity, scientifically ventilated and supplied throughout with hot and cold water and fire hose.

Applications for catalogues, general information, etc. Should be addressed to

FOREIGN MISSION COMMITTEE NOTES.

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States met in the Secretary's office, Nashville, Tenn., on July 2d at 9.15 a. m.

The Treasurer's report showed the collections for the month of June to be $19,120.40. This was a gain on the collections of last June of $3,502.39. The collections for the year to date are $40,104.34, being a gain on the collections for last year to the same date, of $1 318.41.

The committee recognizes that the enlargement of our responsibilities by sending out new missionaries must be a matter of faith. We also understand that it must be the faith of the Church, and not merely the faith of the Committee, upon which the responsibility is taken. We interpret this handsome increase in the June collection as an evidence that the Church has faith to go forward in the work; and so the Committee has authorized Mr. Hugh White, of Virginia, Miss M. B. Torrance, of North Carolina, and Dr. J. R. Wilkinson and family, of Greenville, South Carolina, to make arrangements to go out in the month of August.

Dr. Wilkinson goes as the first medical missionary sent by the children of the Church. The children's contribution to date, from Children's Day and other special collections, amounts to $2,628.33.

A letter was read from a kind friend, whose name we are not permitted to publish, offering to provide outfit, and support for a missionary to China, for a period of three years The offer was gladly and thankfully accepted by the Committee; and we hope to find some one to send upon this generous offer before the end of this year.

The Committee was pleased to have a visit and an interesting address from the Rev. C. A. Tron, who is travelling in this country in the interest of the Waldensian Church in Itely.

Miss Elizabeth Talbot, of Versailles, Ky. sister of Mrs. Dr. Venable, of Sinchang, China, was appointed as a missionary to China, to go out as soon as the way is clear.

Letters were read from Miss Kemper, of Lavras, Brazil; Rev. J. W. Davis, of Soochw, China; Miss E. B. French, of Hangcho, China; Rev. W. C. Porter, of Ceara, Brazil, giving information and reporting an encouraging condition of affairs in their several fields.

The Committee were grieved to learn that Rev. G. W. Painter had been peremptorily ordered by his physician to return to this country, on account of failing health. Mr. Painter is now in California. It is hoped that he will soon find health and refreshment in that invigorating climate and be prepared to return to his work.

It was thought best, owing to the unsatisfactory provisions of the present law in this State concerning corporations, to postpone the matter of having the Committee incorporated for the present.

A circular letter was adopted to be addressed to all the Missions, on the subject of self-support in the native churches.

It was also thought best to defer the publication of a children's magazine until the children are back from their summer outings.

After a very pleasant meeting, notwithstanding the hotness of the day, the Committee adjourned to meet again on the second Monday in August, at nine o'clock a. m.

S. H. CHESTER,
Secretary.

First Presbyterian Church, Concord :—Yesterday was our communion, quite an interesting season; ten members added. Rev. H. D. Lequeux, of Poplar Tent church, assisted the pastor, preaching several excellent and attractive sermons.

Spruce Pine and Banner Elk · Rev. R. P. Pell writes: We have had a most remarkable series of meetings at Spruce Pine. Bro. W. R. Gales has preached with great unction and deepened his place in the hearts of our people. There have been fifty professions of faith and twenty-one accessions to the church with several more to come and many will join other churches.

Our school at Banner's Elk is flourishing under the management of Messrs. Houpe and Stinson.

Grier's Church, Caswell County :—This church had an unusually interesting service on the first Sunday of July. The pastor, Rev. Wm. S. Campbell, preached to the large congregation which usually greets him there, received two members into the church on certificate, and baptized one infant. The congregation then elected two additional ruling elders. Mr. G. S. Walker, who had been a faithful elder in this church before his removal from this neighborhood a few years ago, was re-elected, as he has come back to cast in his lot with this church again. The other was Mr. R. L. Mitchell, a young man whose father was for years an honored elder in this church, and who has gone to his reward.

The ordination and installation services will take place on the first Sunday of August, when a protracted meeting will be begun in this church.

Resignation of Dr. Sampson :—Rev. Alfred T. Graham, Synod's Agent of Foreign Missions writes from Davidson, July 9th.: I regret exceedingly to have to confirm the report that our Field Secretary of Foreign Missions Dr. Sampson has accepted a call to another field of labor. I have in my hands a letter which I send herewith announcing his decision to accept the Principalship of the Fredericksburg Collegiate Institute and to enter upon his new work the middle of July. I am sure that this announcement will call forth universal regret from the people of our State. He has done splendid service for Christ and has certainly given all his time and energy and ability to the duties imposed upon him by the Synod of North Carolina. We all have learned to love him "for his work's sake" not only, but because of his own Christian character and worth as a man and a scholar. May God bless him in this important work to which he has been called by the Church. Let the prayers of God's people follow him that he may be given all wisdom and prudence and favor with the people in his effort to lead to a higher place of usefulness in this new enterprise of our beloved Church.

In his letter to Mr. Graham, advising of his desire to retire from the Field Secretaryship, Dr. Sampson writes :

"I cannot omit to express the sincere regret which I feel at the thought of leaving this State, and severing relations with good brethren who have been such kind and appreciative co-workers. These have been delightful months of work and I can only hope and pray that the seed sown in weakness may continue to bear fruit to the glory of our Lord and Master.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.)

Maxton :—Rev. Dr. H. G. Hill writes: We had the pleasure last Sabbath of receiving ten children of pious parents to full church privileges at Maxton. They were from ten to twenty years of age. They did not join the church but were reared in it, and their conversion was due, not merely to public religious instruction, but to faithful parental and Sabbath-school training. Some of these young persons professed faith in Christ during a recent meeting held here by Secretary L. A. Coulter.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Red Springs :—Rev. S. M. Rankin writes, that seventeen have been received into the church during the last two weeks. Red Springs has had a general awakening of interest in religion. The Methodists had a good meeting of ten days duration, and at the close of their meeting Rev. W. M. Eldridge came and preached a week for us. His preaching was fresh and vigorous and made lasting impressions for good.

DR. HENRY C. ALEXANDER.

We announced last week the death of Dr. Alexander and promised to give further information this week. We find the following in the Central Presbyterian—just what is desirable :

The Rev. Dr. Henry Carrington Alexander, so well known and so beloved in Virginia, and throughout the Southern Church, died in New York City, on the morning of Thursday, June 28th. He had reached the home of friends in the city but a few days before, and was at once taken sick, apparently prostrated from heat. He became unconscious very soon, and no skill of physician availed to restore him. He passed into his rest very quietly on Thursday morning last, surrounded by his brothers and other friends. The interment was on Saturday afternoon, among the many illustrious dead, in the cemetery at Princeton,

Dr. Alexander was born in Princeton, September 27th, 1835, the son of the Rev. Dr. James Waddell Alexander, and grandson of Dr. Archibald Alexander, a native of Rockbridge county, Va., founder of a distinguished family, and one of the most revered names in the Presbyterian Church in this country. His mother was a daughter of the late Dr. George Cabell, of Richmond, Va., and sister of Dr. James Cabell, so long a Professor in the University of Virginia. He graduated from the college of New Jersey in 1854, and from the Princeton Theological Seminary in 1856. He was a class-mate in the seminary of the Rev. Dr. W. C. Roberts, of the Presbyterian Home Mission Board, Dr. Sheldon Jackson, now of Alaska, and of the late Dr. Francis Bowman, of Virginia.

Coming to Virginia, he was ordained by Roanoke Presbytery, September 3rd, 1861, and was installed pastor of the church at Charlotte C. H., where he labored until 1869. He was then elected Professor of Biblical Literature and Interpretation of the New Testament, in the Union Theological Seminary, Hampden Sidney, Va. For this position he had eminent qualifications, and to it he devoted himself with zeal and pleasure.

From the Seminary, he withdrew in 1891, after an honored and useful work, in which he left fine impression on the lives of a great number of ministers. Retiring from the seminary, Dr. Alexander found a congenial and useful work in the pulpit of the church at Oakland, Maryland, and in this work he spent his closing years.

He was made a Doctor of Divinity in 1870 by Hampden Sidney College, and a Doctor of Laws in 1891, by the same college, which knowing him well esteemed and honored him most highly.

He was an active member of the Synod of Virginia, and took valuable part in the Assemblies of 1866 at Memphis, of 1874 at Columbus, Miss., and of 1882 at Atlanta.

His great distinction among us was his extensive and accurate scholarship his elegant culture of mind through a wide range of reading, much intelligent travel, and a very large association with people of note and interest. From his sympathetic pen, came the charming life of his uncle, Dr. J. Addison Alexander, published in 1870; and numerous articles for reviews and papers. For years the notices of books and current literature by Dr. Alexander in the Presbyterian Quarterly have been a bright and attractive feature in that review.

As a pastor Dr. Alexander was greatly respected and beloved by the congregation and the community, having an unfailing fund of sincere kindness and Christian sympathy. He was a Christian gentlmen among the troubled and the poor, and to servants. As a preacher, his sermons were the production of careful thought, and were adorned with much literary grace and imaginative power.

In the somewhat secluded social circle of Hampden Sidney, he was for twenty years the centre and the light. His home was the example of refined and cordial hospitality; and of all assemblies, social, literary and musical, he was the life, as he now remains the brightest of memories.

Many homes in the land welcomed his visits; and many hearts will mourn that they are not again to greet him at the door. Children were an especial delight to him and to their pleasure he gave himself with zest. A rare scholar and eloquent preacher of the gospel a charming correspondent and a dear friend he was. Not at all beyond the prime of his powers and usefulness, he is suddenly taken from us to the greetings and assemblies above.

[From the Central Presbyterian.]

REV. DR. WM. DINWIDDIE.

On Saturday, June 30th, about 12 m., Dr. William Dinwiddie died at his home Greenwood, Albemarle county, Va. The daily papers tell that at 10 a. m., he was apparently well, chatting pleasantly with friends. Returning from the postoffice, with his mail matter, he went to his room complaining of feeling unwell. He said to his wife, "The Lord's will be done; the end is near at hand." And at once he had ended "the life that now is" and begun "that which is to come."

The shock comes to us all with more than doubled pain and solemnity. Another strong man has fallen, and a very striking personality is suddenly removed from our midst.

Dr. Dinwiddie was born March 7th, 1830, in Campbell county, Va. He was a student at Hampden Sidney College, 1845-'7, and afterwards taught in Botetourt and Buckingham counties. He was associated for a time with the Rev. J. Henry Smith, now of Greensboro, N. C., in the Samuel Davies Institute at Halifax C. H., Va. Entering the University of Virginia in 1851, he became, in 1854, a distinguished M. A. He was for two years an assistant Professor of Greek in the University, and for one year Professor of Greek. He established the Brookland school, Albemarle county, Virginia, in 1856, which he conducted for twelve years with ability and success. Serving as a ruling elder in Lebanon church, he now began preparation for the ministry, and under the direction of Rev. Dr. W. H. McGuffey, of the University, he studied theology.

He was licensed by West Hanover Presbytery in 1854, and in 1866 was ordained and installed pastor of Lebanon church. In 1870 he became pastor of the First church, Lexington, Ky., and in 1874 he took charge of the Second Presbyterian church of Alexandria, Va. He remained in this pastorate for ten or eleven years, when he retired to enter more fully into the evangelistic work, for which he had such eminent fitness, and in which he was so greatly blessed. Into this work he entered with great zeal. He became known and esteemed far and wide through his visits to the churches. Many were the precious seasons of awakening attending his ministry; and a great company in all the churches will remember him with peculiar affection, as their spiritual father.

With a fine presence, and melodious voice, with a clear and simple style, and an earnest delivery, with profound respect for the word he handled and a rare gift of scholarly analysis and exposition, he was a noble preacher of the gospel of reconciliation.

Dr. Dinwiddie was a consecrated servant of the Lord Jesus, a gracious man of pleasing manners, who made his home a sanctuary of all things good and true, and his life a witness for Him, for whose glorious appearing he waited.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

On Sunday last as the Steamer D. Murchison was returning from Carolina Beach after having left some passengers there she took fire when about three miles from Wilmington. The flames spread rapidly under influence of a strong head wind and with greatest difficulty the captain got his wife and child into the life boat. The captain remained on board until the last, and then with the crew was taken ashore in boats which had put out from the shore. The boat was totally destroyed. She was built in 1869 and was insured for $6,000. She was principally owned in Fayetteville and for the past quarter century had been running on the Cape Fear river between that place and Wilmington. Within the past month she had been engaged in making schedule trips to Carolina Beach.

Henderson Gold Leaf: Many people are refusing to eat blackberries this year. This is especially true of some of the colored folks. A report has been put out that the locusts have laid eggs on this popular berry and made them dangerous to eat. In fact, several deaths have been attributed to this cause, although such rumors lack substantiating. —— Notwithstanding the slow growth of crops on account of the cool weather during the spring months the prospects in this county are generally good. Cotton, corn, tobacco and all growing crops are doing well.

Salisbury Herald: Eight years ago a curbing of good marble an inch and a half thick, was placed in the spring at Connelly's. It was taken out last week because the water had eaten away so much of the stone as to make it not fit for us. We saw part of the curbing this morning and were surprised to see the remarkable effects of the water. All of the stone that had been under water was eaten away and parts of it were less than a quarter of an inch thick. The waters of Connelly Springs are said to be a cure for stone in the bladder and its action on the marble curbing is proof indisputable that it will do so.

The great railroad strike has been the all-absorbing topic for several days, It was feared there would be bloodshed and incendiarism in Chicago last Sunday. No great damage was done at that time and place. But a day or two previously hundreds of cars had been burned with tens of thousands of dollars of merchandise, and some persons were killed by the firing of a company of State troops. President Cleveland proclaimed martial law in Chicago on Monday.

Word has been received at Victoria, British Columbia, that on June 17th the village of Honmara, adjoining Yokohoma, was destroyed by fire, upwards of 1,000 houses having been consumed, and three days afterwards the heaviest earthquake experienced in Yokohama and Tokio since 1880 occurred. In both places there has been loss of lives and great destruction of property.

They all returned the protests except the British minister who is said to be a friend of the queen.

WHAT A WORD WILL DO.

Byron reminds us that a word is enough to rouse mankind to mutual slaughter. Yes, there is power in a word—Marathon, for instance, Waterloo, Gettysburgh, Appomatox. Great battles these, but what a great battle is going on in many a sick and suffering body. In yours, perhaps. Take courage. You can win. Call to your aid Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It acts powerfully upon the liver, cleanses the system of all blood taints and impurities; cures all humors from a common Blotch or Eruption to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially potent in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings" and Enlarged Glands.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure permanently constipation, biliousness, sick headache and indigestion.

A Chance To Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches, a year old fresh as when picked. I use the California Cold Process; do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last week I sold directions to over 120 families; anyone will pay a dollar for directions, when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such, and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and complete directions, to any of your readers, for eighteen two-cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc., to me.

Third Quarter.—Lesson IV.

July 22d.—Flight into Egypt.

Matt. ii. 13-23. Commit vss. 13-15.

Golden Text. The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in. Ps. cxxi. 8.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. There is no proper introductory work to be done on this lesson. It follows in immediate connection with the last lesson and is narrated only by Matthew.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: the vision, the command, and the warning, vs. 13; the prompt, cautious and persevering obedience, vss. 14, 15; the slaughter of the innocents, vs. 16; the permission and the return, vs. 19-21; altered plans, vss. 22, 23; fulfilled prophecies, vss. 15, 17, 18, 23.

Third Step. Study with your helps any points needing explanation:

Vs. 13. Appeared to Joseph in a dream. As we saw in studying Jacob's dream, so here: it was not merely that Joseph dreamed the angel appeared, but that the angel really did appear through the medium of the dream. This was the second time an angelic message had come to Joseph thus Matt. i. 20.

Into Egypt. Consulting your map you will see that it was the nearest country that was beyond Herod's jurisdiction; Bethlehem being south of Jerusalem, they could reach it without passing through Herod's capital; the road was easy and much travelled; and there was a large Jewish population in Egypt.

Vs. 14. When he arose. Properly as in the R. V. "And he arose and took." The obedience was immediate—he did not wait for the customary hour of arising. Readers of Ben Hur should be cautioned against the dull, phlegmatic character given Joseph. There is nothing in Scripture to justify it. He appears throughout as a man of most delicate feelings, tender consideration, earnest piety and prompt action—in all respects fit for the lofty honor of being the guardian of the infant Saviour.

Vs. 15. Until the death of Herod, which occurred about April 1, B. C. 4, or a few weeks, probably, after they had gone thither.

By the prophet, Hos. xi. 1. The relation of this prophecy to the event will be treated below.

Vs. 16. Mocked, i. e., his command set at nought and his craft outwitted. Nothing makes crafty men so angry as to be taken in their own craftiness.

Slew all their children, i. e., all the boys. In entire accord with the character of Herod—see last lesson. A few weeks afterwards when approaching his horrible end, he gave orders that at his death a number of prominent Jews should be put to death so that there should be some mourning at his death.

The coasts thereof; old English for the environs, or surrounding country.

Two years old and under, etc. Not indicative of the age of Jesus, but of the time the star appeared. Even here a liberal allowance was probably made on the side of cruelty and—as he thought—certainly. Supposing the men had given him anything upwards of a year, he would not be wise about birthdays, but would order all in their second year or under to be slain. "Two years old" did not indicate with them as with us those who were in their third year. From the population at Bethlehem the number is estimated at between 20 and 30.

Vs. 17. Jeremy the prophet, ch. xxxi. 15. See below.

Vs. 19. Behold, etc. The permission to return must come from the same source and in the same way as the command to go.

Vs. 20. They are dead. "They" is probably a generic, or indefinite plural, equivalent to saying. Not only is Herod dead, but there is no further danger from that source. But it may refer definitely to Antipater, Herod's son, who was executed by Herod five days before his own death, and who as the heir, may have concerned with his father in the massacre at Bethlehem.

Vs. 22. Archelaus did reign. Appointed king of Judea, Samaria and Idumea by the will of Herod and so proclaimed by the Roman army in Judea. Augustus, however, refused to confirm the title, and gave him only the title of Ethnarch. Joseph, however, would hear the news as it was first proclaimed. Augustus' decision would only be known weeks later.

Afraid to go thither. Judea was the part of Israel first reached from Egypt; the expression "go thither" evidently refers to his intention of returning to Bethlehem, and carries the further idea that he was afraid to settle anywhere in Judea.

Warned of God in a dream. The fourth Divine communication to Joseph recorded. This time it is not said that it was by an angel.

Into the parts of Galilee, i. e., the country of Galilee. It was the northern part of ancient Israel, separated from Judea by Samaria. He "turned aside" to reach it—that is passed around the southern end of the Dead Sea to avoid going through Jerusalem and continned his journey northward on the east side of the Jordan.

Vs. 23. A city called Nazareth. Introduced by the indefinite article because not previously mentioned in this narrative. The choice of a city was apparently left to his own judgment. Divine revelations are not given except where needed. He naturally chose Nazareth because, as we know from Luke, it was their former home. He had gone up to Bethlehem with no intention of remaining, but the birth of Jesus and the circumstances and prophecies that pointed Him out as the promised King evidently made them think that they ought to remain in Bethlehem the royal city.

By the prophets. Note the plural, and compare with vss. 5, 15, 17 and ch. i. 22, where the singular is used. There is no single, definite prophecy, He shall be called a Nazarene. See below.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson and compare it with ours:

SUMMARY. Immediately after the departure of the Magi an angel warns Joseph to take Jesus and Mary into Egypt to avoid the wrath of Herod. He arises by night and at once takes his departure, and sojourns in Egypt, thus fulfilling prophecy. Herod getting no further information from the Magi uses the information that he has, and determined to make thorough work orders the destruction of all the boys in and around Bethlehem that are in the first or second year, filling the region with mourning like that of which Jeremiah speaks. Herod dying shortly after, Joseph is commanded to return, but fearing to remain in Judea on account of Archelaus, he does not return to Bethlehem as he had intended, but is directed by God to Galilee where he settles in his former home of Nazareth, again fulfilling prophecy.

Fifth Step. Study the topics suggested by the Lesson in the light of God's Word.

Interpretations of prophecy,

There are three instances of fulfilled prophecy claimed in the lesson: two, on examination, seem to refer to past events in the history of Israel, and the other is nowhere found in the O. T. Is, therefore, N. T. interpretation of prophecy capricious and unreliable? Rather do we find that it is based on certain deep, fixed, underlying principles:

a. Identification between Israel and Israel's Messiah, so that whatever is true of one must in some sense be true of the other—illustrated in ve. 15 and Hos. xi. 1. Compare the promise to Abraham Gen. xii. 3, partly fulfilled by Israel but pre-eminently by Christ; the "Servant" prophecy of Isaiah, xlii. 1; xliv. 1. Much of this refers to Israel, but Israel failing to do its part (xlii, 19), the Messiah comes forward (xlix. 1) and says that the Lord has given Him Israel's work (xlix. 3, etc).

b. The typical character of events in Israel's history—illustrated in vss. 17, 18 and Jer. xxxi. 15-17. The captives from Jerusalem were assembled at Ramah (Jer. xl. 1) before being carried away to Babylon. The grief was so great that the prophet seems to see Rachel rise from her tomb in Bethlehem and weep with them. With that captivity the hope of the nation seems to be destroyed, but God assures them of a restoration. So in the wail of the mothers at Bethlehem Matthew sees that same cry repeated—with more reason. May not Rachel well rise and weep when the hope of Israel is destroyed by the destruction of "Him that is born King of the Jews." But God has preserved that Seed, and He shall return, bringing, in the end, all the lost of Israel with Him.

c. General statements of the prophets are summed up in single sentences—illustrated in vs. 23. It is repeatedly said in the prophets that the Messiah should be Nezer, a Branch Is. iv. 2; xi. 1; Jer. xxiii. 5; xxxiii. 15; Zech. vi. 12—when the idea is always the exaltation of that which was at first lowly and insignificant. Once He is even called "a root out of dry ground," Is. liii. 2. The name Nazareth was no mere coincidence but still carried with it the idea of lowliness and insignificance (John i. 46). God had aforetime fitted the place for the event. He was not to be known as of the royal city but to be called a Nazarene. Compare for a similar general statement Luke xviii 31-33.

Sixth Step. Study out and endeavour to appropriate the practical lessons of the lesson.

1. The vanity of fighting against God—Ps. ii.
2. God's watchful care of His own. Golden Text. But were not those who perished His own, too? Yes, for
3. God has a mission for every life—the shortest as well as the longest. The mission of these infants, by satisfying the vengeance of the king, was to protect the Infant Saviour, that He might in turn lay down His live for them and for all the world. And
4. God's Heaven is always open to little children.—Matt. xviii. 10, 14. And especially these, for
5. Those who suffer with and for Him are glorified with Him. Rom. viii. 17.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

This will depend in this lesson, especially, upon the age of the class. With advanced scholars the broad principles of the Bible Reading should be brought out, with others the simple lessons of the Sixth Step. These last should not be ignored by any, and with all the exact facts should be thoroughly mastered.

Prize Questions.

77. What other prophecy about Israel in Hosea was fulfilled in Christ?
78. How many Herods, or others of the family of Herod, are mentioned in the Gospels and Acts?

(Be careful not to give as different ones those that are mentioned under different names or in different texts. Number each and give name and title, and reference. Thus: 1 Herod the Great, King of Judea, etc., Matt. ii. 1.)

In Concord, N. C., June 24th, 1894, Mrs. M. E. FOARD, relict of the late Maj. R. W. Foard, in the 75th year of her age.

From youth a professing Christian and for over fifty-one years a devoted member of the Presbyterian church of Concord—this "mother in Israel" came to the grave in a full age, "like as a shock of corn cometh in his season." Mrs. Foard was a decided Christian, an earnest, successful church worker, a model woman. Her vigorous mind well trained by religion and culture, possessed faculties both intellectual and moral, admirably harmonized, the result being an eminently beautiful and elevated character and a very useful and successful life. While wholly distrustful of self her repose on the love of Christ was most child-like, and the peace that filled her heart made her face to shine, while the charity that flowed from her life made it a benediction. All who came under her gentle influence felt the charm and benefit of it, and "her children arise up and call her blessed." As a faithful Christian mother, she enjoyed the privilege of welcoming into the fold of the Redeemer all of her surviving children and some of her grand children, several of her sons being honored officers in the Church of God. All who knew this good woman will testify to her strong faith, her cheerfulness under trials and discouragements, her unselfishness, her devotion to duty, her fidelity to trust. She never grew out of sympathy with the young, she love them and they loved her. In the weary days of weakness and suffering allotted to her, she cheerfully and patiently "endured as seeing Him who is invisible" and so cordial was her welcome and so bright her countenance that few of the friends who visited her were aware of her sufferings. When at last the end came she sweetly fell asleep and passed painlessly and peacefully into the "rest that remaineth."

Her departure leaves a great blank behind her, but it is a blank filled with precious memories and abundant hopes.

"As a cloud of the sunset slowly melting in heaven,
As a star that is lost when the daylight is given,
As a glad dream of slumber which awakens in bliss,
She has passed to the world of the holy, from this,
She hath passed, but oh! sweet as the flow'rets shall bloom,
From her last lonely dwelling, the dust of her tomb
The charm of her brightness as heaven's own breath,
Shall rise like an incense from darkness and death."

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

At a meeting of the session of the Oxford Presbyterian church held July 2d, 1894, the following minutes were adopted:

The committee appointed by the session to prepare a minute relative to the death of Maj. T. B. VENABLE, beg leave to report as follows:

T. B. Venable, son of Hon. A. W. and Mrs. Isabella Brown Venable, was born Dec. 9th, 1825, and died, after a lingering and painful illness, June 23d, 1894. He was graduated with distinction at Hampden Sidney College about the year 1853; studied law and settled in Oxford to practice his profession. While at college, he professed faith in Christ and united himself with the church of his father's, being a lineal descendant of the Huguenots on his father's side, and from the Scotch Irish on the mother's.

In the year 1867, he was made an elder in the Oxford church and continued in the active duties of that office until his death.

Resolved 1st. That we record, with sincere sorrow, the death of our late brother and associate, in the eldership of the church, Major Thomas Brown Venable.

2d. Nevertheless, that we bow with humble submission, to the will of our great Captain, by whom he has been summoned to his reward.

3d. That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved family, and commend them to the God of all grace, comfort and peace.

4th. That this minute be spread on the records of the church.

5th. That a copy be sent to the family of our deceased brother, and that a copy be published in the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN and the Public Ledger.

In Reidsville, N. C., June 26th, 1894, Col. JAMES IRVIN, the senior elder of the Presbyterian church of Reidsville.

Col. Irvin was born June 12th, 1819, and was a son of George Irvin, who was born in Scotland. At an early age he became a Christian, and was respected, beloved and honored unto the end, by all men in his community as a true servant of God. In 1847 he was ordained an elder in the Presbyterian church, and served the church continuously in this capacity, at Speedwell, Wentworth and Reidsville for forty-seven years. And for a time he served his county as clerk of the Superior Court, and as Senator in the State Legislature.

His life was a constant example of the truth and beauty and power of religion. We loved him much, and his loss is deeply and widely felt; but our loss is his eternal gain. His end came peacefully, having retired at night in his usual health, and fallen asleep, he awoke no more!

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!
"From which none ever wakes to weep!

PASTOR.

The following was adopted at a full meeting of the session July 1st, 1894:

IN MEMORIAM!

WHEREAS, Our Heavenly Father in His most holy and wise providence, has been pleased to remove from our midst by death, our beloved brother and co-presbyter, Col. JAMES IRVIN. Therefore, be it resolved by the session of the Reidsville church:

1. That in the death of Bro. Irvin the Presbyterian church of Reidsville has not only lost her senior elder and one of her most earnest, and faithful officers and teachers, but also one of her most exemplary and devout Christians.

2. That while we most humbly bow to the will of God, we, the session of this church, will ever cherish in memory, the wise counsel, the godly example, the faithful service, the earnest prayers, and the many noble qualities our brother possessed as a true servant of God.

3. That we tender our heart-felt sympathy to his sorrowing wife and daughter and sons, with the prayer that the Lord will lift upon them the light of His countenance, and give them comfort in the blessed assurance that our beloved brother "has kept the faith, fought the good fight, won the crown, and has been called to the marriage supper of the Lamb."

4. That a blank page in the Records of this church be dedicated to his memory, and that a copy of these resolutions be furnished the bereaved family and the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN for publication.

Signed by the session: Rev. D. I. Craig, J. M. Andrews, R. P. Richardson, Jr., R. M. Denny, S. H. Boyd, J. N. Craig.

At his residence in Cumberland county, N. C., April 17th, DUNCAN J. MUNROE, in the 61st year of his age, and in the midst of his usefulness.

Numerous hearts were saddened as they learned of his sudden decease. By the kind emotions of his heart, and the willing services of his life, he greatly endeared himself to the community in which he lived. A faithful soldier, a true and worthy citizen, an humble and faithful Christian and church officer, he will be held in grateful remembrance. To be good and to do good are the highest qualities of manhood.

An affectionate wife and four promising children mourn their irreparable loss. May God's grace sustain them.

At her son's, in Mills River, on the 31st of May, 1894, in her 58th year, Mrs. TERESA A. BURGIN. For some days she had been unwell when she was stricken with paralysis from which in ten days she fell asleep. Rarely that death takes from us one of a purer life and a higher type of piety.

At the age of 18 she joined the Presbyterian church and from that time she grew in grace and ripened in fitness until she was fully ready to go.

"'Tis sweet to think that He who tries
The silver, takes His seat
Beside the fire which purifies,
Lest too intense a heat,
Raised to consume the base alloy,
The precious metal, too, destroy.
"'Tis blessedness to know that He,
The piece He has begun,
Will not forsake till He can see
The gracious work well done—
An image by its brightness shown,
The perfect likeness of His own."

FOR THE FAMILY.

WATCH, MOTHER!

Mother! watch the little feet
Climbing o'er the garden wall,
Rounding through the busy street,
Ranging cellar, shed and hall.
Never count the moments lost,
Never mind the time it costs;
Little feet will go astray,
Guide them, mother, while you may.

Mother! watch the little hand
Picking berries by the way,
Making houses in the sand,
Tossing up the fragrant hay.
Never dare the question ask,
"Why to me this weary task?"
These same little hands may prove
Messengers of light and love.

Mother! watch the little tongue
Prating eloquent and wild,
What is said and what is sung,
By the happy, joyous, child.
Catch the word while yet unspoken;
Stop the vow before 'tis broken;
This same tongue may yet proclaim
Blessings in a Saviour's name.

Mother! watch the little heart
Beating soft and warm for you;
Wholesome lessons now impart;
Keep, O keep, that young heart true.
Extricating every weed,
Sowing good and precious seed;
Harvest rich you then may see,
Ripening for eternity.

Items for Lady Readers.

The atmosphere has been full of "commencement echoes," and sweet girl graduates have been turned out by the dozens from our schools and colleges. Nothing is more interesting than to watch these happy eager girls as they stand on "the brink where the brook and the river meet" stretching out their hands for the dainty blue-ribboned diploma, that may mean so much or so little to them. One hundred and forty-six of these bright girls will graduate this week from the city high schools, and as "Woman's World and Work" feels a peculiar interest in the future lives of these young hearts, now all aglow with the early bloom and the mornig dew, the question occurred to her, "What becomes of the large army of girls who each year are dubbed graduates and go forth from their alma maters to take their places as part of this great commonwealth?" And so this department put this pertinent question to many of the class of '94, "What plans have you mapped out for your future?" And the almost invariable answer came, that they were going to be teachers, typewriters, stenographers, writers, clerks in stores, etc. Some few were going to take up a higher course of education, and a few others laughed and said that they were going "to make their debut next season and have a real good time before settling down in life." But one demure little maiden who was laughing interviewed during a ride the other afternoon in a down-town street car answered promptly: "I'm going to be a housekeeper, and learn how to sew, and cook and keep the children clean, and papa's buttons sewed on all right, and the house neat and orderly. You see, mamma says that she thinks that I am too young to go into society, and as I have no occasion to go out in the world and make my living just now, yet the time may come when I will have to do so; and I do think it is so much nicer for a woman to select an employment which will keep her at home than that which will bring her into contact with the world. You see I have been reading the papers a great deal lately, and it appears to me that housekeepers have so much trouble from all the talk I hear about the servant-girl problem. Now it seems to me that if some of us girls who have to earn a livelihood would devote some time to learning the art of good housekeeping they could obtain better paying positions than if they entered the crowded fields of teaching, typewriting and stenography. I am sure any good family would give at least $25 or $30 a month for a good housekeeper, and board and lodging you know counts for something. Another thing, the housekeeper enters the family as a member, and not as a menial; she is clothed and fed and protected, and surely is not this much better than to be brushed up against the world, which a woman's sensitive nature makes such an unequal battle on her part. Oh, yes! I have quite decided. I am going to be a good housekeeper, and learn how to make home happy. And really, dear reader, could any mission be nobler, any ambition purer and truer, than that which this little high school graduate has set for herself? There was an earnest ring in her voice and a happy look in her eye that showed that she meant what she said, and pondering on her fine, true purpose, the old lines kept running through my mind, "Home staying hearts are best," and "The hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world."—N. O. Picayune.

Things Useful.

To keep cheese from molding or from drying, wrap it in a cloth damped with vinegar, and keep it in a covered dish.

Apple sponge is made by covering half a box of gelatine with cold water and allowing it to stand for half an hour; then pour over it half a pint of boiling water, and stir until dissolved. Press a pint of stewed apples through a sieve and mix with the gelatine; add a pound of sugar, and stir until it melts; squeeze in the juice of two lemons; turn the mixture into a tin pin; set on ice until it begins to thicken. Beat the whites of three eggs stir into the apples; beat all together until thick and cold. Pour into a mould and set on ice to harden. Serve with whipped crem.

Bread Pudding with Cherries.—Put one cupful (one-half pint) milk in a double boiler. When hot add two ounce of stale bread crumbs, a grated rind of lemon, one tablespoonful butter. Cook ten minutes. Beat two eggs, without separating; add four table-spoonfuls sugar and another cup of milk; add these now to the boiler, then turn into a greased baking dish, sprinkle with dried cherries and bake in a moderate oven until a golden brown. Serve hot.

Cream Raspberry Tart.—Line a dish with paste and fill with raspberries, made very sweet with powdered sugar. Cover with paste, but do not pinch it down at the edges. When done, lift the top crust, which should be thicker than usual, and pour upon the fruit the following mixture: One small cup of milk—half cream, if you can get it—heated to boiling; whites of two eggs, beaten light and stirred into the boiling milk; one tablespoonful of white sugar, one half teaspoonful cornstarch wet in cold milk. Boil these ingredients three minutes; let them get perfectly cold before you put them into the tart. Replace the top crust, and set the pie aside to cool. Sprinkle sugar over the top before serving. You can make strawberry cream tart in the same manner.

THE CHRISTIAN'S

SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal

Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

WHAT MOTHER SAYS.

Now here's a hand-glass, let me try
If I can this time see
Just one of all those funny things
My mother sees in me.

She says my eyes are violets—
And what she says is true—
But I think they are just two eyes;
Don't they look so to you?

She says that my lips are cherries red,
And makes b'lieve take a bite;
They never look like that to me—
But mother's always right.

She says each cheek is like a rose;
And this I surely know.
I never would believe it—but
What mother says is so.

She says my teeth are shining pearls;
Now that's so very queer;
If some folks said it, why, I'd think—
But then, 'twas mother dear.

I only see a liftle girl,
With hair that's rather wild,
Who has two eyes, a nose and mouth,
Like any other child.

St. Nicholas.—

What Came of It.

Fred lay on his back on the sofa watching the shadows of the fire-light dance on the ceiling. It was so nice at Grandma's but a boy did not get very tired of playing, and skating all day was hard work. "Little Aunt Kate," as Fred called his father's youngest sister, because she was the youngest of the family, had told him that he had better lie down on the sofa till supper time, and it did feel comfortable, to be sure.

After a while the shadows began to look very queer up there on the ceiling, and to do strange things in the way of waving back and forth. Grandma grew large and then small as she sat in her rocking-chair beside the fire, and Aunt Kate almost vanished away; and then the first thing that Fred knew there was some one else sitting there. Where did she come from? Yes, it was Nora, and she seemed to have been crying.

She was sitting in a chair before Aunt Kate, and she was talking to her. Nora certainly was not there a moment ago. Had he been sleep? Well, he guessed he hadn't; but it was odd. What was Aunt Kate saying?

"I'm very sorry, Nora, but you must try not to worry. We will see what can be done."

"You see, Miss Kate," said Nora, drying her eyes and folding her hands in her lap, "he is such a good boy, and it seems so hard for him to lose his place just now when they need the money so much at home. If he had kept it he would have had a holiday to-morrow, but now he will have to work all day, and it will be so hard for him when all the other boys are playing."

"How is that?" asked Aunt Kate, kindly.

"Why Farmer Brown wants some wood chopped up, and all his men are too busy to do it, and he told Bennie if he wanted to work on a holiday that he would pay him double, and of course poor Ben could not refuse. I wish he could get a place on the farm, but Farmer Brown thinks he's too small.

"Will it take him all day, Nora?"

"Yes, Miss Kate, I think it will. If brother Will was at home he would help enough to let him have part of the day, but he is off with the lumbermen."

Fred did not hear any more of the conversation, and presently Nora went out.

Fred was looking toward the shadows again—I say toward, because though his eyes looked that way he did not see them. "That's just awful," he was thinking. "Work all day on a holiday, my! Too bad his brother or some one could not help him. Ben's a good natured fellow, and I'm ever so sorry for him. Most wish I had been asleep, and then I couldn't have heard.

"You might help him," something seemed to say. "Why couldn't you go to Farmer Brown's for an hour in the morning? Then he could have at least one hour of holiday, and if he had company there is no doubt that he would work faster than if he were alone; why, it might be worth two hours to him."

Fred lay still again for as much as five minutes. "Well, I'll do it," he said, at last; and then Fred jumped up from the sofa quiet rested and ready for his supper.

The next morning he tramped off toward Farmer Brown's. "Where are you going, Fred?" called Walter Dent, almost as soon as had started.

"Going to help Ben; he has to work all day, unless someone helps."

"I'll go too," said Walter.

"All right, only fetch an ax," said Fred.

So Walter ran home for his ax and then he and Fred went on together; but before they reached the farm they met two more boys.

"Going to help Ben, so's he can have some holiday," our boys called out before they could ask the question.

"We'll go, too," they said, when they heard the story.

"Won't be room for any more to chop," said Fred, "but you too can pile the wood in the shed."

So on they all went, and I wish you could have seen Ben's face when he saw them. He thought that they had come to sit with him a while, and he was glad enough of their company, as any boy will know; but when he heard that they had come to help him—why, he had to stop long enough to toss his cap in the air, and then they all set to work. They made such a chatter that Farmer Brown soon came out to see what it was all about." "Well, I never!" he exclaimed, when he saw what was going on, and then he went back into the house and soon appeared with a great plate of ginger bread, which he sat down on a log. "Pitch in, boys," he said, "and I'll tell you what, I take some stock in fellows who are willing to lend a hand. You seem to know how to work, Ben; fond of farm work?"

"Yes, sir," answered Ben.

"Hem!" said Farmer Brown, and then walked away with his hands in his pockets. When the hour was up, though Ben insisted, not a boy of them would stop, and do you see what the consequence was? Why, by eleven o'clock the five boys had done the work of six. "Halloo!" said Farmer Brown, "I guess you can leave the rest till to-morrow, my new boy will have time to finish it then," and his eyes twinkled.

"Well, you see," as the boys looked surprised, "I thought that a boy for whom four other boys were willing to give up two hours of a holiday must be worth trying, even if he is small. So be here bright and early, Ben; and now clear out, the whole of you."

"Oh, Grandma," said Fred, that evening, as he lay on the sofa again: "It was so funny when all the boys came, just like Henry Penny, you know."

"I am very glad," said Grandma, "that it was such a good example that they followed."

"I didn't want to go, at first," said Fred, honestly.

"Are you sorry you gave up part of your holiday, now?" asked Grandma.

"No, indeed." said Fred, "because, you see, Ben had most of the day, and Farmer Brown is going to try him, so he'll have a place to work; and then there was such a lot of that ginger bread, and it was the very best kind."

Grandma laughed, but she thought to herself that it was because Fred was happy from his kind action, and not the ginger bread that made him so satisfied about the loss of part of his holiday.—Annie L. Hannah, in S. S. Visitor.

IS CANCER CURABLE?

Dear Sirs:—About eleven months ago I bought an Electropoise from you for treating cancer; I had one of about ten years standing. It had reached a stage where it was making rapid progress, being about the size a silver dollar. I knew that I had to do something or my time was about up, and you were the only parties that would give me any assurance of a cure.

I am now happy to inform you that the cancer is no more; the Electropoise arrested its progress perceptibly in a few days, and it gradually and slowly grew less until now there is only a place the size of a pin head, and it is gradually disappearing.

Yours gratefully,
M. M. MILLIBRIDGE.

JABEZ.

There is nothing specially attractive or melodious to the ear in this name. Its meaning, "sorrow," does not add to its charms. It may be an altogether unfamiliar name. But finding it in a part of Scripture somewhat neglected because of its many long hard names, it not only rewards our study, but suggests that this book of Chronicles ought not to be neglected. All these names stand for persons who had experiences like ours and for victory through grace in dimmer light and fewer helps than we have. All these lived and died. It was for love many of them were brave and strong and by disappointment many of them became discouraged. Many of the names represent the aspirations and piety, or care and concern of parents. Many of them will reward a search for their origin and history.

This JABEZ was a man of importance. He gave a name to a city. His mother may have given the name which means sorrow. But, if she lived, that sorrow may have been turned into joy at the success and honor of her son. He owed much to her strong character and early teaching and training. It would be a real joy to any mother to see her children come to honor by her impress upon them and their earnest effort to make her forget her early sorrow. It is worth a mother's many cares and her reward of toil to see her children in honor. The parents may well be diligent. A mother may well weigh her opportunity and her privilege and her children should strive to reward all her cares and counsels.

This man's character is full of interest. He was more honorable than his brethren. It was not a mere matter of title such as we give now to signify office, or rank, or political influence without any suggestion of character. It was not merely his reputation, but his worth that made the record. Alas, for the empty titles of our day until we question the merit in their possession. Give us more of genuine goodness and nobility, and only then the title. JABEZ was honorable. Tradition calls him a doctor of the law and he was an honorable judge, a man of integrity and fairness, and clearness in opinion and decisions. He was public-spirited. Schools were founded by him and a city was named for him. He was religious as well—pious and benevolent. Realizing the importance of preparation in youth for maturer years, knowing the value of his own training and seeing the neglect of many, and the desire of worthy youth to study, he gave personal attention to found schools of useful knowledge for the moral culture and religious instruction and welfare of the young. His disciples were said to be distinguished for fervour in worship, docility in receiving instruction, and carefulness in treasuring the teaching they received. It is even said that with their deep piety they had the spirit of prophecy.

He was a man of prayer. This is a most needful factor in the full strength of a public life. It is needed in our politicians and must be the main strength of every real statesman. This man's prayer was earnest, thoughtful and successful. It is worthy of special study. He believed that GOD is and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him, and that as a covenant keeping GOD He may be sought with confidence and humble boldness. This prayer was humble with the desire to be kept from evil and saved from grief. It breathed an ardent desire with intense feeling, with becoming reverence It was thoroughly in earnest. This earnest desire in faith is what our LORD commends. There was the personal need confessed and the personal want expressed in the petition, "bless me." It was the yearning cry of the soul for GOD's favor which is life. It must have His blessing which is better than life. Thus the suppliant is ready to make request for temporal things, for bestowal of earthly necessities and for increase of worldly possessions. This is the right order. Until the soul submits to GOD its own helplessness and seeks His grace and strength it is not prepared to pray for any earthly good. Such prayer is proper on entering upon life's duties, making a start in business, taking profession or pursuit, going on a journey, making a home. It should be our daily habit as in pursuit or possession we are engaged in any calling, or labor, or recreation. It is more needful to be upholden by the LORD. It is far better than shields and soldiers, or wealth, or friends. To be kept from sin is better than to secure applause or any other thing that men seek after.

This prayer was rewarded. That is what we may expect of GOD for any true praying. JABEZ was preserved from evil and danger. His work was prospered. He was delivered from grief and sin. He was exalted to honor. He had enlarged spiritual coast. His horizon was expanded. Larger lands to cultivate and wider seas to sail and broader views were given.

We rejoice to find a man of prayer and plenty and power, as occupation and distinction of piety in that olden time, and commend our new friend to the busy people of our times, who are too much occupied with self and schemes to pray, and too unmindful of their dependence on GOD to thank Him and take all counsel of His HOLY SPIRIT.

THE LOUISVILLE COURIER JOURNAL says:

"The authorities of the Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary announce that they have secured the services of the Rev. Robert L. Dabney, D. D., LL. D., for the next session. This a most valuable addition to the seminary's force of instructors. It is no extravagance to say that Dr. Dabney has no superior in this country as a vigorous thinker and incisive writer on theological and philosophical subjects. His able treaties on the Sensualistic Philosophy and on Theology have carried his reputation beyond the sea. He excels as a teacher, and in this vocation he has a long and widely useful career. For thiriy years Dr. Dabney was a professor in the Union Theological Seminary of Virginia, and in order to secure a milder climate, about ten years ago he accepted the Chair of Philosophy in the University of Texas, from which he has recently resigned. It may be interesting to many to say that during the war Dr. Dabney served on the staff of Stonewell Jackson, and has written a life of the great General. In the councils of the Southern Presbyterian Church he has always been most influential, and he presided as moderator of the General Assembly when it met in 1870 in the Second Presbyterian church of this city. Dr. Dabney is to lecture on Christian Ethics and on Philosophy in relation to Theology. The course of lectures will cover six weeks and will be delivered during the months of November and December. A certificate will be given the students who pass the examination on these lectures.

FOOTSTEPS BACKWARD.

My dear brother, Dr. DANIEL, almost takes one's breath away. His logic takes back-tracks on my article with such a rush, that I hardly can realize what my article was about. I wrote about an apparently minor action of the General Assembly that came in the report of the committee on Theological Seminaries, that nobody had blazoned abroad, that no newspaper had discussed, but that seemed to the writer worthy of consideration. Among other considerations I mentioned that it dovetailed into the proposed revision of our law of licensure. When, presto change! The tail wags the dog! the cart pulls the horse! and herein lies "the real significance of the action of our last Assembly concerning Licensure and Ordination." This whole matter of licensure which the Church has been agitating for years, was not for its own sake, but the sly fellows were fixing up a scheme that would dovetail into another scheme that they were keeping dark until now. Verily craft has overreached itself. They have fallen into the pit they digged. Their plot has been laid bare. If they had only waited until their revision was adopted before they showed their hand!

For myself I must say, I was not called into their counsels. Whoever the conclave that arranged this campaign and brought it so near to a successful consummation before it was discovered, I was not one of them. In my simplicity I attributed the "dovetailing" to Providence, and took it as an evidence, that the Church was beginning to look all its problems in the face in a practical common-sense way, unhampered by tradition, and unscared by the cry of "Methodism."

1. To remove prejudice—for it does not bear upon the main point before us—let me say that I did not assert that six months vacation was an "absolute essential to real advance in scholarship" but that "leisure for research, and authorship" was such an essential. Without six months vacation the fathers did great things; with it they could have done greater things. The work that Dr. JOHNSON is now doing in the grissle of his young manhood in editing Dr. PECK's papers would have done vastly more good to the Church had Dr. PECK had the time to do it himself. Much has now to be laid aside as out of date, and much is lost hopelessly for lack of touches that he only could give. Our Church has lost fearfully by overcrowding its Professors.

2. If any one is in danger of being swept from his feet by Dr. DANIEL'S hurricane logic, let him anchor himself by this FACT. The plan proposed with regard to our seminaries is the Scotch plan—the immemorial Scotch usage. Yet the Scotch have our present system of licensure—the one that Dr. DANIEL stands to. So, however they may dovetail, they do not stand or fall together. You may have either plan of education with either theory of licensure.

3. If the "valid for three years" clause in the proposed revision be understood as abolishing the Presbytery's power to revoke a licensure at will, I am heart and soul with Dr. DANIEL. I would not vote for the revision unless that is made clear. I have not the paper by me, but am confident it was intended only to limit the term, not to abridge the Presbytery's power of recall. That point should be made perfectly clear before it is adopted, if there is anything ambiguity about it.

4. I cannot under present conditions—away from all authorities and even without a Book of Church Order—discuss at length the doctrine of vocation with Dr. DANIEL. I agree entirely with him as to the three-fold evidence of the Divine call. It was the meat on which I was fed, and I have never found anything better. But I find nothing in that doctrine, nor in the Word of GOD, that shows that "licensure is order to a call," and only that. Here is Dr. DANIEL'S ladder—and it was once my own: "The reception of a candidate is in order to training; training, to licensure; licensure, to a call; a call, unless for unforeseen causes, to ordination." It is just in the midst of that ladder that I take emphatic issue with Dr. DANIEL. Licensure is in order to probation. Who is the judge? According to Dr. DANIEL—and the general tendency of our present system—the people. The court has "said its say" at licensure. All that remains for it to do—"except for unforeseen causes"—is to register the people's will. Why then, I ask, did our Book require an elaborate examination at ordination? Theoretically, the matter is still sub judice.

Now all we know about this matter from GOD'S Word is found in 1 Tim. v. 22, "Lay hands suddenly on no man" (unless that refers to discipline); iii. 6, "not a novice;" iii. 10, "And let these (deacons) also first be proved"—implying probation for elders. Now there are a number of us—and I believe a growing number—who are very firmly convinced of two things:

(1.) To put a man on probation all that is necessary is probable evidence of his call. That would seem to be self-evident, but we have made it mean: the Presbytery judges this man called to preach.

(2.) It is not right to keep a man in a long course of training before you give him a chance to try his gifts. He should have enough training to make him safe, but not necessarily enough to pronounce him a fully equipped minister. Having been licensed on these terms no man can complain if he is kept from going further, until he is equipped.

Our ministry is full of men that are not called to preach—as shown by the fact that they are not preaching, can get nobody to preach to. They are good men, perhaps scholarly men, but they are not called to preach. They got in under this system: Presbytery licenses largely upon the basis of scholarship (if there is any doubt some one reminds us that "this is not final—only probation); a church says, "We need a minister and Presbytery says this man is fit, let's call him" (not being able to raise a salary for a settled man); then Presbytery says, "We now have the voice of the Church"—and proceed to ordain him. Under this system the marvel is that we have not more unqualified preachers. In the proposed system licensure is confessedly tentative. We say to a man, here's your chance, show what's in you. Presbytery has three years to judge whether the man has any work in him. The unworthy—the uncalled—will be sifted out, and the called will be required to go on unto perfection.

Seeing it this way, of course I don't see it Dr. DANIEL'S way—the lobbying half—Presbyters, the new order in the ministry and all that. So I see it—let the Church judge.

Writing away from home, from books, and from opportunity of consultation with the Editor, I have not taken refuge behind the editorial we, but meet my brother in the singular number and over my own signature. And may the LORD guide us into His perfect way.

PEYTON H. HOGE.

HERE AND THERE.

THE STRIKE IS ON THE WANE AND is now nigh unto its death. When CLEVELAND took the stand that the laws should be respected, the doom of the strike was decreed. Perhaps in a year or two when the present immense losses to property have been forgotten, and the sin and suffering have likewise become dim in memory, we will see that it was well that the strike came when it did; that GOD has overruled and as so often in the course of his providence has brought good out of evil, has caused the wrath of man to praise Him and the remainder of wrath has restrained.

ALL EYES HAVE BEEN UPON PRESIDENT CLEVELAND, and all hearts have turned unto him. The bold, strong, wise man—the man for just this emergency has been he; but let us not forget that the LORD GOD OMNIPOTENT reigneth and in working out results according to the good pleasure of His will—purposes of mercy or purposes of wrath—He raiseth up the men that shall do His will. And so behind the figure of the man prominently before us we see, and we praise and adore, the interposing Hand that directs and controls and saves.

BUT DO NOT LET US LOSE THE LESSON taught by these events. GOD punishes nations and communities for their sins as He does individuals. We have forgotten GOD and have brought these troubles upon us by wandering from the path of right. Chicago defied GOD during the late World's Fair and as then she sowed the wind, is it marvellous that now she should reap the whirlwind? The blow falls there, and hardest there, but the whole country suffers for we all have sinned. Let us take the lesson to heart and repenting of the sins of the past let us humbly and reverently bow before our MAKER thanking Him that we are not utterly consumed in His wrath; let us give thanks for His mercy in staying the hand of vengeance and saving to us our country and its laws and righteous government.

WE CLIP FROM THE PRESBYTERIAN and commend the suggestion:

"We find the following item in one of our Church papers: The committee of the First church is looking up the records of several ministers who have been prominently mentioned for its pulpit. It is no matter where "the First church" is, the item concerning it is suggestive. Ministers should remember that they are continually making "records," and that the search into these records may be going on quietly and constantly. Would it not be well, however, for ministers at times to look up the records of churches before they commit themselves to their service finally? Take ten years' reports of their missionary contributions and study them."

TROLLEY CARS IN THE MAIL SERVICE—why not! It seems that the first of these duly fitted for the purpose are now running between Brooklyn and Coney Island. The road passes through a number of prosperous settlements and two cars, each carrying a clerk, are employed in the service.

THE COOK GREENLAND EXPEDITION on the steamer Miranda arrived at St. John's, New Foundland, on last Sunday. Her compass was out of order, but it would be repaired at once and the steamer proceed on her way. The services of an ice-pilot were procured who had been on the late Peary expedition. By the way, it is a refreshingly cool bit of business this warm weather, to be travelling around among the icebergs.

REV. A. BEN OLIEL AND HIS FAMILY, who have been in this country for some weeks is about to leave for his work in Jerusalem. Until September 1st his address will be care of A. SEELEY, Esq., The Ferns, Richmond, Surrey, England; after that date at Jerusalem as formerly. They hope to be fully at their work in October.

THE FOLLOWING BIT OF CONSECRATED wisdom is said to have emanated from an Oxford student, when about to set out as a missionary to Africa:

"I think it is with African missions as with the building of a great bridge, you know how many stones have to be buried in the earth, all unseen, to be a foundation. If Christ wants me to be one of the unseen stones lying in an African grave, I am content, certain, as I am, that the final result will be a Christian Africa."

WE AGAIN CALL ATTENTION OF OUR readers to the "Christian Secret of a Happy Life"—which we offer in connection with the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN. The book is one we most heartily commend. We believe as a friend said to us a day or two since: "No one can read the book without being the better for having done so."

THE DROPPED STITCH.

A beautiful thought, charmingly expressed, is embodied in the following lines by Susan Coolidge:

One small life in God's great plan;
How futile it seems as the ages roll,
Do what it may or strive what it can
To alter the sweep of the infinite whole!
A single stitch in an endless web,
A drop in the ocean's flow and ebb,
But the pattern is rent where the stitch is lost,
Or marred where the tangled threads have crossed,
And each life that fails of the true intent,
Mars the perfect plan that the Master meant.

POPULAR TALKS ON LAW.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE.

Good-Will.

We frequently hear the term "good-will" used as describing a benefit or advantage existing as a part of or in connection with a business. It is our purpose to discuss briefly the nature of this intangible asset as viewed in law.

It is defined in several cases as the advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment beyond the mere value of the capital, stock, funds or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers on account of its local position or common celebrity or reputation for skill or affluence or punctuality or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices. This is a definition given by Story and followed in several cases.

Boiled down, this definition would seem to mean simply that the good-will of a business consists in the probability that customers will continue to come to the old place of business. At best, it is the sale of a mere chance, which vests in the purchaser nothing but the possibility that a preference which has usually been extended may continue.

Every sort of business does not of necessity possess a good-will that courts will protect. It has been asserted that good-will has no application to the professions of law, medicine and other learned professions, inasmuch as the business of a professional man has no local existence, and is entirely personal, depending upon the trust and confidence which persons may repose in his integrity and ability to conduct their legal affairs. However, of late sales of professional business have been held to include good-will, so that it may be said that the law now recognizes such business as possessing a good-will. Good-will itself, apart from the business, cannot be sold, it being a mere incident of other property, and only capable of being sold in connection with it.

As to its value, this depends entirely upon the circumstances of the case. It may be more or less valuable, according to location, personnel of its ownership, or special advantages in the proprietor's mode of conducting it. Not only may the good-will be sold as any other asset, but also it may be mortgaged or sold under proceedings of court in connection with the property of which it is an incident.

The name of a firm is a very important part of the good-will of a business carried on by the firm. Persons become accustomed to buying at certain houses, or houses in a certain locality or known by a certain name, and being so accustomed, will resort to such places, notwithstanding a change of ownership. The name itself becomes an intangible asset of more or less value, according to circumstances. So in the case of trade-marks, which are an important part of the good-will of a business. In parting with the good-will of a business the seller means to part with all that good disposition which customers entertain toward the business identified by the name, trade-mark, location, etc. It is because of this value of the name that very many firms exist which do not contain a single member of the individual name expressed in the firm.

When one sells a business, he does not thereby agree not to engage in a similar business. Contrary to the general view, one in selling his business may agree not to engage in it again, provided there be a reasonable limit to the time and place within which he is not to so engage in the business. If there be no stipulation to the contrary, the vendor may lawfully establish a similar business next door to the one he has sold and invite everybody to come and purchase, although he must not hold out himself as the successor to the business of the old firm. It is generally understood that old customers may be solicited, although several of the older cases hold that they cannot be personally solicited. The tendency of the law, however, is to hold that in the absence of positive agreement the vendor may solicit trade from old and new customers alike either by indirect or direct means.

The sale of a good-will does not transfer to the purchaser any right to use the name where the name is the name of the vendor, unless there is an agreement to that effect. The buyer can, however, advertise himself as the successor to his vendor.

Where the good-will merely pertains to the place of business, a sale of it does not give the right to use the firm name without an agreement to that effect. Sometimes the good-will attaches more to the place than to the business itself, as in the case of the good-will of an inn. The reverse is, however true in the case of the good-will of a newspaper, where the name makes up the principal part of the value of the good-will. Where the good-will is not mentioned in the agreement of sale of a business, it will be presumed to be included, unless the circumstances are such as to show that only the tangible assets of the business were included.

Formerly, where one member of a partnership died, the good-will of the business went to the survivor, but it is now considered as a part of the general assets of a partnership for which the surviving partner must account. He may retain it upon payment of its full value, so held in a Nebraska case. Where several members of a partnership have sold out to one member, they may be restrained from carrying on a rival establishment under a name so similar to that of the first as to mislead and draw off business.

Returning to the matter of value, it may be said that the value of the good-will is to be calculated by estimating every advantage to be secured by succeeding to the business without reference to the exclusion of any person from engaging in the same business. In one case the value was assessed at one year's average net profits.

A FEW WORDS OF EXPLANATION BY REV. DR. T. R. SAMPSON.

The regular articles on Foreign Missions, for the PRESBYTERIAN, were necessarily interrupted, in May, to make room for the special correspondence from the General Assembly. They were not resumed, when that correspondence was concluded, in June, because it then appeared that the continuance of them, permanently, was improbable, and subsequent events have rendered it impossible.

A few words of explanation are now due the many friends and readers of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, inside and beyond the borders of the State.

The Board of Trustees of "The Assembly's Home and School" saw fit to elect me, without solicitation on my part, to the position of Principal of the Collegiate Institute at Fredericksburg, Va. The Chairman of the Synod's Committee of Foreign Missions felt unwilling to place any obstacle in the way of my entertaining the proposition. After careful consideration and due delibration, I felt it my duty to accept the call to this new sphere of labor, in a field promising so much usefulness, to the Church at home and abroad.

As it was desired that I enter upon the duties of this position at once, the Chairman also consented to release me in July and I shall thus soon go beyond the borders of the Synod.

It was always understood that the position, of Secretary of Foreign Missions, was only temporary and tentative, and two years were considered the limit of its continuance; but the interruption of such intimate and delightful relations, although already anticipated, cannot be unattended with pain to myself.

Of the work done, or the good accomplished, or the success of the undertaking it is not my province to speak; but it will not be improper for me to dwell upon some other matters which fill my heart.

The work has been, despite its many difficulties, a continued delight to me, and I can never cease to feel grateful to the Committee, the brethren in the ministry, the churches and the PRESBYTERIAN for the kind courtesy, the cordial sympathy, the warm appreciation and hearty support which they have uniformly accorded me, or to regret that the way was not clear, for me, to continue six months longer in the State.

It will remain one of the proudest recollections of my life, that, so far as I am aware, the uniformly delightful relation with all parties has beeen marred by no ripple of dissatisfaction or unpleasantness of any kind, with the exception perhaps that I have found it impossible to stay so long, to come back so soon, or to speak so often as has been desired, in one place.

A report of the work, for the last eight months, will be furnished the Committee, from which it will appear that about two-thirds of the churches, with over fifty members reported to the last Synod as still unvisited, have been reached.

It seems one thing can be stated, with some confidence, that the evils, so abundantly prophesied, have not appeared.

In response to the request of several friends I give the exact address from which the best map of the world can be obtained for $2.50—Charles E. Swell, Esq., No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston, Miss., and "The Detroit Conference Report" can be obtained, by correspondence with, Max Wood Moorhead, Esq., Lock Box 745 Mont Clair, New Jersey.

These will be found helpful and valuable to those who desire such aids to interest. Every Women's Secretary should have each of them.

A CARD TO THE CITIZENS OF NORTH CAROLINA CONCERNING BLIND CHILDREN.

In view of the completion of the Morganton Institution for the education of the Deaf, and their removal from the Institution for the Deaf, Dumb and Blind at Raleigh, the latter Institution is better prepared than ever before to sustain and educate the Blind. Our capacity is increased, our force augmented and our methods ameliorated; all of which enables us to do more efficient work than we have heretofore done. We are anxious that every Blind child in the State receive an education. We wish to do all in our power for the betterment of this unfortunate class, to enable them to avail themselves of this FREE Institution in which the State so magnanimously offers to instruct this class of its citizens.

With a view to this end, we earnestly appeal to the philanthropic people of our commonwealth to aid us in this noble work. We wish to be put in touch with every Blind child within our borders. We desire the name, postoffice, township, county and nearest railroad station of every child of this class in North Carolina. Also the name of the parent or guardian of such child. With such data, we will correspond with the parents and guardians of these children, and in this way put them in reach of an education.

Will not the good people of the State who know of a Blind child or children in their vicinity send us a card with the information wanted? We promise to use our best efforts to get these children in school, if you will enable us to get their names. Please forward the data at once and greatly oblige,

Very truly,

B. F. Montague, for the Board of Trustees of the North Carolina Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, and the Blind, Raleigh, N. C.

W. J. YOUNG, Principal.

Raleigh, N. C., July 9th, 1894.

According to the United States census report for 1890, there were at that date 731 Blind children in North Carolina. We had in our Institution last year only 102, leaving 629 of this unfortunate class growing up in ignorance—a very sad showing.

What Has Become of Self-Denial?

Is self-denial in the Christian life becoming one of the lost arts? Faber, the devout Roman Catholic of recent years in England, has thus spoken in one of his "Conference" papers: "Increased luxury has superinduced a valetudinarian state of society. Fewer men can fast. Fewer women can wear instruments of penance. People take cold more easily. We cannot think of a hermit in the fens of Lincolnshire or in the wet woods of Picardy, without marvelling how life contrived to be anything but a chronic rheumatism." And how is it among our modern Protestants, we ask? Saying nothing of the old-fashioned fasting, of "keeping the body under," of "resisting unto blood, striving against sin," of "crucifixion to the world," of "giving alms of all that we possess," let us come to simpler duties. Church attendance, for instance—how well arranged everything must be to our comfort and convenience and æsthetic taste! How often that bodily weakness, to which, most singularly, we seem so much more sensitive on the first day of the week than on the other six, is considered a reason for neglecting the public worship of God sufficiently justifying to hand in at the judgment bar! The same as regards Sabbath weather. Many think that to look for them in their pews on a rainy day is as unreasonable as to expect them to swim a river in order to get there. To rise as early Sabbath mornings as on other days, or to incur the interruption of a meal or its delay for a single hour for the sake of a church service, or its being served cold as a saving of labor on the Lord's day—this is more of a self-denial than some good Christians can endure, and almost counts for martyrdom. In the delights of the world, the lusts of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the pride of life, the measure of self-abnegations seems reduced to the minimum, and the policy of the prophetesses whom Ezekiel condemns, who for carnal ease and smoothness in Zion's way "sewed pillows on all elbows," meets approval in our time.

It is a serious charge made by the late Dr. Mark Hopkins, that the essential inherence of self-denial in the Christian system is a doctrine that has faded or is fading from the consciousness of the Christian church. Certainly it has not the illustrating in present religious experience, and perhaps not the inculcation in our teachings, common in former days.

But the description still holds true to all times. "Strait is the gate and narrow the way;" and the exhortations likewise, "strive to enter in," "fight the good fight," "mortify the deeds of the body," "be not conformed to this world." No 19th century ingenuity, and no patent right inventions can eliminate uttterly the element of conflict from the Christian experience. After some manner we are all expected to bear the cross and to endure hardness as good soldiers. What then are our experiences which can be labelled as sacrifices and self-denials in the religious life? Do our feet ever grow weary in the Father's business? Do we ever refuse "sleep to our eyes or slumber to our eyelids until we find a place for the Lord?" Do we give from the pocket-book for Zion's cause—give not merely the fragments and crumbs which, in an unworthy complacency we can "give and never miss it," but do we ever so give that we feel it? Are we in anything doing without for Christ's sake? Are we steadfastly refusing to gratify some worldly propensity, subduing self-will, curbing passion, fighting an evil appetite, patiently continuing in well-doing, "faint yet pursuing?" And are we still bearing the burden when its weight is the heaviest, and wearing the yoke even though it galls? "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the Gospel's shall save it."—Mid-Continent.

Benevolence.

There are many who believe themselves to be benevolent because they have responded to some passionate appeal that they could not resist, and, while under the magnetic influence of the appeal, responded handsomely. There are persons who for years treasure the memory of one noble act of this kind as if it gave them immunity for life. Our pastor once spoke of one of his former wealthy members who gave five hundred dollars towards some special need, and ever after, when appealed to, call attention to how generous he had been, and gave this as an excuse for not responding. Such persons do not understand the true spirit of benevolence which springs from the purity and goodness of nature, of the benefactor who approaches, in some degree, the highest development found only in our Creator and Benefactor, and with whom the will and act of doing good are measured only by his justice and power. The bounty of the creature is limited only by the abundance with which the Creator has endowed him. The command to which every Christian should respond lies in the requirement to give as the Lord has prospered him. To whom much is given will much be required. On this principle few persons have any right to lay claim to the title of benefactor. We have a neighbor whom we believe follows the Bible rule with conscientious precision, being one of those to whom God has given large ability to accumulate. He pays the Lord's one-tenth into the treasury, and limits his charities and beneolences to what he feels he can give above that amount, and we have never heard him boast of having given anything. When questions of more money for needed work are presented in his presence, he wants to know the merits of the work, how much it will cost and how the money may be raised, always doing what he thinks is his share. If we were all like-minded, the collection of money for religious and charitable work would be simply a problem in arithmetic. Christian beneficence should always be characterized by a careful discrimination as to what is wise or needful, and then wisely dispensed. Not lavishly, as is the manner of some open-hearted men who empty their purses at every appeal and care not to know the good results, but boast of the amount rather than the wisdom of their gifts. The true benefactor does not care to publish his doings, but looks for the reward in the blessing that comes from having blessed humanity. Adamson says: "Let him that gives a benefit be silent; let him speak of it that hath received it." "There is that law of difference," said the philosopher, "betwixt the doer of a good turn and the receiver of it, that one ought quickly to forget what he hath given, our history, development and appreciation of the possibilities yet to be attained.

Let us all rejoice that we have a Christian civilization, a nation built upon sound and ennobling principles, leading all nations of the world to the sunlight of human liberty, and not forget that among those who have accepted our general invitation to share what we cherish and enjoy, have come many enemies who threaten our peaceful enjoyment. We cannot take a rattlesnake to our bosom without danger, therefore let our boast of present grandeur, our lofty enthusiasm, our lessons of patriotism, carry with them a warning that we will not permit anarchists, or any other class, to imperil the great social fabric that has been builded and preserved at such a fearful cost.—Herald and Presbyter.

THE GOLDEN SUNSET.

The golden sea its mirror spreads
Beneath the golden skies,
And but a narrow strip between
Of land and shadow lies.

The cloud-like rocks, the rock-like clouds,
Dissolved in glory, float;
And midway of the radiant flood
Hangs silently the boat.

The sea is but another sky,
The sky a sea as well;
And which is earth, and which the heavens,
The eye can scarcely tell.

So when from us life's evening hour,
Soft passing, shall descend,
May glory born of earth and sky
The earth and heavens blend!

Flooded with peace, the spirit floats,
With silent rapture glows,
Till where earth ends, and heaven begins,
The soul it scarcely knows.

BOOKS.

Sun Moon and Stars. Astronomy for Beginners. The new edition of this work by Agnes Gibernes carefully revised in accordance with the latest astronomical discoveries is issued by the American Tract Society of New York, in cloth for $1.25. It may be had of our committee of Richmond. Beginners will find the general outlines of Astronomy and will be stimulated to a more extended study of the subject. It is not a pretty story at the expense of scientific facts. Younger or older beginners will enjoy the pleasant style and have a good understanding of our planetary system and other stars and systems by reading this valuable book. We heartily recommend it.

The Young Man Four-Square. Our personal interest in the author has deepened into admiration of his ability as shown in this book from the pen of Rev. J. I. Vance, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Norfolk, Va. The style is clear, forcible and vigorous. This prevails except in a notable instance on page 68 where the word "damned" is unfortunately used. The ideas and suggestions of the book are thoroughly helpful and make appeal to the best instincts and aspirations of young men. It may be had of the bublishers, Fleming H. Revell Co. 112 Fifth Ave. N. Y., or our own committee of Publication in Richmond at fifty cents per copy. The book is attractive in binding and and better still in contents. The four chapters on the Young Man, in business, in society, in politics and in religion are rich in suggestion, stirring in illustration and wise in counsel. It is a pleasure to commend this book to all young men who wish to make the most of themselves and their opportunities, to where it is dedicated.

The Evidence of Salvation. By Rev. Everett S. Stackpole, D. D. Cloth 50 cents. T. Y. Crowell & Co., publishers. New York, 46 E. 14th St.

This is a handsome little book and is written in simple, pleasant language. Its purpose is to show how we may have perfect assurance of being saved. The author evidently believes that every Christian may, and should have such certainty, but does not believe, as some of his Church do—he is a Methodist—that one who does not have it is not saved at all. He denies the Romanist decree "That no One Can Know" and the "High Calvinist," that only a few can. Separate chapters on Conscience, Love to the Brethren, Growth in Grace, the Bible, and Faith, claim that by neither or all of these does assurance come, though they may help to produce it. In the sixth chapter we are taught that only by the direct witness of the Spirit is the assurance possible, and yet, the same chapter admits that "not always is this witness equally clear," and that one may be mistaken "and think some other experience" is the witness—and the seventh chapter seems to indicate that one may have this witness and not even be aware of it.

The writer's difficulty is that he begins with the troublesome and yet distinctive practice of his Church in giving more importance to "feeling" than to anything else. Yet the book is not altogether bad, except in the fourth chapter, where such dishonor is placed upon the word—to a Presbyterian's way of thinking—as to amount to rank heresy. There is much that is good and helpful; especially in the two last chapters is there much to commend. They teach of the conditions of securing this great blessing of the Spirit's witness, and of the constantly increasing blessing of His abiding presence. These two chapters may, we think, be thankfully accepted by all who love the Lord. They deserve a wider reading than they are apt to receive in their present setting. They would make excellent tracts for general circulation. But it is almost impossible to realize that they should have come from the same pen which wrote the fourth and fifth chapters.

Half and Half.

BY OBADIAH OLDSCHOOL.

When Nehemiah went to Jerusalem, nearly a century after the first company of captives had returned under Ezra, he found the people sadly demoralized. Even the priests and nobles had intermarried with idolaters. The result was, as stated in chapter xiii. verse 24. "Their children spake half in the speech of Ashdod, and could not speak in the Jews' language, but according to the language of each people." What a jargon! How that mixture of Hebrew and Philistine must have grated on the ears of the pious cup-bearer! It was Jehovah and Dagon in the same breath. And no doubt the manners and customs and worship of the rising generation were half and half as well as their dialect.

Nehemiah knew that if this state of things was not promptly arrested the next generation would be at least three-quarters Ashdod, both in speech and worship, and that in less than a century the land would be wholly given up to idolatry. A man or a community half corrupted is like a barrel of apples half of which are rotten. The sound fruit will not save that which is decayed, or even save itself. The only hope for apples or men is to separate the good from the bad. And knowing this, the puritanical cup-bearer contended with these Jews, and smote them, and plucked off their hair, and made them swear that there should be no more intermarriages. That was radical, and it was effectual. From the days of Nehemiah until now the Jews have been a separate people.

When reading this latest historical record in the Bible of the Old Testament church one is tempted to ask: What if some Puritan or Presbyterian of the eighteenth century should visit us today? Would he not feel as Nehemiah did? Would he not say that the speech in our nominally Christian homes is only half Christian? Our grandfathers and grandmothers taught their children to repeat the Catechism and to memorize the Scriptures. Their own language, even when talking about secular affairs, was largely Biblical. It was "with grace, seasoned with salt." They would not permit any worldly literature, or any conversation about worldly matters in their homes, on the Sabbath. Perhaps they were in some things overstrict, and in their strictness a little pharisaical. But they were noble men and women; and they left us a noble heritage. Are we conserving that heritage so as to transmit it unimpaired to our posterity, or are we depreciating it by conformity to the world? Are we mingling the speech of Ashdod with the conversation that ought to be "in heaven?" Let us listen for a moment.

Two sisters in Christ are going home from church. One says to the other: "Wasn't that a beautiful sermon our good pastor preached this morning? Some of his illustrations were just too lovely for anything! And did you notice Miss Smith's new winter bonnet? It is the first of the season. We will have to get ours before next Sunday." And so they go on talking about the services and the fashions in as strange a jargon as that of the Jewish children in Nehemiah's time. The family gathers around the table to enjoy its Sunday dinner. It is not like the cold Sunday dinners of a hundred years ago, but the most elaborate repast of the week, because there will be more time to enjoy it. A blessing is asked. The children are called upon to repeat the text. Some remarks are made in regard to the music and the decorations and then the conversation drifts into Ashdod talk about matters secular and sensual. The program of engagements for the week is discussed. Perhaps the news in the Sunday paper is read and commented upon. A suggestion is interposed, now and then, anent the weekly prayer-meeting, or the Woman's Monthly Missionary meeting. But all sorts of topics are jumbled together, like the Hebrew and the Philistine words in the street talk that angered Nehemiah.

And we have this mixture of worldliness with Christianity in deed as well as in word. Think of young men and maidens dancing or playing progressive euchre until 12 o'clock Saturday night and then coming to church Sabbath morning, bowing their heads and repeating after the minister, "Lead us not into temptation." Think of a man making a public consecration of himself to that Saviour who said, "If any man will come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me," and then spending more in carnal comforts and sensual indulgences, that single week than he gives to missions in a whole year Think of a man who goes to the meeting of a convivial club at the hour when his brethren assemble in the church for prayer! Think of the woman who talks piously in the ladies' meeting, and then gossips about her neighbor's faults and foibles as soon as it is over. Have not some of my readers met this good sister? Nay, cannot some of them see her face in their looking-glasses? I am not making assertions I am only asking questions.

I cannot refer to all the illustrations of this modern mixture. There is Miss A. She sang a solo, a hymn of praise and consecration, last Sabbath, so sweetly that many hearts were thrilled and many eyes were moistened. But Tuesday evening, at a Halloween party, she sang such rollicking songs that the company was convulsed with laughter. We will think of that musical jingle the next time she sings in church.

Mr. B. is a good talker. I used to like to hear him tell in prayer-meeting about his love for our dear Saviour. But I had some business transactions with him last week. He tried to make me believe that black was white, and that what he had to sell was worth twice its real value. The Ashdod talk has spoiled his prayer-meeting talks for me. Oh that we could be thoroughly consistent and whole-hearted in our devotion to Christ! Oh that we could live for him only, for him always, for him everywhere and in all things! How faithfully he warned us that we cannot serve God and mammon.

Old Robert South says: "No man can have two chief goods. It is indeed more impossible than to serve two masters; forasmuch as a man's heart is more laid out upon what he loves than upon what he serves. Besides that the soul is but of a stinted operation, and cannot exert its full force and vigor upon two diverse much less contradictory objects. A man must first have two hearts, two souls and two selves before he can give a heart to God, and a heart to the world also."—Interior.

Blessing of the Unattained.

Life is, in the main, a struggle for attainment. Without the hope of attaining that which seems worth striving for, most of the toil of life would be hopeless drudgery. The child and the man alike look forward to some high attainment, in the line of education or of position or of acquisition, which shall meet and satisfy the desires of the whole being, and for which they are willing to toil and endure and suffer whatever may be essential to that end. If the end striven for be attained, it may prove to be neither satisfactory nor worth the effort made for its reaching. If it be not attained, the disappointment is sure to be great; but if it were worth striving for, the influence of it, even though unattained, may be a blessing in the life of him who struggled for it, beyond all other influences in his earthly career.

The hope of a home in the land promised to God's people, was an incitement and inspiration to Moses in the long years of his life in Egypt and in Arabia. Looking forward to this as an attainment, he was willing to give up the privileges and honors of a royal palace, and to cast in his lot with an oppressed people, in the hope that he might aid in bringing them also to the desired possession. Years passed on, and he wearied in but not of the struggle and endurance. His life was lived for this, and death was many a time braved for it. But when the attainment seemed just within his reach, Moses was told of God to go up alone on to a mountain peak, and there have a glimpse from afar of the goodly land he must not enter. The only blessing of his life was the blessing of the unattained. Was this nothing to him? Was his life a failure? Nay:

"This was the truest warrior
That ever buckled sword;
This is the most gifted poet
That ever breathed a word;
And never earth's philosopher
Traced with his golden pen,
On the deathless page, truths half so sage
As he wrote down for men."

And the blessing of blessings for Moses was the blessing of the unattained.

No man among the Hebrews gained so much from the land of promise as Moses gained. None of them felt so deeply or so sacredly the influence of that land on their lives as he felt it on his. Even Joshua and Caleb, who entered into it by struggle, had no such place in its history as had he. When, in the fulness of time, the Son of God stood transfigured on a mount of mounts in that holy land, it was Moses, not Caleb or Joshua, who stood with him there; and the joy of Moses was then all the greater because of what had been to him the unattained in his earthly lifetime. And thus it is in the lives of many through the blessing of the unattained.

A mother who has lived in loving hope of a useful life for the son whom she was training for God's service, finds herself shut off from all this hope by the son's sudden taking away, before entering on his active career. All her fond anticipations of the joy that her son's work on earth would give to her and to others are gone forever. Her only blessing now in that son's life here is the blessing of the attained. Yet that blessing may show itself in her every look and word, and she may be recognized by others as ministering to many in Christ's service, for her son and for herself continually. She could never have been what she is in that service but for the opening of her loving longing toward that which, while unattained, is to her an ever-present ideal of blessing.

A noble and worthy lover, who had looked forward through years of struggle and of hope to a land of promise in a blessed union of heart and life with the woman who was worthy of him, and of whom he was worthy, may be called to take his farewell look at that land from a mound of fresh earth this side its border. It is thenceforth forevermore the unattained land to him; but his thoughts and words may have color and tone from that vision of the unattained while life remains, and his fellow-men may feel the force of that which he struggled for, as they could never have felt it had he entered into its possessions. The world's deepest thinkers and tenderest writers have spoken out under the hallowing influence of the unattained.

High attainment is a worthy object of aspiration and endeavor, but God may make the unattained a richer blessing to us than ever the attained could be. It is in what we have looked forward to that the blessing lies, not in our gain of that toward which we aspired and strove. The lofty ideal remains to us, even when the hope of attainment is gone. God may, indeed, tell us that it is better for us never to enter the land we rightly longed to live in, but God will never tell us that it would have been better for us not to have had such love and longings for that land. The blessing of the unattained may be greater to us than all that we win and hold besides.—Sunday School Times.

ANOTHER REPORT ON CANCER.

214 Kinsey Street ELKHART, IND., May 23, 1893.

My wife has been afflicted with cancer for over a year. In December, 1891, we had an operation performed at the hospital at Lafayette, Ind. It did no good. We had cancer doctors from Indianapolis and Chicago and they did no good. She kept growing worse all the time. In October, 1892, she was carried to her sister's to use the Electropoise. When she returned home, after two months' treatment with it, she jumped off of the coach without assistance. She is sewing to-day and able to use the treadles of the organ, something she has not done in three years before. She says the Poise is going to cure her; whether it does or not, it has already helped her a great deal.

I myself have found great relief from lum bago and a stiffness in my knees produced by three attacks of La Grippe, after using the Electropoise two weeks.

Already applications for catalogues are being received and the promise is of another prosperous year.

The past year has been one of widespread financial depression, but notwithstanding this fact, the Institute has had a prosperous year.

No school in the South has enjoyed more constant and brilliant success than the Agnes Scott, and the causes of this success are evident:

1. Its location in North Georgia is unrivaled; the local surroundings are ideal, Decatur having long been noted for its refined, educated and religious society.
2. A large and accomplished corps of trained and experienced teachers, each member of the faculty having been selected for his or her character and special qualifications for the chair occupied.
3. Thorough work. The utmost effort is made to do thorough teaching, and no careless or antiquated methods are used. None of the officers or teachers have any financial interest in the management of the Institute, and each teacher is able to give her or his entire time and undivided and disinterested attention to the work of instructing. Pupils not making satisfactory progress or not improving their time are not allowed to waste the money of parents by further attendance.

The curriculum is already high. It is rigidly pursued and is being steadily advanced as the school grows in years. It is the desire and aim of trustees and faculty to place the Agnes Scott as the leader in elevating the standard of female education in the South.

The special departments, as music and art, are well equipped and under charge of skilled specialists, are fully abreast of the times and the best schools.

4. The low scale of fees, these having been fixed, not with the view of money making, but simply to cover current expenses, repairs and equipment.
5. The superb buildings were constructed especially for school purposes after the best approved plans. They are all of brick, heated by steam, lighted by electricity, scientifically ventilated and supplied throughout with hot and cold water and fire hose.

Death of Rev. J. L. Currie:—As we are preparing for press we receive the truly sad announcement that Rev. James Lauchlin Currie died at Burlington yesterday, 17th at 10 o'clock, a. m. A brother of lovely Christian spirit and a devoted minister of the gospel. Space and time allow us to say little more now. Bro. Currie was born in Orange county June 17th, 1849, graduated from Union Seminary in 1873, was ordained by Orange Presbytery in 1875 and has devoted his ministerial life to Chapel Hill, Burlington and other churches near his home.

Fayetteville Church:—At the communion services on Sunday, the pastor welcomed twelve new members. Five of these were brought into the church through a meeting held in one of the suburbs of Fayetteville. The pastor was efficiently assisted by Licentiate C. M. Richards. McK.

Lexington:—Rev. D. M. McIver writes: The good people of Lexington have treated us with great kindness since we came here. When we moved into the manse we found it ready for occupancy—one of our good elders having fitted out the kitchen, while the Ladies' Aid Society took charge of the other rooms and had the carpet put down. The house was already lighted, a most appetizing meal awaited us and so we felt at home at once. Almost every day we have received fresh tokens of the kindness of the people, such as the substantials, comforts and delicacies of life.

Hampden Sidney:—The indications now are that there will be a very large junior class at Union Seminary this fall. Applications for rooms are coming in briskly.

The buildings and grounds are being put in beautiful order. The schedule of lectures will be so arranged as to give the first year men a succinct course covering the whole ground of systematic theology, thus fitting them better than ever for their vacation work.

It is expected that the special lectures provided for by the Board some years ago will this year be a series on Preaching by that great master of the art, Rev. Dr. Moses D. Hoge.

The services in the College church last Sunday were in memory of the late Dr. H.C. Alexander.

Dr. English, of the Seminary, is still supplying the pulpit of the First church, Richmond.

Dr. Moore has been unanimously elected to the L. P. Stone Lectureship in Princeton Theological Seminary and has accepted the appointment. This does not affect his position as professor in Union Seminary. He is to deliver a series of six or eight lectures on the Stone Foundation at Princeton, and these lectures are then to be published in a handsome volume. When we recall his eminent predecessors in this lectureship, such as Dr. Storrs, of Brooklyn, and President Bartlett, of Dartmouth, we appreciate the more this compliment to our Southern Church and Seminary.

Dr. Johnson is pushing to completion the first volume of the collected writings of the late Dr. Peck.

In short "the oldest and largest divinity school in the Southern Church" continues to hold her own in manifold activity and fruitfulness.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Jonesboro:—We have recently received three members into the Jonesboro church—two by letter and one by profession of faith in Christ. There are others who will join soon. Messrs. J. Alton McIver and C. H. Russell were recently elected and ordained as ruling elders, and J. H. Mann and A. C. Vick as deacons. We feel that we are now ready for the Master's work. And we are praying that God may bless us more abundantly and that right early, Manchester Mills:—A correspondent writes the Southwestern Presbyterian: I have just returned from this place, where I have been assisting Rev. W. C. Roe in a meeting. The Lord was present from the beginning. There were some twenty to twenty-five confessions, and seventeen additions to our church. These joined the church at Handley, and Bro. Roe is to preach at the Mills (three miles distant) in the afternoon. A good Sunday-school was organized on Sabbath afternoon, and a Young People's Society will soon be organized to develop the young Christians.

GOSPEL SINGING.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

DEAR READERS:—How many sermons have you heard on this subject? How many newspaper articles, setting forth in a true light the very great importance of gospel singing, have come before your notice?

How often have you given yourself to sober thought in regard to the importance of singing, and the obligation resting upon you to sing?

If your minds have not specially been called to this matter, please follow me while I attempt briefly to set forth a few facts, which, I am sure, are too frequently overlooked. You recognize it a duty to pray. Every true Christian recognizes this; and there is hardly any one but has heard the importance of prayer often discoursed on. Prayer is of very great importance. We cannot live spiritually without it. As some one has said: "Prayer is the connecting link which fastens us to heaven." But while prayer is eminently necessary and truly of very great importance, yet what is the relative importance of song? What is singing? Singing is conversation set to music. Gospel singing is holy conversation in song.

In song, we praise and adore and offer up supplications and thanksgivings unto the Creator of the World and Redeemer of the spirits of men in strains many times lofty and soul-inspiring. We, so to speak, talk to one another about the goodness, love and mercy of God; about heaven; about our duties toward man and God; in fact about all those things that are found in sacred song. Indeed singing, where several are engaged in it, might be called a kind of a concert preaching process—a preaching that, when well conducted, is peculiarly attractive and enjoyable; for where is the ear that is so exceedingly dull and heavy that it is not attracted, and the heart so impenetrable that it cannot be touched and moved by gospel sentiment in sacred song?

Then isn't gospel singing truly of very great importance?

Further, do we find any warrant in Scripture for singing? Very abundant:

1. The length of the songs recorded in the Bible indicates to us something of the importance of song.

What of the length of recorded songs relative to that of the prayers? They are of very much greater length. For proof of this statement turn to "the grandest ode to liberty which was ever sung," the song of Moses, which celebrates the deliverance of the Children of Israel, by the outstretched arm of Jehovah, from the hand of their heartless oppressors, as recorded in the first 21 verses of the 15th chapter of Exodus. Again, turn to Deut. 32nd chapter and you will find another song of Moses 48 verses long, written the same day in which he was commanded by God to go upon Mount Nebo to die. Again turn to the 5th chapter of Judges, and read the song of Deborah and Barak. The whole chapter of 31 verses is spent in celebrating the victory of Israel over Jabin, king of Canaan, and the happy consequences following upon it.

And now, read the song which sets forth the thankfulness of David for his deliverance out of the hands of all of his enemies, composing the first 51 verses of 22nd chapter of 2d Samuel.

This occupies more space than three of the famous prayers of the Bible combined: Viz: that of our Lord, of Daniel, and of Elijah. What of this great amount of space given to song? Does it not teach us unmistakably that the divine seal of approval is upon gospel song, and that gospel singing is of no slight importance?

2. The number of songs in the Bible is another proof of the importance of singing. As to number, we have not only these which we have already considered, but the numerous songs of the Psalter and the various other poetic books, embracing in their scope the sublime sorrows and reconciliations of faithful Job: the giant faith, lion boldness, and deep humility of David; and the unparalleled wisdom of Solomon. Think you not that the greatness of the number is proof of their importance?

3. The attention paid to singing in O. T. times is proof of the importance of singing. Israel had a trained choir—skillful players and singers, and almost three hundred in number. 1 Chron. 25:7. And whenever victory is gained or any special blessing conferred on them, we find them celebrating their success in song.

4. Finally the importance of singing is proved by the fact that God's word invites and commands us to sing. There are invitations and commands in the Bible that we are quite familiar with, but how few of us seriously think of the fact that Holy Scripture invites, and commands us to sing. "Sing aloud unto God our strength." Ps. 81:1. "O come, let us sing unto the Lord." Ps. 95:1. "O sing unto the Lord a new song; sing unto the Lord all the earth," &c. Ps. 96:1-2.

Please read carefully the following references: Ps. 57:5-11; Ps. 66:1, 2; Ps. 98:1; Ps. 100:2; Ps. 147:1; Ps. 149:1; Acts 16:25; Eph. 5:20; Col. 3:16.

Dear readers, are these words of Scripture sufficiently heeded?

Do we have enough singing in our homes, in our public schools, in our Sabbath-schools and in our church worship? Do you recognize it your duty to sing, and to teach those around you to sing?"

"Sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of His, sing, sing, sing unto the Lord, and at the remembrance of His holiness, O give thanks unto the Lord.

EVANGELISTIC WORK—FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

At its spring meeting in April, Fayetteville Presbytery, directed its ministers and sessions to canvass their respective congregations, to see how much they would pledge for the support of a general Presbyterial Evangelist for a year, the money not to be paid unless the Evangelist was employed, and to inform the Chairman of the Home Missions Committee of the result of their efforts by the first of June. It is now July and only the following churches have been heard from and some of these have made their promises verbally through their pastors:

Laurinburg and Ida Mills pledge	$ 80 00
Centre and Maxton pledge	100 00
Rockingham, Lumberton and Jackson Springs pledge	48 00
Fayetteville	100 00
Red Springs, Antioch and Philadelphus	100 00
Total	$428 00

Only eleven churches and five charges have reported that they have made any effort at all, and as it will require from $1,000 to $1,200 to employ an efficient Evangelist the way is not yet open for the Home Missions Committee to secure one.

At least three fourths of his support should be definitely pledged, before it would be safe, financially to put a man in our Presbyterial field. But if eleven churches can provide more than one-third of his support, there is no doubt about the ability of the remaining sixty four churches, to furnish an Evangelist an adequate maintenance. Some of the churches, which have so far taken no action in this matter are strong organizations, with large membership, intelligent officers, and as much financial ability, as those churches that have made pledges. The inaction respecting this important matter may be due to a variety of causes. The stringency of the times, the indebtedness of some churches to their pastors, the neglect of pastors and church officers, and the want of a profound conviction as to our constant need of a Presbyterial evangelist may all conduce to the apparent supineness in many of our churches as to employing a general evangelist. But such an officer is absolutely necessary to every live and progressive Presbytery. We need him to plant the gospel in waste places, to supply vacant churches, to build up feeble organizations, to aid local evangelists in working their fields, to assist vacant charges in securing pastors, and to be the living link between the weak and the strong, the destitute places, and the vigorous churches of the Presbytery. An efficient General Evangelist, laboring throughout the bounds of the Presbytery wherever his services are most needed, can reach more people, make more converts, and advance the cause of Presbyterianism, to a larger extent, than any settled pastor who has a more limited field. But while there is an imperative need of an evangelist at large, in our bounds, requiring for his support from $1,000 to $1,200, the other departments of evangelist work, local evangelization and Church Erection require the raising in February and August about $1,000 more. We have one evangelist in Johnson county to retain whom Presbytery must pay $525. We have two other fields where the support of the pastors must be supplemented about $800. To aid in Church Erection at different points, requires annual appropriations of from $100 to $200. To do then the evangelistic work in the Presbytery thoroughly would necessitate raising $800 for local evangelists, $200 for Church Erection, and $1,000 at least for a general evangelist, making in the aggregate $2,000. The ability of Fayetteville Presbytery to contribute this amount for its own evangelistic work is unquestionable. We have seventy-five churches and more than seven thousand communicants, and an average of thirty cents per member, would provide the sum needed. Will not the brethren send in their pledges for the General Evangelist, and endeavor to raise in August fifteen cents per member for Presbyterial Home Mission work?

July Contribution to the Invalid Fund.

Do not forget that this is the month set apart for making contributions to give some comforts to the aged and infirm ministers, the aged and infirm widows and the orphan children of ministers deceased. A widow in a letter received this morning, asks if we can furnish her with $75 that she may be able to send her two children to the Assembly's Home and School in Fredericksburg, Va. To-day all earthly investments are shrinking. Your contribution given from the heart to Christ for this fund will be treasure laid up in heaven. No moth, no rust will corrupt it; no thief will steal it; it will not shrink in value.

If you cannot conveniently contribute through your church collection send it directly to the Assembly's Treasurer, W. A. Powell, Atlanta, Ga., and if you wish the contribution to be placed to the credit of your church please so say in your letter of remittance. The month is passing rapidly.

A friend writes concerning the "Letters on Baptism" which we have previously noticed: These letters are addressed by Rev. E. B. Fairfield, D. D., to one whom he denominates a warm personal friend. If the work brings out little that is new, it certainly adds fresh interest to a subject thought to be well nigh worn out. While sufficiently critical, its style is sprightly and its mode of treatment simple and clear. This may be said of the book, it is a careful study of a Scripture term in the light of the Scriptures themselves. The author had been for a long time a Baptist, and fully persuaded of the correctness of his view that immersion is the only Scriptural baptism. A Baptist publishing house engaged his services to prepare a book in defense of the Baptist faith. He thought he could present an unanswerable argument; but after more than two years careful investigation of the subject he became perfectly satisfied that the Baptist position was untenable, and that he could no longer preach the gospel as a Baptist minister. This little work is worthy of general circulation.

Rev. K. A. McLeod:—Writes from Jonesboro, Jnly 16th: We are now settled in our new home. We have a very kind people. There is hardly a day that we do not receive something for our table. The good people of the Jonesboro congregation have shown their kindness by sending us bacon, butter, beef, cakes, chickens, hams, jellies, melons, pickles, preserves and all kinds of vegetables. We are due them many thanks for these tokens of kindness and our prayer is that the Lord may richly reward them here, and in the end crown them with crowns of eternal life.

A boiler of the Eccleson-Parmale saw mill at Jacksonville exploded on Sunday morning last at 2.40 o'clock. Three negroes were killed instantly and a fourth so badly wounded that he is expected to die. Steam was kept on to furnish heat to the dry-kilns. There were eight boilers. Only one exploded and it was hurled through the planing mill into the woods about a quarter mile away. Large trees were cut through in its course.

The River and Harbor bill which passed the U. S. Senate last week we learn from the Star increased the appropriation for the lower Cape Fear from $80,000 to $200,000, and made the appropriation a continuing one until the improvement is complete, and authorizing the expenditure of $1,500,000 upon this improvement. The appropriation for the upper Cape Fear is increased from $12,000 to $20,000; Northeast river $5,000. He secured an appropriation of $35,000 for a quarantine station in Cape Fear. Senator Ransom is credited for this service.

Charlotte News: The seasonable rains continue, and the improvement, in the condition of the crops in the past few days is simply wonderful. Corn and cotton are fairly booming. There never was a finer prospect at this season of the year, and as a consequence, farmers, merchants and business people of all kinds are feeling in good humor!

Danbury Reporter: The blackberry crop in this section is not only abundant, but the fruit is the finest almost ever known.

Fayetteville Observer: The crops in this section are very fine and the farmers are jubilant.

Durham Globe: The Globe has reliable information to the effect that Prof. Collins Denny has refused the Presidency of Trinity College, which was tendered him by the Board of Trustees a few days since.

Goldsboro Argus: The late rains have transformed this section and our farmers are rejoicing in the prospect of abundant crops, everything is looking well, and if nothing happens to blight the prospects the husbandman will be happy in abundant harvest.

Smithfield Herald: Mr. John W. Upchurch, of Glenmore, says he was out in his field some days ago and found a partridge taking care of a partridge and two small chickens. She seems very fond of the chickens. He thinks a hen laid two eggs in the nest and the partridge set on them and hatched them. They now range in his pasture. Mr. M. D. Johnson says he has seen two nests in which hens and partridges laid together.

We copy from the press dispatches: A sensation was caused in shipping circles in Baltimore last Saturday by the arrival in port of the bark Glad Tidings, from Rio, with yellow fever on board. The Glad Tidings, Capt. Young, left Rio for Baltimore on June 12th with 9,000 bags of coffee. A few days before her departure, W. W. Benson, the cook, was attacked with the fever. He was sent to the hospital and left behind. On June 13th Second Officer Fritz Hines was stricken with the dread disease. He died on June 28th and was buried at sea. No more cases broke out and the officers supposed that the disease had been stamped out. The law requires that a vessel arriving with an infectous disease aboard should go into quarantine. Capt. Young thought it was unnecessary to stop at the capes and came up to Baltimore. The custom house officials refused her entry and Surgeon-General Wyman has the case under advisement. Capt. Young says the yellow fever has been nearly stamped out of Rio de Janeiro. The people are recovering from the effects of the recent rebellion and the business interests of Brazil are assuming their usual activity.

An extensive plot to assassinate the Czar is said to have been unearthed at Kirpitschnaja, Russia, last week. Two Polish students and a sister of one of them are incriminated.

The fire was qutckly extinguished, when a quantity of matches and a bottle of turpentine were discovered to have been the cause of the fire. Third Quarter.—Lesson V.

July 29.—The Youth Jesus.

Luke ii. 40–52. Commit vss. 46–49.

Golden Text. And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man—Luke ii. 52.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. The lesson takes us back to the gospel of Luke, which told of the return to Nazareth (ii. 39) but did not narrate the events leading to that return. The lesson is a summary of the period intervening between the infancy and our Lord's public ministry with an incident illustrating that summary. There are no intervening links between this and previous lessons, but it will be well just here to review all you have learned about our Lord's infancy.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: The growing child, vs. 40, the first visit to Jerusalem, vss. 41–43; the search and the discovery, 44–46; his eager pursuit of knowledge and his previous attainments, vss. 46, 47; the reproachful question and the reproachful answer, vss. 48–50; obedience, pondering, development, vss. 51, 52.

Third Step. Study with your helps any points needing explanation:.

Vs. 40. Grew—waxed strong. The better texts omit "in spirit" leaving the expression general. It includes all growth and all strength, and shows our Lord's perfect humanity. He was a natural boy and not the infant wonder-worker that the apocryphal gospels describe. The spiritual development is emphasized in the expression, "filled with wisdom."

The grace of God. The same word rendered favor in vs. 52, when the connection of the expression with "man" forbids the translation grace. Favor is the root meaning of the word; extended to sinners it acquires the idea of unmerited favor; revealed in its effect on character it acquires the familiar idea of sanctifying grace.

Vs. 41. Went up every year. Showing their strict conformity to God's law. For the law of the Passover recall or review Lesson X. Second Quarter.

Vs. 42. When he was twelve. He would be called twelve when he was in his twelfth year. At this age a Jewish boy became "a son of the law"—that is was expected to fulfil its external obligations. There is unlimited room for the exercise of the imagination as to His thoughts at first seeing "the city of the great King." But we forbear.

Vss. 43, 44. To understand how this is possible we must remember that the people went up to Jerusalem in great caravans, those of the same neighborhood travelling together, and within those limits those of the same age and sex naturally associated together. Mary would suppose he was with Joseph, and Joseph that he was with Mary. When they went into camp the first night (the first day's journey, home was short, only eight or nine miles made in the afternoon), and Joseph and Mary met they discovered their mistake.

Tarried in Jerusalem. Not deliberately, but from pre-occupation. The maturity of Jesus was shown in that His parents did not think it necessary to keep Him with them, but would trust Him to choose His own occupations and companions.

Vs. 46. After three days. The Oriental way of saying the third day; one day on the journey, one day's rapid return and fruitless search in Jerusalem, and the discovery some time on the third day. As to His housing and food during that time there would be no difficulty with the simple wants of a peasant lad and the abounding hospitality of the Passover season.

In the temple. In some room or porch of the Temple where the Rabbis held open sessions for all who wished to come and learn. Neither here nor anywhere in the gospels must we understand by "Temple" anything more than some of the courts, porches, or outer-chambers. Our Lord never passed beyond the "court of the Men"—was never in the Priest's court, or the sanctuary proper, "the way into the holiest being not yet manifest." The Greek makes the distinction. Naos is the sanctuary; hieros, the whole temple area. The latter is always used of the movements of our Lord and the Apostles.

Hearing and asking questions. As a learner and inquirer. The grotesque idea of Jesus as a youthful prodigy teaching the doctors of the law destroys the beauty and the instructiveness of the whole scene.

Vs. 47. Understanding and answers. Showing the progress He had already made.

Vs. 48. Sorrowing. The first prick of that sword that was to pierce her soul (vs. 35)—unless we except the anxiety of the flight into Egypt. The only sorrow He ever caused her was when His Father's business took Him from her side as here, made her anxious for his life and health (Mark iii. 20, 21, 31), and at last took from her a son to give her a Saviour (John xix. 25). Happy mother!

Vs. 49. About my Father's business. The Greek has no word for "business" but the neuter plural of the article; "in the (things) of my Father." The R. V. renders, "in my Father's house;" that is, why did you look elsewhere? Why did you not come straight here, where I ought to be found? We think this idea is fully involved in the older translation, which is more general and so better reproduces the general expression of the original. These are the first recorded words of our Saviour, and reveal (1) That He had found God as His Father, not only in a clearer sense than had yet been attained of the doctrine of God's general fatherhood, but in a peculiar, personal sense; (2) that He already recognized that His Father had a special work for Him to do; (3) that He was swift and eager to be engaged in it; (4) that He recognized a proper preparation for His work as a part of the work itself.

Vs. 50. Understood not. Evidently they had told Him nothing about the remarkable circumstances of His birth, and are not a little surprised when they find that His knowledge of His origin and His mission is clearer than theirs.

Vs. 51. Was subject unto them. Contentedly resigns the more exciting and brilliant occupation for the humbler duties of their Galilean home. Not the doctors but the people, were to be His human teachers.

Kept. She could not understand, but she treasured them up. From her the evangelists doubtless derived all these incidents.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson and compare it with ours:

SUMMARY. The infant Jesus grew into a boy, maturing in strength and wisdom until in His twelfth year He went up with His parents to Jerusalem to the feast of the Passover. At the end of the feast His parents started home and did not discover until night that he was not with them. Then having searched among their friends in the caravan they returned to Jerusalem and, after another day spent in fruitless search, they found Him in the Temple, having been so eagerly engaged in the pursuit of knowledge that He did not notice their departure. The insight of His questions and the attainment shown in His answers are the wonder of all. To His mother's reproachful inquiry, He replies with an equally reproachful question. His Father's business was His chief concern and they should have looked for Him in His Father's house. But He returns with them, and remains subject to them—Mary meanwhile pondering what she cannot understand, and He increasing in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man.

Fifth Step. Study the "youth of Jesus" as summarized in vs. 52, and as illuminated by the incident of the lesson and other Scripture side-lights:

1. His development.
   a. Physical. In stature.
      Nourished by food, Luke iv. 2.
      Strengthened by toil, Mark vi. 3.
   b. Spiritual. In wisdom.
   (1) Taught in God's word.
      By pious parents, vss. 22, 27, 39, 41; ch. i. 46; compare Deut. vi. 6, 7.
      Attendance on the synagogue, Luke iv. 16.
      In the schools of the Rabbis; at Jerusalem (vs. 46), having evidently made good use of the humbler opportunities at Nazareth (vs. 47).
      Reading, as well as hearing, Luke iv. 16. (Note that the Synagogue rolls were in ancient Hebrew, while the popular language was Aramaic. There is evidence in some of our Lord's quotations that He used also the Septuagint or Greek translation.)
   (2) Meditation on man and nature. (Evidence in the general substance of His discourses.)
   (3) Communion with God, vs. 49, My Father, personal.
2. Characteristics.
   (a) Winning favor from man.
      Earnestness, vss. 46, 49.
      Humility, vs. 51.
      Graciousness in word, Luke iv. 22.
      Helpfulness in deed, Mark vi. 3. Note that Joseph disappears after this incident, evidently dying before our Lord's ministry opened. Note also the natural way in which Mary turns to Him as one upon whom she was accustomed to rely, John ii. 3. Besides this there is the active sympathy of our Lord's ministry, and the fact that only the unselfish life wins favor from man—only the loving are loved.
   (b) Winning favor from God.
      Holiness, Heb. vii. 26, 1 Pet. ii. 22.
      Consecration, vs. 49 (His first words); Matt. iii. 15 (His next words); John iv. 34.

Sixth Step. Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus (Phil. ii. 5); leaving us an example that we should follow in His steps (1 Pet. ii. 2); he that saith he abideth in Him ought himself also so to walk even as He walked (1 John ii. 6). God give us grace to learn this lesson, and we have learned all lessons.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

If one has studied this lesson aright he will so teach it as to make the youthful Jesus a living person to the minds and hearts of his scholars, and will not only impress upon them the Lord's example, but His present sympathy with all a child's needs and temptations and His readiness to help them to make their life like His life. Heb. iv. 15, 16.

Prize Questions.

82. Give a reference that shows that our Lord wrote, (as well as read).
83. Give the name of a great Doctor of the law who as a young man may have been present at this scene.
84. Give an instance of the surprise of the people at Jesus' learning, because—apart from this incident he had not had the advantages of the schools at Jerusalem.

[The Prize Questions last week should have been numbered 80 and 81—instead of 77 and 78. In acknowledging answers, credits to Willie Arrowood, Laurinburg, for No. 70 in full, Janet McDonald, Ivanhoe, in part were overlooked.]

In Raleigh, on July 7th, Mr. W. THOMAS COX, of Sanford, N. C. Bro. Cox was a faithful and much beloved deacon in our church at Sanford. A devoted wife, two promising children by a former wife, and a host of relatives and friends mourn his loss. He was ready when the unexpected summons came.

Entered into rest, June 20th, 1894, Mrs. CORNELIA CONRAD FLUCK, aged 26 years. For several years she had been a member of the Presbyterian church here. She was in all respects a faithful and conscientious child of God. An earnest worker and consistent Christian, we shall miss her in the Master's vineyard here. We mourn, but not as those who have no hope. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

MISS INNIA E. HILL.

On June 9th, 1894, at the residence of her father, in Taylorsville, N. C., Miss INNIA E. HILL, passed from earth to heaven. She was a child of the covenant and had been dedicated to God in baptism by her parents. In her sixteenth year, she publicly professed her faith in Christ and was admitted to the communion of the Lord's Supper. She loved her church and was devoted to its interests. She had charge of a Sabbath-school class and was an earnest and faithful teacher and worker. For several years she was the organist of the church and was a very faithful and acceptable one. For nearly six months she was a prisoner of the Lord, suffering most intensely the greater part of the time. At last God released her from her bonds, and in full consciousness of the end that was near she bade the family "farewell," May God comfort the stricken family, and the memory of the loved one now at rest be to them a perpetual benediction A. Near Little River Academy, in Cumberland county, N. C., on the 25th of May, 1894, FANNIE McBRYDE, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Giles. Little Fannie's stay in this world of affliction and sin was only two months, but long enough for the hearts of parents to become very much attached to her and not without sorrow could they give her up. May the Lord bless them and family and enable them to see that what God does is best.

Say Soes.

No one is useless in this world who lightens the burden of it for another.—Dickens.

Only as each man and each woman performs his or her personal duty in any department be lifted to a higher plane.

"If all the gold in mint or bank,
All earthly things that men call wealth
Were mine, with every titled rank,
I'd give them all for precious health."

Thus in anguish wrote a lady teacher to a near friend, telling of pitiless headache, of smarting pain of pain in back and loins, of dejection, weakness and nervous, feverish unrest. The friend knew both causes and cure and flashed back the answer, "Take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription." The distressed teacher obeyed, was restored to perfect health, and her daily duties once more became a daily pleasure. For lady teachers, saleslades and others kept long standing or broken down by exhausting work, the "Prescription" is a most potent restorative tonic, and a certain cure for all female weakness. Guaranteed to cure in every case or money returned. FOR THE FAMILY.

UP AND DOING.

Boys, be up and doing,
For the day's begun;
Soon will come the noontide,
Then the set of sun;
At your tasks toil bravely
Till your work is done.

Let your hands be busy
In some useful way;
Don't neglect your study;
Don't forget your play;
For each there's time enough
Every blessed day.

You will soon be men, boys;
Soon will have to take
The places of your fathers,
Fill it for their sake;
And in all that's noble
Pray be wide awake!

Boys, be kind and friendly.
Lend a helping hand
To the weak and feeble,
Till alone they stand;
And in loving others
Fulfill God's command.

Don't be mean and selfish;
Stoop not to decit;
In all things be manly,
Life will then be sweet,
And Death's coming find you
With your work complete!

THE OLDEST DRESSMAKER'S BILL IN THE WORLD.

Among the documents which have recently been discovered in ancient Chaldea is a tablet which may be called "the oldest dressmaker's bill in the world." It was the custom of the Babylonian kings to present to the temple sets of robes for the use of the priests and priestesses. This was usually done every year, and we have many of these lists in the British Museum. The oldest hitherto known has been that of a king, about 1,450 B. C. There are several of a later period, but the document before us is far older than any yet found. The tablet, which is of limestone, was discovered in the ruins of the temple in the city of Nipur, in Southern Chaldea. This temple was dedicated to the ghost god, and had a very large priesthood attached to it. From the style of the writing, which is extremely archaic, and from the curious system of numerals employed, the tablet cannot be of later date than 2,800 B. C. It contains a list of ninety-two vestments which were presented to the temple by the king. The name of the king is, unfortunately, not given. The end of the tablet reads: "In all, ninety-two pure vestments, the bill (list) of the temple for the priests this year." Many of the words are unknown to us as there are no doubt many of them technical terms employed by the modistes of the period. Some of the lines, however, are of particular interest—those that can be satisfactorily deciphered. Among the items are "twelve white robes of the temple, eight robes of the house of his lady, ten collars of the house of his lady, ten pure gold collars, two white robes." One item of especial interest occurs near the end: "Four scented robes." This reminds us of the passage in Psalm 14, speaking of the robe redolent of "myrrh and aloes and cassia." It was no doubt the custom in Babylonia to perfume the robes, as it is to this day in Persia and India. Another item is also illustrative of Eastern life: "Two winders," probably scarfs used for binding round the waist.

This document has likewise an additional value in showing us the great development which had taken place in the textile arts in Chaldea even at this early period.—The Queen, London.

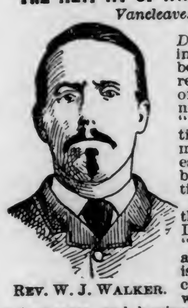
PAINTS PICTURES WITH HER TOES.

Mlle. Aimee Rapin, one of the most celebrated portrait painters of the world, is an armless wonder, having been born in the little town of Payerne, Switzerland, without hands or arms. Her father died when she was but 12 years old, and a wealthly gentleman becoming interested in her by seeing some paintings which she had made by holding the brush and palette in her toes, undertook the care of her artistic training, and sent her to the art school of Lausanne, and thence to Geneva, where she took several prizes at the academy. In 1891 she went to London, and subsequently painted the picture of the Princess May, wife of the duke of York, and it created a distinct sensation. Commissions from members of the English aristocracy followed, and when it became known that the artist was without hands or arms the interest in her works became greater because of the insurmountable difficulties which she had overcome in her career. She has established a studio in London, which has become a fashionable resort, and her portraits, though modern in tone and conception, are remarkable for their elegant simplicity.—N. O. Picayune.

Things Useful.

Don't clean brass with acids. Use putty powder and sweet oil; wash off with soapsuds and dry. It will insure brightness.

Lime water mixed with as much linseed oil, or sweet oil, as it will cut is an excellent remedy for burns or scalds, and should be kept on hand.



To polish a table until it will reflect the books laid upon it rub it dry, then take one ounce of yellow resin and a pint of raw linseed oil; melt the resin and add to it by degrees one-half of the oil. When these are thoroughly incorporated add, by degrees the remainder of the oil.

Cream of Corn Soup.—One pint grated corn, three tablespoonfuls of butter, three pints of boiling water, two even tablespoonfuls of flour, one pint hot milk, yelks of two eggs; salt and pepper to taste. Put the cobs from which you have removed the corn in the boiling water and boil slowly half an hour; remove them, put in the corn and boil until soft (about twenty minutes), then press through a sieve; season and let simmer while you rub butter and flour together; add these to the soup and stir constantly until it thickens. Now add the boiling milk, cook one minute, add the beaten yelks and serve immediately.

Cherry-puffs.—A cherry-puff is a simple and delicious dessert. Take rich, red cherries. It is necessary that they should be especially sweet. A tart cherry will serve very well for this purpose, provided it is rich. Make a delicate biscuit dough, a heaping teaspoonful of baking powder, and milk enough to mix it into a soft dough, with just consistency enough to be stirred. Add a cup of stoned cherries to this mixture, beat it well, turn it into greased cups, and steam it half an hour, until well puffed up. Serve the puffs with a hard sauce, flavored with caramel, or simply nutmeg. Not every housekeeper knows that a cherry tapioca made exactly like an apple tapioca is almost as nice.

THE CHRISTIAN'S
SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work, besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

Law Taught By Mail

It was the boy on the farm; the boy behind the counter; the boy in the mill; the boy in the lawyer's office; the boy in the bank—the ambitious boy, who first made this method of teaching law a necessity. The outcome is found in the Sprague Correspondence School of Law, an institution that gives a thorough legal education by mail, and helps practicing lawyers to review. The tuition fee is small, the course complete, the examination thorough, the result perfect. Send 10c. for particulars.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

TEACH ME, O, FATHER.

Up to me sweet childhood looketh,
Heart and mind and soul awake;
Teach me of Thy ways, O Father!
For sweet childhood's sake.

In their young hearts soft and tender,
Guide my hand good seed to sow,
That its blossoming may praise Thee
Wheresoe'er they go.

Give to me a cheerful spirit,
That my little flock may see
It is good and pleasant service
To be taught of Thee.

Father, order all my footsteps;
So direct my daily way,
That in following me, the children
May not go astray.

Let Thy holy counsel lead me;
Let Thy light before me shine,
That they may not stumble over
Word or deed of mine.

Draw us hand in hand to Jesus,
For his Word's sake, unforgot,—
"Let the little ones come to me,
And forbid them not."

Servia's Young King.

Servia is a little country on the borderland between the east and the west of Europe, as safe among its great neighbors, Russia, Germany. Austria, Italy, and Turkey, as Switzerland, which has been independent for hundreds of years. Servia, like Switzerland, is safe because none of its powerful neighbors will consent to its conquest by any other. From 1389 to 1878 Servia was a dependent of Turkey, but in that year its people, under Prince Milan Obrenovich, rebelled, and were about to be beaten, when Russia interfered, and Servia was freed. By a treaty made at Berlin. Servia also obtained some of the territory from which its people had been driven, and its limits were increased to 10,050 square miles. Its Prince received the title of King, and its government was made a limited monarchy, somewhat like that of Great Britain. It has a congress elected once in three years, which sits annually, and is called the Skupshtina. It has 134 members, who in recent years have been elected by the people, every citizen who pays a poll tax having a vote. On July 6th, 1889, King Milan resigned his crown in favor of his son, Prince Alexander. The King was not a good monarch nor a good man, and owing partly to his unpopularity with his people, and partly to his quarrels with Queen Natalie, he decided to give up his throne, and he and the Queen separated. Alexander was born, August 14th, 1876. As he was too young to be the real King, three ministers were appointed to reign in his stead until Alexander should be eighteen years old.

The young King followed his mother to Berlin, where she went to reside, although she is a Russian. The ministers would not allow him to remain there, however. They had him brought back to Belgrade, the capital of Servia, by force, and put him in the university there. He is a good student of English, French, German, and moral philosophy, and his tutors think him a young man of great promise.

On April 18th of last year, King Alexander gave a dinner in his palace at Belgrade, in celebration of the completion of his education. He was then not quite seventeen years old. To this dinner he invited his ministers and regents, and in the middle of the banquet he rose and said: "Gentlemen, you have now reigned in my place for four years. For all that you have done, I thank you. I have now reached an age when I feel able to rule, myself, and I therefore ask your resignations."

The ministers refused to resign, and the young King called in the troops who guard the palace, put them under arrest, proclaimed himself King, in the presence of the people, and then sent the ministers to their homes under the escort of soldiers. The people, who were tired of the ministers, accepted the young king, and his reign has not been disturbed. Recently, ex-King Milan and Queen Natalie have become reconciled, and it is said that the agents of the Czar have been constantly in Belgrade, advising the young King. Whether his father and mother, the ex-king and queen, have also urged him to take the step is not known, but at any rate he surprised his subjects, on May 21st, by another revolution. On that day, he issued a proclamation abolishing the constitution, and all the laws that have been enacted under it. By the proclamation, the constitution is restored which was in operation during the later years that Servia was a dependency of Turkey. This does not mean that Servia is again in any way under the Sultan, however. It means that the King appoints one-third of the members of the Skupshtina, and that his powers are greatly increased. Alexander I. has declared that he will soon call a convention to adopt a new constitution. Thus far there has not been any serious opposition to the action of the king, who, although he is not yet eighteen years of age, and is the ruler of only two and a quarter millions of people, is one of the most conspicuous figures in Europe.—Harper's Young People.

Little Johnny and the Dandelion.

Little Johnny was just entering his third summer. Of course he had seen very little of the world, and had very much to learn. So, one warm bright afternoon, while playing in the yard he took a lesson which he remembers yet. In the rich green grass a bright yellow dandelion caught his eye, but he did not notice a singular looking spot about the middle of the flower. That spot was nothing less than a merry honeybee, who had come singing along through the air, in search of honey and wax, and stopped to see if that flower had any for him. Thrusting his long tongue down to the bottom of the leaves Mr. Bee was sucking away at the sweet juices there, when Johnny came trotting along. Quick as thought down went that sweet little hand, and back again it came as quickly, bringing in its grasp, flower, bee and all. The poor bee was very much surprised in this sudden change in his circumstances; he thought that the sky or something else had fallen on him; but whatever might be the case, he was resolved not to give up his life without a trial, and so twisting his little body around he sent his sharp poisoned sting deep into Johnny's hand, and didn't that little hand let go in a hurry, and didn't the nurse hear a vigorous scream from Johnny's lungs, and while she ran to the aid of the suffering child the bee gathered himself up and set out for home, wondering what in the world such little two legged pests as boys were made for, and vowing that for once he was not going to expose his jacket again to those dandelions.

But the bee-sting had not only marked Johnny's hand, but had written this lesson on his memory: That sometimes very pretty things have very sharp stings. This is an important truth.

Wine looks very pretty in the glass, but the Bible says that if we become fond of drinking it will "bite like a serpent and sting like an adder."

Sin often looks very inviting, but the Bible tells us that "The sting of death is sin."

A little boy once asked his mother for a peach. She asked if he had not already eaten one. To get another he told a lie and said, "No." But after he went to bed that lie stung him so that he was afraid to go to sleep till he had called his mother, confessed his sin, and asked her pardon.

I hope my young readers will remember that sometimes very pretty things have very sharp stings.—Journal.

The church will be let to contract now very soon and I want to meet all payments promptly. Think a moment how easily 400 persons could send me the remaining $449.24, if they would only respond at once, and how lightly it would fall on each one. Do not hesitate to send me something, because it may be small. Send what you can—but please send it!

Somebody said so me at Presbytery, "Bro. White, you are getting to be as bad at begging as Dr. Hawes." Well now I think that is very good company to be in and I think I can explain how it comes about.

Dr. Hawes was moderator of the Presbytery at which I was licensed, and so he is as it were, a kind of ecclesiastical father, and I think I must have inherited it. I come by it honestly therefore and so I want you to help me raise the rest at once. Send it right along please to Rev. Wm. C. White, Warm Springs, Va.

THE POTTERS.

Last week we called attention to a man of the olden time whose history is written in a few lines of the fourth chapter of first Chronicles. In the same chapter a little further on is the record of laboring men. Their condition in life is the opposite of that of JABEZ. Between these two conditions lie all the classes and experiences of individuals and communities. The lessons we may learn from those two make the reading of this chapter important. Yet other advantages will be found. These long hard names are interesting in separate study and the meaning of each may suggest the mind of the parents in selecting them, or the after experience of the bearers which may have suggested them. These chapters ought to be read if only to cultivate our patience or our vocabulary.

The Bible gives due attention to all classes and, with no approval of evil, makes manifest the rewards of piety. It shows JABEZ honorable in learning and wealth, and craftsmen noble in industry and integrity. By a comparison of verses fourteen, twenty-one and twenty-three, we have mention of the various classes of the craftsmen. There are the carpenters and weavers, the gardeners and potters. The families pursued the same trades for generations.

They seem also to have dwelt together as we find to this day in the streets of Damascus. Possibly these habits had been brought from Egypt. They are common in the East.

This record gives an illustration of change of fortune. One of the mothers among their ancestors was a princess a daughter of PHARAOH. Three of the progenitors of these linen workers, potters and gardeners were of those who held dominion in Moab. Without any evidence of immorality they had come from being well-to-do, to hard manual labor. This is supposed to be peculiar to our times and country. Here is evidence that the ancients had such experiences as we. It is a rebuke to our complainers and chronic grumblers to find that they were diligent and thankful in their places and work. These descendants of rulers and princes are found among plants and hedges. It is no discredit to them. It only shows what may come to any one. The millionaire to-day may be a pauper to-morrow, himself or his descendants. It is only a question how this change of circumstances will be met, how the duties will be performed. It is a question of the ability of any to bear the responsibilities and endure the hardships. It is important that the rising generation should be trained and prepared for whatever may come. The reverse may be wrought by industry and economy. The poor may be rich. In faithfulness and patience the children may win success and restore the loss of the fathers. It may be done in part by realizing that work is honorable. Idleness or immorality are disgraceful. JEREMIAH the prophet, was a potter and his nobility was his honesty and industry.

Even in their menial labor and lowly place these laborers were in honor because they dwelt there with the king for his work. Here the instance passes into an illustration. We may all be workers for our KING. He calls for all manner of work and many workmen. We may well rejoice that this is so. It ennobles every worker and glorifies every task, whether great or small in human estimation, to know we are "with the KING for His work." We work at His commandment, according to His plans and He condescends to work with us. It is the need of our hearts to rejoice that He is our business PARTNER and that He will take all the responsibility. We have only to leave all to Him, and cast all our care upon Him. He careth for us and working with Him will exalt both the workman and his work. He will take care of us. He will give us peace and rest. In this contentment can come in and abide and joy drive away discouragement and distress. Dwelling with the KING for His work there can be no failure. Success is sure. Beyond this, as if anything more were needful, our KING promises rewards to all who work for Him.

This is a lesson for the man of wealth and influence and power to use them well, as they may lose them and come to poverty. It is a lesson to the many complainers of hard times. There is plenty of work to do. It is only a question whether we will work in clay among the hedges. We know that the real case with many is not want of work, so much as unwillingness to work in lowly places and for wages which the labor justifies. The deeper need is to realize the dignity and honor of labor not in its kind, but as being with the KING for His work. In this our social principles need reconstruction, our social fabric rebuilding, that we may not judge others from clothing or station, but from their relation to the KING. At the last the relation one to another and the rewards we may secure will be, not by our present notions, but as we have dwelt with the KING for His work.

LICENSURE AND ORDINATION,—NO MORE FOOTSTEPS.

The substantive propositions of my articles were: 1. The new movement is sweepingly revolutionary. 2. It revives the attempt to lower the standard by introducing a new and inferior order of clergy. 3. As ruling follows teaching, the new order of clergy will give rise to a new order of rulers. 4. To put a long stretch of preaching and ruling between licensure and ordination, especially when the license is to edify the churches by preaching six months a year for three or six years, subverts our doctrine of vocation, and is un-Presbyterian. 5. The new law, not being the outgrowth of God's law of vocation, cannot be enforced.

The reply of my able opponent in so far as it can be reduced to distinct propositions is: 1. Scotch usage shows we may have either plan of education with either theory of licensure. 2. The proposed revision ought not to abridge the Presbytery's power to revoke licensure at will. 3. Licensure is not in order to a call only, but to probation: (1) to put a man on probation, all that is necessary is probable evidence of his call; (2) it is not right to keep a man in a long course of training before you give him a chance to try his gifts.

Believing that newspaper discussion becomes profitless after one or two articles on each side, I submit whether the reply is consecutive, relevant, sufficient: and add only; I agree that licensure while in order to a call from God's people, is also in order to probation. The present law is exactly right: "In order that after sufficiently trying their gifts and receiving from the Church a good report, they may, in due time, ordain," etc. The ultimate end is ordination. Before this, there must be a "sufficient trial of gifts." The sufficiency is not a matter of arbitrary enactment but is evinced by "receiving from the churches a good report." The proposed law annihilates all this and puts the man in charge of our vacant churches for years, assuming that he can edify them without probation.

It is asked: "Why did our book require an elaborate examination at ordination? The answer has already been given. Ordination to Preaching and Government with responsibility therefor, in all ordinary cases, ought not long to be delayed after the Presbytery has given authority to preach, and therefore the examinations for the latter should be, as a rule, the examinations for the former, as the qualifications must be essentially the same in both. This is the more vehemently necessary under the proposed licensure since that licensure actually commits the preaching function to the licentiate and contemplates his regular work in "the sacred office" six months a year for three or six years.

My honored brother, away from home and, apparently, far away from his first article, misunderstands me in one place. I cheerfully explain. He will please turn to the last sentence in this first article. After adverting to the recommendation to Theological Seminaries, to the action on licensure, to the benefits arising from the "dovetailing" of the two, this is his concluding paragraph:

"This is the plan recommended by the Assembly. If the Presbyteries shall adopt the one part of the scheme, and the Boards of our Seminaries the other, we shall look for great advance in our Church." [Italics mine.]

Agreeing with him as to this significance of the Assembly's action, I called attention to the fact that it was a significance "forecasted" by many members of the Assembly, "but until now not very distinctly or prominently avowed." My brother has said as much himself. Neither of us made any reference to motives. That object which in my view is so immense as to be the "supreme object" sure to be accomplished by the Assembly's action, "plan," or "scheme," as my brother had called it, had not been distinctly or prominently avowed in the discussions in the Assembly or subsequently. I honestly believe that many of the friends of this plan or "scheme" did not see in it all that my friend and I think we see in it, and that, had they done so, they never would have recommended it, by even the close vote of 70 to 78. With this explanation and disavowal, I trust a magnanimous, able, and justly influential opponent to do as he will with the hard words he lets drop from the end of his pen, and hoping that he may henceforward sprinkle his Attic salt upon his article's own "dovetail," and cage the bird, I respectfully bow from the discussion, with good will to all.

E. DANIEL.

LICENSURE AND ORDINATION.

EDITORS N. C. PRESBYTERIAN:—Will you please publish the enclosed editorial endorsement of Dr. P. H. HOGE'S position, on the proposed changes in licensure, from the Herald and Presbyter of July 10th? A more staunch and orthodox defender and exponent of historic Presbyterianism than the Herald and Presbyter cannot be found.

Dr. Hoge can count upon the support of many of the best educated and most intelligent Presbyterians, whose steadfast adherence to the truth gives them liberty of moving out of the ruts worn by a servile adherence to what is old and should give way, before the aggressive spirit of the Christianity of to-day.

WM. R. ATKINSON.

"The Southern General Assembly at its late meeting recommended a slight change in the course to be adopted by the theological seminaries. Our American plan has been three years of about eight months each. The Scotch custom is four years of six months each. This latter plan, recommended by the Southern Assembly, has some advantages. It gives a little longer time for ripening, and gives longer vacations for work among the vacant and small churches. Students may, in this way, after the first year, receive enough salary to support themselves, and may put into practice the instruction which they receive before they go into the full ministry. The small churches may have preaching for six months, or more, from this source, each year. There are advantages in this plan which may be readily recognized."

OUR DESTITUTIONS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

In the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN of July 12th, 1894, there is an excellent article by Dr. Daniel, that has my hearty indorsement. We are not ready to carry out the plan proposed by the last Assembly touching licensure and ordination. But we must do something to meet our destitutions and the plan is laid down by our Master Himself, "Pray ye, therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into the harvest." The General Assembly appears to spend its strength devising methods for the laborers after they are "sent." What we really need is to get the laborers engaged. It is not the time, nor is it the means that are the most serious hindrances in the way of supplying our vacant churches. Few young men shrink back after they are once enlisted as candidates, because the time is long, and few give up for want of means. What we need is that the Lord of the harvest send forth the laborers, and He will do this in answer to prayer. Men whom the Lord sends forth do not turn back. Let the men be enlisted and in a short time the destitutions will be met.

The writer would like to give a bit of history to show how workers may be enlisted. About eight years ago the Presbytery of Central Mississippi, after much earnest and thoughtful consideration, asking for divine guidance, established a male academy, the great and avowed purpose of which was to call out young men who had thoughts of the ministry and remove the difficulties of beginning. Since that time, eight years ago, twenty-one young men have been in this academy as candidates for the ministry. Some of them have finished their full course, others are at different stages in their studies. In the course of time when these shall all have been prepared to enter the work, we will have eighty churches supplied once a month. Now there are in the bounds of Synod of Mississippi about ninety vacant churches. In other words, the destitutions of a whole Synod may almost be supplied in less than a score of years by men who began their preparatory studies in a Presbyterial academy. The idea we would present is clear. Give the pious young men of our Church a cheap and accessible place when they begin study, and spend several years in contact with a man, a minister, whose heart is fired with zeal for the cause of the Master, and then "pray the Lord of the harvest" to call many of these young men into work, and the problem of supply is solved. The expenses of our academy are almost nominal, less than $100 for candidates under the care of Presbytery, and our curiculum will carry them to a point where they may graduate in two years or three in our universities. And the best of such a plan is that it is walking in the old paths, in which our fathers walked, when Presbyterians were the educators of the land, and when the land, methinks, was none the worse for it. In such paths we cannot "step backward," but must always take a "step in the right direction."

A. H. MECKLIN.

SOONER OR LATER—QUITE SOON NOT improbably—Union Seminary will be removed from its present location to some one of the cities of Virginia—North Carolina we assume will not compete for the privilege. Richmond is now the strongest competitor, but Danville urges its claims, and Roanoke thinks it has superior advantages to offer.

HERE AND THERE.

BISHOP WATTERSON, ROMAN CATHOLIC bishop of Columbus, O., in a letter to the clergy and laity of his diocese said:

"I hereby withdraw my approbation from any society which has a saloon-keeper at its lead; and I suspend such society and its privileges until such members are expelled."

And on appeal Mgr. SATOLLI said:

"The liquor traffic, and especially as conducted here in the United States, is the source of much evil, hence the bishop was acting within his rights in seeking to restrict it. Therefore the delegate apostolic sustained Bishop Watterson's action and approves of his circular and regulation concerning saloons and the expulsion of saloon-keepers from membership in Catholic societies."

This is regarded as one of the most important declarations yet made by the apostolic delegate. Protestant churches, those which strictly are evangelical, refuse membership to saloon-keepers, but the above is certainly an advance on temperance lines for Romanism and we hail it with pleasure.

IN THE CHARLOTTE OBSERVER WE find an article written presumably by an incensed Catholic saloon-keeper, which says some things that are true and some things that are quite remarkable:

Doubtless there are more Protestants than Catholics in the liquor business. But such Protestants are not members of a church, while the Catholics are. The Catholic Church declares rather proudly that she follows her children into the paths of wickedness and does not let them go, and many a life-long sinner absolved on his death-bed, is buried in consecrated ground. The aim of the Catholic Church is to get people to join it whether the people are good or bad and to keep them in it no matter how bad they are. Now there are thousands upon thousands of anti-prohibitionists in that Church, thousands upon thousands who think it no sin to drink whiskey or to sell it. Indeed, a Prohibitionist Catholic is a rara avis, even in the priesthood. If the Catholic Church tells its multitudes of sinners that they can't remain in the Church unless they keep out of the liquor traffic and have nothing to do with liquor dealers, the multitudes will simply go out of the Church. It is just as wrong to drink whiskey as to sell it, for the buyer makes the seller. To pronouce anathema against the saloon-keeper is to pronounce it against all his customers. A good many Catholics here think that it would not be a bad thing for the Church if the Pope should cast a lasso about Satolli, as one might capture a wild ass, and yank him back to Rome.

INEXPRESSIBLY SAD WAS THE NEWS which reached here last week of the death by drowning of Mr. JAMES W. RUMPLE, a lawyer of Salisbury. Mr. RUMPLE had been living for the past four years at Sheridan, Va., but was on the eve of returning to Salisbury and resuming his law practice. He went fishing on Saturday at Port Republic and being missed, after some hours absence, was found in the water where he had fallen. Mr. RUMPLE it is supposed was struck by lightning during a thunder storm. His remains were brought to Salisbury and very deeply affecting services were held in the First Presbyterian church. Rev. Dr. JETHRO RUMPLE, the father of the deceased, and the aged mother and the many other stricken ones have the deepest sympathy in this, their hour of inexpressible anguish, and prayers arise that GOD will administer that consolation which can come from Him alone. Mr. RUMPLE leaves a widow, daughter of Rev. W. G. VARDELL, of South Carolina, and sister of Rev. C. G. VARDELL, of New Bern, and a child but a few months old. Dr. RUMPLE lost another son a few years ago by being struck accidentally by a base ball bat.

THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA under the will of Rev. JAMES P. MASON, a Baptist minister, and his wife MARY E. MASON, receives $11,500. The bequest is in memory of two deceased daughters of Mr. and Mrs. MASON. Mr. MASON leaves his valuable library to the Baptist Orphanage at Thomasville.

DEBS! YOU'VE HEARD THE NAME and yet you hear it, but now in faintest whisper as it passes on to the shades of merited obscurity.

AN EMPTY PRAYER.

I breathed a prayer one day;
It had nor faith nor love to bear it on;
It had no thought of God, but words alone;
I sent it on its way.

It rose on heavy wing,
But could not pierce the walls that shut it in;
It seemed oppressed by weight, as though of sin.
It fell, a useless thing.

And as it slowly fell,
So sank my heart in deep humility;
I longed to burst my fetters and be free;
I longed in Christ to dwell.

I crushed it where it lay;
And, lo! from out its fragments seemed to grow,
An incense rising from an altar glow:
The blessed power to pray.

The fragrance of my prayer,
It floated now on wings of faith and love;
It reached the Father on his throne above;
It bore my spirit there.

Henceforth, be this my strife:
That all my failures lying at my feet,
May be but rounds by which I climb to meet
My higher, fuller life.

POPULAR TALKS ON LAW.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE.

Chattel Mortgages.

A chattel is a thing personal, and it includes not only things movable, but something more, as an interest in land less than a freehold. The word "chattel" is from the Latin through the French, meaning primarily beasts of husbandry. Finally the term came to be applied not only to beasts, but to all things movable.

A chattel mortgage is a mortgage of a chattel. Although originally a mortgage was a transfer of the property as security for the debt, debt, it is now regarded not as a conveyance, but as a mere lien or incumbrance upon the property for the payment of the debt or the performance of some other pecuniary obligation.

Chattel mortgages are known and recognized by the laws of all the States except Louisiana, the statutes varying in minor though important particulars. In most States it is provided that unless a mortgage be recorded or filed in some public office, the purchaser of the chattel secured by the mortgage is not affected thereby. And so it is held in some States, that a mortgage so recorded must be renewed within a certain time, or the validity of the record as notice to the world is destroyed. A mortgage need not be renewed, however, in the States of Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Carolina, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia.

In Colorado the mortgage must be promptly renewed at maturity.

In Delaware it must be renewed every three years.

In Kansas it must be renewed within thirty days preceding the expiration of one year, and each year thereafter.

In Illinois it is not good for a period to exceed two years, unless within thirty days next preceding the maturity of the obligation, there be an affidavit filed showing the amount remaining due, and that the time of the mortgage is to be extended, that extension being for a period not to exceed two years. The mortgagee must file within the said preceding thirty days, certified copy of the affidavit with the justice of the peace before whom the mortgage was recorded.

In Indian Territory, if the mortgage is recorded no renewal is necessary; if it is only filed and not recorded, within thirty days before the expiration of one year there must be filed an affidavit of non-payment, to be notice to third parties.

In Kentucky a chattel mortgage is good without renewal for fifteen years.

In order for a chattel mortgage to be good in Michigan as against third parties, after one year from the filing of the same, an affidavit of renewal must be attached to and filed with the mortgage within thirty days next preceding the expiration of the year. Mortgages are good in this State for six years.

In Minnesota there must be a renewal two years after the demand is due, and annually thereafter.

In Montana a chattel mortgage must be renewed at or before maturity. It can only be drawn for one year, and must be renewed from year to year.

In Nebraska the lien continues for only five years from the date of its filing.

The New Mexico, New York, Ohio and Oregon laws are the same as those of Kansas in this particular.

In North Dakota a renewal must be made not less than ten nor more than thirty days prior to the expiration of three years from date of filing.

In Oklahoma the renewal must be within thirty days next preceding the expiration of three years.

In Pennsylvania a renewal must be within three months after maturity.

In South Dakota the renewal must be made within thirty days next preceding the expiration of three years from the date of filing. A renewal may be made for three years longer.

In Utah the mortgage is good only for ninety days after maturity, provided the maximum period does not exceed fifteen months in all.

In Wisconsin it must be renewed within thirty days next preceding the expiration of two years from the time of filing.

In Wyoming the renewal must be within sixty days after the date of maturity of the secured debt.

In our next we shall present some other features of the chattel mortgage laws of the various States.

As a general rule a chattel mortgage on a stock of merchandise which provides that the stock may remain in the possession of and under control of the mortgagor, he being allowed to sell and renew the stock of the proceeds, is not valid as against third parties.

This general rule, however, has been somewhat modified by statute, and in Delaware, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Maine, Michigan, Nevada, Oklahoma, South Carolina and Vermont the rule is the reverse to the general rule above stated. In some States the mortgage is held to be valid on certain conditions, as in the State of Idaho on condition that the proceeds of the sale go to the mortgagor, and in Kansas if the mortgagor acts as the agent of the mortgagee. And in Massachusetts the mortgage is good, in so far as it covers the original goods that remain in the stock, but not on the goods brought in to replenish the stock. Missouri holds with Idaho. In New Hampshire the mortgage is good if sworn to and recorded, and in New Jersey it is good if recorded. In New York it is good if it is provided in the mortgage that the mortgagor is in possession as agent of the mortgagee, and the sales are for cash, and the proceeds are to be applied in reduction of the mortgage debt. The same in North Carolina and North Dakota. Ohio holds with New York. In California and Pennsylvania chattel mortages are only authorized on certain articles specified by statute. South Dakota holds with North Dakota. Virginia the same as North Carolina. In Washington the mortgage is good if it is drawn so that the mortgagor must apply the money received from the sales to the payment of the mortgage debt. In Wisconsin it is good if sworn statements are filed every sixty days showing the amount of the goods sold, the amount added, and payment made on the mortgage debt. Wyoming agrees with North Dakota. The law in Maryland is doubtful. Sometimes a mortgage is so drawn as to attempt to cover not only goods in existence but such as may afterwards be acquired. As a general rule, however, chattel mortgages do not cover after acquired property. Where it is provided in the mortgage that property acquired thereafter shall be covered thereby, the mortgage will not cover it.

This is a general rule, but the rule is denied in Iowa, Michigan, Mississippi, Nevada, North Dakota, South Carolina, South Dakota, Vermont and Wyoming. The question is doubtful in Florida, Indiana, Kansas, Montana, New Mexico and Utah.

The mortgage will cover after acquired property if it is so specified in the mortgage in the States of Minnesota, New Jersey and Washington.

In Maryland it is said that the mortgage will probably be good if the mortgagee takes posession before the rights of third parties to the after acquired property attach. This is probably true also in Missouri and Rhode Island.

In Ohio a chattel mortgage will cover after acquired property if the mortgage is on file.

In Texas the mortgage will not cover snch property unless it hah a potential existence at the time the mortgage was given.

The Divine Guidance.

BY JOEL SWARTZ. D. D.

Nothing can be more comforting to the devout mind than the assurance of the divine guidance. He who knows the fallibility of his own judgment and the deceitfulness of the human heart, the corruption of the world around him and the many snares that it spreads for his feet, and withal the arts and wiles of the Devil, will not lightly esteem the divine promise, "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye." His need and his faith taking hold of this precious assurance will answer, "Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory." Comforted and supported by the consciousness of God's presence and care, he may walk securely and happily even "through the valley of the shadow of death," and fear no evil. Those who trust their own hearts and lean to their own understandings are often made to know by sad experience that "the way of man is not in himself, that it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." The many sad wrecks along the pathway of life give assurance doubly sure that no unaided human foresight, no calculating shrewdness, is able to anticipate and avoid the dangers to body, soul, character, business, family, and society, which throng the way in which we are compelled to walk through a

"World no friend to grace
To help us on to God."

For see how many perverted and injured, how many lost and ruined, lives are around us! How many, even in youth, are broken in health, enfeebled or depraved in mind and manners, through errors and indiscretions; how many are enslaved by habits of tobacco and drink, and with the bad indulgence lose the power of will to escape their awful bondage; how many are shut up in prisons, asylums, reformatories; and how many must expiate their crimes upon the gallows—all because "they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord: they would none of my counsel: despised all my reproof. Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices."

The divine guidance is offered in such a way as not to supersede our own following. It is guidance that is offered. God does not propose to carry us "to the skies on flowery beds of ease." It is by his counsels that he proposes to guide. These he addresses to our intelligence, our consciences, our wills. The planets he guides by force, the brutes by instinct, but us he proposes to lead by making us a willing people "in the day of his power." He therefore counsels us to hear, to ponder the path of our feet, and "be not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding: whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle." And yet, if men will be guided in no other way, God proposes still to lead them: for he cannot allow them to have their own unhindered and bad way. If they will not accept his hand, he may put a hook in their jaws, or a ring in their nose, and so lead them as one might lead a mad bull. "Because thy rage against me and thy tumult is come up into mine ears, therefore I will put my hook in thy nose and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest." So said God to the audacious and blasphemous Assyrian, Sennacherib.

But tenderly and gently does he counsel and guide those who will open their ears and prepare their hearts to his admonitions, counsels, and encouragements. By his Word, his Spirit, his providence, his own servants will he give due, prompt, and sufficient counsel. It may not always be just what we wish most to hear. His leading may be through deep waters, through fiery furnaces, through thorny ways, and over rugged steeps, but it will even then be best to follow him. We may be assured the way will be safe, even though it be not pleasant. When our difficulties press us most, and our strength is feeblest, then he will be nearest, "a present help in trouble." Just when earthly friends falter and forsake us he will stick "closer than a brother."

I once paid a guide a dollar to conduct me in mid-winter under the Falls of Niagara, on the Canadian side. He led me as far as the place of greatest danger, and, whilst standing on a smooth and sloping plane of ice, overawed by the thunder of the cataract, the rush of the winds, and the dash of the spray, he took advantage of my abstraction, and forsook me. It was with indescribable horror that I contemplated my situation, and feared to lift my foot, lest I might skate under the Falls.

God never leaves a trusting child in this way. It was his better care that assured and saved me. Let us more sweetly and confidently follow him, and lean less to our own understanding. He may not show us much of the way at a time. Only a step, perhaps, will be at once made known; but if we will take that step, we shall not fail to find the next, and so on to the end. And what an end—glory! "Thou shall guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory."—S. S. Times.

Jesus Christ and the Old Testament.

It is pertinent to the present day and very assuring to the Christian believer to observe how our Lord Jesus regarded the Scriptures—that is, of course, the Old Testament, as being the Scriptures of His time. He certainly had these writings in great esteem and familiarity. For one thing, He recognizes them as being an established and settled collection and not merely as certain disconnected miscellania of ancient literature. He quotes and refers to the Old Testament as a book currently known as "The Scriptures" "The Law," "Moses and the Prophets," and "The Word of God." He believed in the inspired and infallible character of that book. He always deferred to it as having a sacred sanction. Its claims, He said, He "came to fulfill," and the recall of its sentiments was His safe-guard when tempted of the devil.

Our Lord even set forth the Scriptures as a divine rule and authority. Its teachings He represented as "words proceeding from the mouth of God," and He introduces a quotation from the Psalms by the very significant expression, "David himself said by the Holy Ghost." And such was His thoroughgoing conviction of the infallibility of these writings that He could proclaim, "not one jot or tittle of the law shall fail," and "the Scripture cannot be broken." He believed in the Scriptures as "profitable for instruction in righteousness" as when in the parable Dives is reminded that His brothers on earth "have Moses and the prophets" as sufficient guide for their souls' immortal destiny; and when He bids us "search the Scriptures" as the source wherein can be found eternal life; and when he speaks of the blessedness of those "that hear the Word of God." The Saviour accepted the predicted prophecies of the Bible as veritable foretellings, and as history written in advance. He pointed to the fulfillment of many of them in His own history, and referred others to the future for their accomplishment; thus acknowledging the claims of prophecy as further authentication of the divine character of the Scriptures.

In recognizing the Scriptures as inspired records and as a divine source of authority, there is nothing to indicate that in an arbitrary electicism our Lord took only some parts as true and rejected others. For as a very significant circumstance we have His endorsement of those narratives in the Old Testament which are particularly marvellous and which are set aside as myths by some who profess to honor Jesus Christ as both wise and truthful; such records, namely, as the flood and the ark, Lot's wife, the miraculous supply of the manna, the brazen serpent lifted up, the healing of Naaman's leprosy, the widow's cruse of oil, and particularly that strange story of Jonah and the fish, at which so many scoff. Jesus Christ, who could not err, referred to these, mentioning, each one explicitly, some of them quite fully, and founding on them lessons of instruction for all time, thus giving His assent to these records as worthy of credence. Yet some in our day who profess to exalt Jesus Christ for His wisdom and His honesty, will treat with derision, or at least with unbelief, these stories which He believed and taught us to believe; thus implying that the Lord of glory was mistaken where they are wise, and that He as a novice in an unscientific age entertained opinions at which the supercilious skepticism of today must laugh, heedless of the woe pronounced by His lips, on those who are ashamed of His words.—Mid-Continent.

Time Tests.

The test of character is the ability to accept finalities; "to make each goal, when reached, a starting point for further quests. When a man has changed the current of his life because he can not adjust his conscience to the accepted standards of the great majority, and then finds that his decision is not viewed by the world as the decision of a hero, but as that of a weakling, it requires absolute faith in the law of right to enable him to live up to the high-water mark he has set for his life; it is difficult, but surely within the compass of such a mind to accept the finalties of its decision though the world does not applaud, and even though it disapproves. Having made a decision based on one's highest perceptions of what is right, to view its effect in the light of a failure is to defeat one's life. The finality of a high moral purpose must be a success unless the decision was the result of impulse instead of principle. The decisions of impulse never can be final; they must of necessity change, for they are not the result of trained perception. There is no character in the world so much to be pitied as the one that is swayed continually by impulse; there is no stability—no growth. Having no definite goal, it cannot reach after that which marks success; it has no yesterdays, and its to-morrow's are vague periods of time to which the to-days point, but with which they never connect.

It is not what the world thinks of our decisions that is most valuable, but what we think of them viewed in after life. If we view our decision of a question involving morals as a failure, it is a failure. Nothing makes our decisions moral but the use we make of them. If we regret them, no matter how high the moral courage of the moment of decision, we have defeated our own purpose our banner with its "Excelsior" trails in the dust, and we have no followers, because we are not leaders; we are leaves on life's roadway, subject to the passing breeze.

Go Slow.

BY OBADIAH OLDSCHOOL.

I shall never forget a night ride in a stage nearly fifty years ago. We were due at Indianapolis before dark. But the load was heavy and the roads were heavy, so we were three or four hours behind time. A storm was gathering. There was no moon, and even the stars were hid. We had no lamps, and the way went winding through the woods. The driver could not even see his horses. But he was impatient to get through, and the jolting over the rough corduroy was fearful. We all cried, "Go slow, go slow!" He thought however, that we had better mind our own business and let him attend to his, and rushed on. Suddenly there was a crash. The coach had struck a stump. The tongue broke and the horses broke away with it. The driver was dragged from his seat, and lay in the mud bruised and bleeding. We saw a light in the distance. It came from a Hoosier cabin. We crawled out, carried the driver there, got some cornbread and bacon, and slept, as we could, on the puncheon floor until daylight came.

Whenever I see anybody rushing with reckless speed along a dark or dangerous way I think of that night, and am tempted to cry "Go slow, go slow!" I like to see a horse speeding at the rate of 2.40 a minute along a broad smooth avenue, when the reins are in the hands of a skilful driver. I like to see the lightning express dashing on a mile in a minute, when I know that the track is good and that the train has the right of way. But if I see the driver of the fast horse turn into a crowded thoroughfare without checking his speed, or the engine rush around a sharp curve without slowing up, I am troubled. It is important to know when to whistle down breaks, and to blow off steam. An engineer whose only idea is to go as fast as possible, regardless of the condition of the track, is not fit to run an engine. He may make a splendid record for a time, but some day he will wreck his train with a fearful loss of property and life.

I lived at the terminus of one of the Michigan railroads, in 1844. It was an old-fashioned flat bar road, with plenty of snake-heads. There were two engineers whom I will call John Doe and Richard Roe. John was a nervous and gritty fellow. His theory was that if he came to a bad place in the road the quicker he got over it the better. If it was hinted that a bridge was unsafe he would dash across it with a rush. He had some marvelous escapes. They called him a lucky dog, and the superintendent was half converted to his theory. Richard, on the other hand, though not cowardly, was cautious. He went slowly over places that were unsafe, and hence was often behind time. With most travelers John was more popular than Dick. But one day, when the track viewer had hung a danger signal where the road passed over a swamp, and the ties were settling, John paid no attention to it. Trusting to his luck, he put on a full head of steam, and in a moment there was a fearful wreck. The engineer was buried under his engine in the swamp, the cars were piled up in broken fragments, many passengers were killed and all of them more or less injured. It was the catastrophe of the season. If John had been willing to go slow he might have crossed the swamp in safety. He died a martyr to his idea that the sole duty of an engineer is to go ahead.

Now there are other people besides drivers of horses and of locomotives who are recklessly progressive. In political, social and moral reforms there are those whose only thought is to get on a hobby and go ahead. He who plies whip and spur most vigorously, under all conditions, is the man for the times. These riders cry, as they dash along like Jehu of old, "Come with me and see my zeal for the Lord." There is a nihilistic spirit abroad. It is not confined to those who wave red flags, appropriate wages and throw bombs into legislative assemblies. We find it in great organizations for the suppression of vice. We find it even in the teachings of some who claim to be leaders in the Church of Christ. "Was not our Lord" they ask, "the great iconoclast of his age? Did he not tell us to put new wine into new bottles? Did he not warn us against putting new cloth into old garments? We are only following his example and teachings in rejecting medieval theology and medieval theories of inspiration."

But Christ told his disciples that he came not to destroy but to fulfil. He did not build up Christianity on the ruins of Judaism, but on the foundation of the prophets. He was eminently conservative. And so are all true reformers. And for this reason they "go slow" when radical changes are suggested.

I had a pearch orchard. The trees were thrifty and the fruit was good. But a neighbor thought that he had a new variety which was superior to mine. He came to me and said: "I can sell you a thousand budded scions of the new and improved Solway. Dig up the trees in your orchard and plant mine in their places." "No," I replied. "I am not such a reckless innovator. My trees are well rooted, why then should I dig them up? Your fruit may be better, but it is new and not fully tested. I will cut back half of my orchard, and graft it with scions from yours. Then I will get fruit of your variety several years earlier than if I dug up my trees, and I will be able to compare the old and the new. It may be that after a thorough test I will decide to cut off the grafts and go back to the original Solway, or I may conclude to change the whole orchard from the old to the new. But in any event I will not be foolish enough to dig up trees that I have been cultivating for so many years."

Now that is just the way I feel about this new criticism and new theology. I am not going to reject it just because it is new, and I am not going to give up the old until the new has been thoroughly tested. If it cannot be grafted on the old, if it is antagonistic to it instead of being a normal development and improvement of it, I know that it is a humbug. The man who has an invention or discovery of whose value he is not absolutely sure, is anxious to put it on the market as fast as he can and realize as much as possible from it right away. But he who is sure that he has found something that is absolutely true and will be permanently useful need not be in a hurry. He can afford to wait. The impatience of some modern progressives shows that they are not nearly as confident as they pretend to be. Slow and sure is a good motto even in these days of rush and hurry. Many of the Oklahoma rustlers now wish that they had not been quite so fast; and I believe the time will come when not a few of our higher critics will sympathize with them.
Interior.

Waiting!

Wait, but wait not too long. The King's business on which you are sent requires haste. The enemy is at the gate; be not too long in putting on the armor; a belt may be tightened or a side piece adjusted after you begin march. Some men make preparation so much a life business as never to find time for life's work. The upper chamber was exceptional—a place for arming, and not a dwelling-house. The scene in that chamber was never to be repeated. There the watchword and the battle-cry were given, when the disciples swept out into the grand arepa of struggle to do and dare for the Lord Jesus.

Our best things are gained in service. The soldier learns in the field; the swimmer becomes expert by plunging into deep water. However much the teacher may gain in the preparatory drill, his best lessons will come in actual teaching. The theoretical instruction was never before understood by him. You may not feel exactly prepared and in trim for the religious service; the best way to prepare is to fall into line and march with the Christian army. Begin to do something and begin now. Take up the first duty at hand and follow that with the succeeding one, and you will soon find yourself at home in the work. The fact that you have a sense of unreadiness is a reason why you should begin. It is only by beginning and going on that you can ever be ready. The very best preparation is in doing. Be sure to be at the next prayer-meeting, and do not fail to perform your part. Wait not for feeling; act, and you will feel. To do what Christ bids, is religion.—Zion's Herald.

No Money in It.

The following anecdote, from the Household, puts in a shrewd way a much-needed lesson. The unselfish house-mother, however, cares little whether "there's money in it" or not; what she wants is loving appreciation.

"My mother gets me up, builds the fire, gets my breakfast, and sends me off," said a bright youth. "Then she gets my father up, and gets his breakfast, and sends him off. Then she gives the other children their breakfast, and send them off to school; and then she and the baby have their breakfast."

"How old is the baby?" asked the reporter.

"O, she is 'most two, but she can talk and walk as well as any of us."

"Are you well paid?"

"I get two dollars a week, and father gets two dollars a day."

"How much does your mother get?"

With a bewildered look the boy said: "Mother? Why, she doesn't work for anybody."

"I thought you said she worked for all of you."

"O, yes! for us she does; but there's no money in it.

Doing His Will.

There is a vast difference in Christian service between doing God's will and doing one's own will or the will of other people. There is a great deal of so-called Christian work which is not doing God's will at all. This is the busy sort of activity which wears out soul and body. Affairs in church, society and business rush on at such made pace that it requires great strength to stand still in the current long enough to find out what God's will really is. He never meant us to be hurried and worried in his service, and it is doubtful if we ever receive any reward for that sort of work, even though done with what we persuade ourselves is good intention. "I delight to do thy will" is a genuine and rich experience. No delight is so unmixed with pain as this. When we find truly what is the will of God, and recognize it as such, the loving child of God finds exquisite pleasure in doing it; and also finds in it, not weariness, but rest and refreshment, even though the task itself is not agreeable. This "water" comes from the far depths of the wells of salvation. We draw it "with joy" only by a long cord of faith and love.

Our eyes must be steadily turned toward God, "as the eyes of a maid wait upon her mistress," to know what is really his bidding. He says: "I will guide thee with mine eye;" but how shall we know the direction of that All-seeing eye unless we are looking toward it? If we are looking only at the work to be done, or at what others think we ought to do, or even at our own sense of duty in the matter, we shall get bewildered and worn out with the pressure. Work will cease to be a delight. But if by waiting upon God, resting in him, being "silent" unto him, we have given us the assurance that the work we are engaged in is truly his will, it becomes a genuine delight. Love, as is illustrated in all human experience, is the strongest motive for unselfish service; love forgets weariness; love forgets self; love creates undenying enthusiasm. More love, then, not for "his cause," but for Christ himself, is what we need. The Lord Jesus, the living Person, the superintending Master of the house, the present Friend—when by communion and companionship he becomes to us a dear and personal reality, then only do we say with full appreciation of the words: "I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart.

God's Love.

Human love may change. The friendship of last year has grown cold. The gentleness of yesterday has turned to severity. But it is never thus with God's love. It is eternal. Our experience of it may be variable, but there is no variableness in the love. Our lives may change; our consciousness of his love may fade out, but the love clings forever; the gentleness of God abides eternal. "For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." There is never a moment, nor any experience in the life of a true Christian, from the heart of which a message may not instantly be sent up to God, and back to which help may not instantly come. God is not off in some remote heaven, merely. He is not away at the top of the long, steep life-ladder, looking down upon us in serene calm and watching us as we struggle upward in pain and tears. He is with each one of us on every part of the way. His promise of presence is an eternal present tense: "I am with thee." So "Thou, God, seest me" becomes to the believer a most cheering and inspiring assurance. We are never out of God's sight for a moment. His eye watches each one of us continually, and his heart is in his eye. He comes instantly to our help and deliverance when we are in any danger.

Man's Liberty.

Christianity pays respect to individual liberty. It leaves man to decide for himself which is the best for him to do in regard to his happiness and comfort both in this world and the next. God does not compel man to believe on Christ and to accept his terms for salvation, as they are offered in the Gospel. Man is free to choose for himself life or death.

CANCER--HIS ONLY HOPE.
Dear Sirs:—About eleven months ago I bought an Electropoise from you for treating cancer; I had one of about ten years standing. It had reached a stage where it was making rapid progress, being about the size of a silver dollar. I knew that I had to do something or my time was about up, and you were the only parties that would give me any assurance of a cure.
I am now happy to inform you that the cancer is no more; the Electropoise arrested its progress perceptibly in a few days, and it gradually and slowly grew less until now there is only a place the size of a pin head, and it is gradually disappearing.
Yours gratefully,
M. M. MILLIBRIDGE.

EDUCATIONAL.

AGNES SCOTT INSTITUTE.
ONE OF THE SOUTH'S MOST POPULAR SCHOOLS.
THE WORK IT IS DOING.
The next session of this noted Presbyterian boarding and day school for young ladies, commences on September 5th, next.
Already applications for catalogues are being received and the promise is of another prosperous year.
The past year has been one of widespread financial depression, but notwithstanding this fact, the Institute has had a prosperous year.
No school in the South has enjoyed more constant and brilliant success than the Agnes Scott, and the causes of this success are evident:
1. Its location in North Georgia is unrivaled; the local surroundings are ideal, Decatur having long been noted for its refined, educated and religious society.
2. A large and accomplished corps of trained and experienced teachers, each member of the faculty having been selected for his or her character and special qualifications for the chair occupied.
3. Thorough work. The utmost effort is made to do thorough teaching, and no careless or antiquated methods are used. None of the officers or teachers have any financial interest in the management of the Institute, and each teacher is able to give her or his entire time and undivided and disinterested attention to the work of instructing. Pupils not making satisfactory progress or not improving their time are not allowed to waste the money of parents by further attendance.
The curriculum is already high. It is rigidly pursued and is being steadily advanced as the school grows in years. It is the desire and aim of trustees and faculty to place the Agnes Scott as the leader in elevating the standard of female education in the South.
The special departments, as music and art, are well equipped and under charge of skilled specialists, are fully abreast of the times and the best schools.
4. The low scale of fees, these having been fixed, not with the view of money making, but simply to cover current expenses, repairs and equipment.
5. The superb buildings were constructed especially for school purposes after the best approved plans. They are all of brick, heated by steam, lighted by electricity, scientifically ventilated and supplied throughout with hot and cold water and fire hose.

CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

Correspondents will please note the following changes of address:

Rev. H. B. Barks, from Odessa, Mo., to Lexington, Mo.

Rev. J. B. Morton, from Hampden-Sidney, Va., to Wallace, Washington county, Va.

NORTH CAROLINA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Rocky River:—Rev. R. V. Lancaster writes: When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory. We have had a glorious meeting. Synod's Evangelist Rev. Wm. Black preached for us a week July 8th to 15th. On Sunday 15th, the large church was full. The names of forty-four persons were announced as joining on profession of faith; there was one by letter. As they stood around the pulpit, it was a sight long to be remembered. We have others to join next Sunday. Thou hast blessed us O! Lord. Do thou make us a blessing.

First Church, Concord:—We see it stated that on last Sabbath the congregation of this church reluctantly agreed to unite with Rev. Dr. C. M. Payne in asking that the pastoral relation between him and the church be dissolved. Dr. Payne goes to Washington, N. C.

Concord Presbytery was to have met at Mooresville yesterday to consider the matter of dissolution of the pastoral relation.

First Church, Charlotte:—The laying of the corner-stone of the new addition to be used as a Sunday-school room, lecture-room, ladies parlor, &c., was a notable event. Dr. Preston made an address in which every word is described by the Observer as like "apples of gold in pictures of silver." He gave a brief history of the church in which the line of its ministry was interestingly noted and in which due credit was given to its unexampled liberality in the works of benevolence of the Church at large. In the stone among other articles were placed the Bible first, by Jackson Christian, and the Confession of Faith next by Irwin Graham. On this foundation, Col. J. E. Brown placed the other articles, as follows: Photographs of Rev. Dr. Morrison, Rev. Dr. Miller, Rev. Mr. Sinclair, Rev. Mr. Mack and Rev. Dr. Preston.

After the photographs came the "Home Mission" pamphlet by Rev. Mr. McIlwain; Governor Graham's Centennial address; Dr. G W. and Prof. A. Graham's paper on the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence; a copy of the Observer containing accounts of the action of the church in regard to undertaking the improvements; the other city papers including a copy of yesterday's News; and a copy of the Observer containing a memorial of Rev. Dr. Miller and account of his funeral.

The exercises closed with prayer by Dr. Preston, during which Dr. E. Nye Hutchison, Messrs. Geo. E. Wilson and R. E. Cochrane, officers of the church, placed their hands on the stone.

The benediction was pronounced by "our beloved Mr. Todd."

On the platform, says the Observer from which we are gleaning, were seated the ministers of the city, elders and deacons of the church, the choir, Mrs. Stonewall Jackson and grandson, Master Jackson Christian, Mr. James P. Irwin and grandson, Master Irwin Graham.

VIRGINIA.

Purcellville:—Five persons united with the church at this place. This is one result of the preaching of Rev. A. A. Little Synodical Evangelist.

Glade Spring Church:—Rev. P. H. Gwinn was assisted by Rev. Alfred Jones. Ten united with the Presbyterian church on the 8th inst., and several others united with the Methodist and Baptist churches.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Scholarships for Elders' Daughters:—Thirty-five scholarships worth $50 each have been established in the Columbia College for Women, for the daughters of Presbyterian elders.

GEORGIA.

Cartersville:—During this year the first of the ministry of Rev. E. D. McDougall, sixteen have united with the church on profession and four by letter.

Second Church, Savannah:—During the week previous to July 8th services were held each evening On the Sabbath the Lord's Supper was celebrated and nine persons sat down at the feast for the first time—three were received by letter. Rev. W. A. Nisbett, pastor.

TENNESSEE.

Murfreesboro:—On 8th inst., twenty-three persons were announced as received on profession and two by letter. The present pastor began his work a little over a year ago and since then fifty-four persons have been received into the church.

MISSISSIPPI.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

French Camp Academy:—Rev. J. A. Mecklin, D. D., has been elected joint principal of French Camp Academy, under the care of Central Mississippi Presbytery. He will preach twice a month at Kosciusko as stated supply. The outlook for the academy was never better. The faculty consists of Prof. Jackson Reeves and Rev. J. A. Mecklin, D. D.

Canton:—Five additions since last report.

Holly Springs:—A special to the N. O. Picayune states that Rev. J. C. Caldwell has accepted the call to Morganfield, Ky.

Enterprise:—Eight days' meeting. Rev. A. B. Coit assisted by Rev. G. E. Chandler, Synodical Evangelist. Seven additions to the church and five adults baptized.

ALABAMA.

Rev. W. E. McIlwain:—Has resigned the position of superintendent of the Synodical Evangelistic work, very greatly to the regret of his ministerial brethren and the Church at large. He has accomplished a great work. His health is somewhat impaired, but after a season of rest and recuperation, in which he will endeavor to fit himself even better for future work, he hopes to again take a pastorate.

REMINISCENCES, FAYETTEVILLE CHURCH.

Letters received require further contributions to the "ollapod."

The old church is still working vigorously, not only at home, but elsewhere, through the ELDERS. Mr. John McDonald, of whom mention has been made, established a Sabbath-school at Rockfish. Big Rockfish church sprang from it. Two of Mr. McDonald's sons became Elders in that church; two of them became ministers—Kenneth, in the Presbytery of Wilmington, and Angus (Martin Farquar Tupper, in his centipedal rhymes on nomenclature would not have rejected these names as not significant. You hae a hieland twang,) in the Moore Memorial church, Nashville. From the Sabbath-school, of which Elder McD. was superintendent, until his death in 1868, went Rev. L. A. McLean, now in Virginia, and Rev. Archibald McFadyen, of Wilmington Presbytery. Besides these, that Sabbath-school has given not less than a dozen ruling elders to other churches. My old friend is represented in the Session of the mother church by his nephew, Dr. J. W. McNeill. Writing that name reminds me of an incident that occurred soon after my settlement in Fayetteville. I had said to Mr. John McRae, P. M., "I labor under a great difficulty, as a minister; I cannot remember names or dates." "You need be at no loss on Hay Street," was his prompt rejoinder, "if, when you meet a man, whose face you recognize, you will says: "Good day, Mr. Mc; you will not shoot wide of the mark; for there are over six hundred subscribers to the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN who have that prefix!" "To this recapitulation, I desire to add, that the old church has been well represented at Memphis, Tenn., Greenville, S. C., and Morganton, N. C., by Rev. J. M. Rose, whose father went to Fayetteville, near the time, when I left.

REV. COLIN MCIVER,

although not a pastor of Fayetteville church, was closely identified with it. A fitting tribute to his memory is given in Mr. Phillip's Historical Sketch. A reference to one or two of his peculiarities may interest the present generation. He had the "cacoethes scribendi," in more than one sense. He wrote "a fine, lady hand," and never tired of "driving the quill." He took great pleasure in his work as Stated Clerk of Presbytery; and of the Synod of North Carolina, as well as in correspondence by letter. He published a volume of "Sermons by Southern Ministers." He showed to six volumes, 12 mo., answering to the six volumes of Henry's Exposition, beautifully written, and containing the apothegms, epigrams, and quaint sayings of the venerable commentator. The difficulty of securing a printer for such a work had not occurred. Some body, subsequently succeeded in having a single volume of Henry's Aphorisms published.

Absentmindedness was another peculiarity of my old neighbor. Two incidents will suffice for illustration. He was very particular about mailing answers to letters received. On one occasion, having ridden two miles out of town, upon remembering, that he had two letters for deposit, he dismounted, hitched up his horse and walked back to the P. O., and handed the letters to Mr. McRae. "Why, Mr. McIver," said the P. M. "I thought, that you had left town long ago." "I did leave town," was the response, "but when I had ridden two miles, I remembered those letters, and had to return." "But, where is your horse?" "I suppose that he is where I left him hitched up!" "But, why did you not ride back?" "I really did not think of that." For this, I am indebted to the P. M., of that day. Here is another specimen.

Father McIntyre, who resigned the pastoral care of St. Paul's church, at the age of 84, and died at his daughter's in Georgia, aged 104, reached the house of his friend, McIver, one day, at noon. The hostler not being at hand, the host having requested his guest to "walk in," led the horse to the table; put him into a stall: went into the loft and filled the rack with provender. To his great surprise, the horse merely snuffed the provender, without applying his mouth. After the lapse of a few minutes, the host returned to the house, and with great gravity said: "Brother McIntyre, you must have ridden hard this morning. Your horse will not touch his provender." On going to the stable "to inspect the condition of his horse, the old minister could not restrain a laugh. As soon as he could command his voice he exclaimed (in Gaelic) "I have not trained my horse to eat broom grass!" It seems, that Mrs. McIver, who was a very neat house keeper, had laid up a good supply of material for brooms, which her gudeman had mistaken for oats. I am indebted to Mrs. Margaret Hooper for this story. As she and Mr. Hooper were both fond of a joke, I cannot refrain from narrating one, that they enjoyed at my expense. While I was in such a sad condition, on account of my throat and chest, Dr. Robinson gave me a small phial of croton oil, directing me to moisten the ends of my fingers with the oil and rub my throat and chest gently with a little of it. After he had left the room, I asked my young wife for a piece of flannel. "What for," was her quest, "I desire to give myself a good rubbing "was my response. Regardless of her remonstrances, not having known much about sickness, suffering, and specifics. I rubbed as hard as I could with the saturated flannel (M. D's. will please look sober) as far as I could reach on both sides. It was not long until I thought of what I had read about "cowhage," of a peculiar and by no means agreeable cutaneous affection; of lying down upon an ant bed in Texas; of stumbling upon a nest of yellow jackets. When the tender hearted, old Doctor returned and had been told by Mrs. Hooper of my sad plight, loud sounds of laughter reached my ears. The good Doctor entered my room with a broad smile upon his face and said: "I did not intend to make you suffer so; yet, what you have done will do you good and not harm. But, you will learn, that it is best to follow a Doctor's prescription. I have never had occasion to use croton oil since. But, from experience I can recommend it, as an admirable counterirritant, that irritates to perfection.

Among these "collectanea minora," I must not withhold one incident. While Dr. John Robinson was pastor, he conducted worship on the Lord's day in the Market Hall. At that time, the market was kept open on Sunday morning. As Dr. R. had been raised in the back country he was shocked at this practice and did not hesitate to remonstrate against it privately. But, to no purpose. At length, his practice being exhausted, he said, at the close of services one Lord's day: "If the market be opened again, on next Sunday, I shall not preach in this hall." No one that ever saw his face could have failed to discover in him the "tenacem propositi virum" of Flaccus. In this day of Sabbath desecration, such men are needed, men who will insist, that a member, of the church who pursues any business for a living on the Lord's day, except physicians, nurses and the like, who are employed in works of absolute, not pretended, necessity should be excluded from the church. "But they will lose their places," says somebody. What says Christ: "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow Me." The Scotch Covenanter girl, chained to the stake, with the rising tide threatening her life although her own mother who had been terrorized into recantation, pleaded with her, yielded up her life (not her salary) rather than deny her Lord. Finis. D. MCN. T.

ELDERS' AND DEACONS' INSTITUTE.

For the third time we announce to you the annual meeting of the Elders' and Deacons' Institute of Fayetteville Presbytery, and extend to you a cordial invitation to attend the sessions, at Red Springs, August 6–13. The committee appointed by the Presbytery has spared no pains to make the Institute, more than ever before, a source of profit and enjoyment. A spacious and commodious tabernacle, erected especially for the sessions of the Institute will add greatly to the comfort of speakers and audience. The tabernacle is upon the site of the tent erected last year, and in close proximity to the famous Mineral Springs.

Hotel accommodations are as satisfactory as before, board being offered at the low rate of from 75c to $1.00 per day, and special rates given to those who remain the whole time; and the Fair Grounds with the buildings there are at the disposal of those who wish to bring their own provisions and camp out.

Upon the programme you will read with pleasure the names of Rev. Peyton H. Hoge, D. D., Rev. Egbert Smith, D. D., Rev. J. B. Shearer, D. D., and Rev. A. D. McClure. The latter with Mr. A. K. Pool will take charge of the singing, which will thus be made an especiallo attractive feature. All the ministers of Fayetteville Presbytery and many of our ablest elders and deacons have places on the programme. Bible study is made prominent and the subjects discussed are of practical interest and value.

The four railroads with immediate connections for Red Springs have all consented to give reduced rates and it is probable that excursion trains will be run from time to time to the Institute.

With these advantages, thus concisely stated, we do not believe that you can afford to miss spending some time at the Elders' and Deacons' Institute. The cheap rate of travel and board, the delightful location, the health-giving water are inducements to all, while the fellowship of Christian friends, the instructive and able addresses, the inspiring singing and the spiritual preaching make the attraction to Christian people so great that we feel confident that you will accept this invitation and come.

Additional information will be furnished by any member of the Committee.

A LOOK BACKWARD

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

It was Aug. 2d, 1890, when I made my first visit to Danbury, N. C., a little town on the Dan, among the mountains in Stokes county. I found seven or eight persons professing the Christian religion, only one of whom was of the male sex and he a youth.

For four years next preceding my first visit there, the colored people of that town had had no gospel minister to declare unto them the word of life. No one on Sabbath days to gather the little children into a Sabbath-school and teach them of a Saviour's love, and the purpose of God in the creation of them. Ostensibly religion was at a very low degree in the spiritual thermometer. Drunkenness and revelry were to seen on every hand, while gambling and other immoral and pernicious habits were carried on with impunity, and apparently without a sense of shame. The attendance of men at religious services during the day was only a few, and not frequent. The young boys seemed to follow hard in the steps of their fathers and the old men.

But from the day of my first visit to the present date, preaching monthly and a Sabbath-school which knoweth no winter quarters have been carried on there regularly.

That these have not been barren and ineffective may be seen by following editorial note which appeared in one of June issues of the Reporter-Post, a paper published in the town of Danbury, which says:

"A gentleman who has made Danbury his home for a year or more or less, said a few days since, that less liquor is drunk in Danbury than at any place he ever knew; whereupon an old gentleman who has made this place his home for many years and who is in good position to know remarked that if there were a man in our town who drank liquor he did not know of him."

Not only has there been an abatement in the practice of drinking, but evidently a corresponding abatement has been made in respect to many other wicked, pernicious, and demoralizing habits.

There is an organized church within which is a live, active and interesting prayer-meeting carried on every Wednesday night and every Sunday morning in the absence of the preacher.

These services are well attended even by the unconverted. At one of these meetings recently three persons and two of whom were great and daring sinners, asked that the prayers of the people of God be made for them that they might be converted unto Christ.

Our new church-building will soon be ready for occupancy. We have money enough to purchase the flooring, but hardly enough to pay for the glass of windows. Our seats, pulpit, carpet, have been donated by a gentleman, who is manifestly a fat and flourishing Christian even in his seventy-eighth year of age. We need lamps for our new church edifice, will not some church or Sunday-school which has replaced their old lamps with larger and costlier ones give us their old lamps which now occupy some hidden place about the church?

There are three other places in Stokes county where we hope to labor next year. D. V. But we are building at north Wilkesboro. Just now help soon.

Yours for the Master's cause,
S. G. WALKER.

Warrenton Gazette: Cotton is fruiting near the ground, which, we are told, is favorable to a good yield and early maturity.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Gov. Carr has appointed Dr. J. W. Saunders, of Carteret, a director in the N. C. Insane Asylum vice L. A. Potter resigned.

Jonesboro Progress: Crops of all kinds in this vicinity are looking remarkably well, and if the rains will but continue to come as they are needed the harvest will be abundant indeed.

Rocky Mount Argonaut: The crops are all looking well, and the husbandman has promise of an abundant harvest as the fruits of his labor. Corn prospects have not been excelled for years while cotton is coming out every day and now gives promise of a first-class crop. —— Recent development work on the famous Portis mine has proven that property to be richer than has been supposed. The great "White Vein" has been struck by a straight shaft at a greater depth than ever before and the showing is wonderful, the bottom of the shaft is still in ore so its width is unknown, bnt it is probably 20 feet or over, while the ore is at least twice as rich as any heretofore discovered on that great vein, the first panfull showing four gold rocks, besides a string of at least three inches of gold.

Scotland Neck Democrat: The Scotland Neck knitting mills are turning out more work now than ever before. The trade is being extended considerably. Already the goods are sold as far West as California in every Southern State, as far northwest as St. Paul, Minn., and to a number of jobbers in New York.

Statesville Landmark: The cotton mill is now already for the machinery. Everything is in place. The engine was fired up last week and tested and found to be all right. The looms are expected to arrive in about ten days and will be set up at once. It is confidently expected that the mill will be in operation by the middle of August or first of September at latest.

Weldon News: The warehouse of the Seaboard Air Line at Garysburg was struck by lightning last Sunday afternoon and burned to the ground. The warehouse contained a lot of flour, hay, about ten bales of cotton and some other freight. The total loss is about $2,000.

Dun Times: The State Geologist has just made a trip down the Cape Fear river from Haywood to Fayetteville in a small boat for the purpose of examining the river channel, in connection with the possibility of making the river navigable between Fayetteville and Haywood. He says that it will never be done for the reason that the rock ledges which cross the river and produce the rapids are so numerous, and the rocks of these ledges so hard and durable; the cutting of a channel deep enough for the purpose of shallow water navigation this day of railroads, is in every way a financial impracticability.

DOMESTIC.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The crop prospect in Central Mississippi has not been better for years. Corn especially promises a tremendous yield.

Crops in the Boston section of Georgia are improving. Hogs are thrifty and the pork crop promises to be abundant.

The great strike is over, the trains are running and business is assuming its normal condition, Debs however insists that the strike is on.

FOREIGN.

Cholera has reached Berlin. Only one case is reported. Two hundred and eight cases were reported and eighty-two deaths in St. Petersburg on last Thursday.

More than one thousand persons were killed by the recent earthquakes in Constantinople and vicinity.

The French government refuses to consider further amendments to the anti-anarchist bill. Twenty-two amendments were to be proposed by the committee.

News comes from Liverpool that the Japanese government has purchased six steamships which belonged to the English Line running between Liverpool and China. The steamers are being equipped for service in the event of war.

The new Republic of Hawaii has been recognized by the various foreign consuls; U S. Minister Willis even informally recognized it. A commission of adherents of the queen have come to this county to learn explicitly whether President Cleveland will do anything for them.

In Egypt a fierce battle has taken place between a force of Italian soleiers and a large force of dervishes. The Italian soldiers were victorious and Kossola was captured.

The Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley railway will sell round trip tickets to the People's Party State Convention at Raleigh, August 1st, 1894. Tickets will be sold July 30th and August 1st—final limit August 4th. Rates from Fayetteville, $4.00; Greensboro, $4.05; Maxton, $5.45; Rural Hall, $5.65; Wilmington, $6.55.

No institution in the State has ever grown more rapidly than the Agricultural and Mechanical College. Its success shows that the times are ripe for its work, and that our young men need and are seeking such an education as it offers. See its advertisement in this issue.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

REV. PEYTON H. HOGE. D. D., Editor.

☞All communications for this department should be addressed directly to Dr. HOGE and not to the office of the PRESBYTERIAN.

Third Quarter.—Lesson VI.

Aug. 5.—The Baptism of Jesus.

Mark i. 1-11. Commit vss. 9-11.

Golden Text. Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Mark i. 11.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. With this lesson we enter on Part. II. of the Life of Christ. Note also that it is our first lesson from Mark. The characteristics of this gospel are its concise and graphic style, frequent marks of the eye-witness, constant use of the expression straightway (often translated, immediately), and its strict adherence to chronological order. For introductory work the student will do well to read the narrative of John's birth, Luke i; the testimony of John to Jesus, John i. 19-34 (note that this was after the Baptism, vs. 32, and therefore after the temptation in the wilderness), and John's later testimony, John iii. 25-36. Also the parallels: Matt. iii; Luke iii. 1-23.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: Preface, or title to this gospel, vs. 1; the prophecy, vss. 2, 3; the mission of John, vs. 4; the success of his preaching, vs. 5; the manner of man he was, vs. 6; the substance of his preaching, vss. 7, 8; the baptism of Jesus, vs. 9; the opened heavens and descending Dove, vs. 10; the voice and its testimony, vs. 11.

[Let advanced students note further:

Additional points from Matthew: the more extended account of John's preaching, vss. 7-12; the dialogue, vss. 14, 15.

Additional points from Luke: the date of John's ministry, vs. 1, 2, and the age of Jesus, vs. 23; the yet further account of John's preaching— including Matthew's but more extended, vss. 7-18; the expression "in bodily shape."

Additional from John: the formal deputation from the Sanhedrim, vss. 19-28.]

Third Step. Study with your helps any points needing explanation:

Vs. 2. Prophets, because quotations are given from two, Mal. iii. 1; Isaiah xl. 3. It is noticeable that the former is the one generally used by Jesus in referring to John, Matt. xi. 10, and the latter is the one used by John himself, John i. 23.

Vs. 4. Did baptize. The term is first used here and in the parallels, and it is noticeable that no description of the rite is given. This renders it more than probable that it was not something wholly new, but something with which the Jews were familiar. The O. T. is full of washings for ceremonial purification, the most distinct account of which is given in Num, xix. 17-20. To this the Psalmist alludes in his prayer for cleansing, li. 7; Ezekiel in his prophecy of a restored Israel, xxxvi. 25-28; and the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews in treating of the typical character of the old dispensation, ix. 13, 14. From this we see that the water of separation was applied to the person by sprinkling, NOT the person immersed in the water. Now these O. T. purifications are in the N. T. spoken of as baptisms, Mark vii. 4 (wash and washing, are in the original baptize and baptism, see R. V. margin). This clinches the argument. It is in accord with this usage that the Holy Ghost, typified by the water of separation, is spoken of as "poured out," Acts ii. 17; "shed forth," vs. 33.

Baptism of repentance, etc., on the mission of John and his Baptism, see Fifth Step.

Vs. 5. In the river of Jordan. The argument for immersion from the prepositions IN, INTO, OUT OF has its origin: (1) In ignorance of N. T. Greek. In classic Greek the prepositions generally have the above meanings; in N. T. Greek they may have these meanings, but commonly mean merely AT, TO (or TOWARDS), FROM, as can be abundantly proved. The only N. T. Greek form of expression that must have the meanings first given is to combine the prepositions with the verb, which is never done in these descriptions of baptism. To illustrate: Baptists say, EIS must mean INTO; turn to John xx. 4-6. "The other disciple.....came first to (EIS) the sepulchre..... yet went not in (eis-elthen;) then cometh Peter and went into the sepulchre (eis-elthen eis to mneion)." Therefore unless John went into the sepulchre when the Scriptures tell us he did not, we cannot say that eis before the noun and not compounded with the verb must mean INTO. (2) Ignorance of Jewish customs: The fact that they gathered at the riverside, even if they went into the water does not indicate immersion. Their ideas of ceremonial purification required living water, that is running water (See references above). Now running water for such large multitudes could only be gotten at the river. For convenience and dispatch John would stand in the shallow water near the shore and the candidate would come down to him, and John dipping up the water with his hand or a hyssop branch sprinkled the candidate. This is confirmed further by John iii. 23. "John was baptizing in Aenon because there was much water there." The original is "many waters" and Aenon means the fountains, or the "Springs," as we say. Evidently a place where there was plenty of running water, but not a natural place to select for immersion.

Vs. 8. With water.....with the Holy Ghost—another familiar use in N. T. Greek of the preposition commonly meaning IN in classic Greek. This is shown not only by familiar usage, by the parallel "with the Holy Ghost"—where "in the Holy Ghost" would be against all usage—but by the conclusive fact that in the parallel passage in Luke iii. 16, the word for water is in the dative case without any preposition, the common Greek way of expressing "the thing with which" and never used to express "the place, or element, in which."

Vs. 10. He saw, i. e., Jesus. Matthew expresses it, "the heavens were opened unto him;" Luke, simply, "the heavens were opened." It is no where said that this was a sign to the multitude. It was a sign to Jesus. The descent of the Spirit was also a sign to John (John i. 33, 34.)

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson and compare it with ours:

SUMMARY. The Gospel of Jesus Christ publicly began with the ministry of John who in fulfilment of prophecy came as a forerunner preaching the duty of repentance with a view to spiritual cleansing, illustrating it by his own life and symbolizing it by baptism with water, and all with a view to the coming of One who would sift the good from the bad. In the midst of this ministry Jesus came out and identified himself with the movement by being baptized, whereupon the heavens opened and the Spirit descended upon Him and the Father proclaimed Him His beloved Son.

Fifth Step. Study suggested topics in the light of God's Word.

1. The Ministry of John.
   - Its purpose—to make ready a people prepared for the Lord, Luke i. 17, 76; Is. xl. 3; Mal. iii. 1.
   - The need of preparation,—His searching holiness, Mal. iii. 2; Matt. iii. 12.
   - The kind of preparation needed—cleansing from sin, Luke i. 77; Mark i. 4. Compare Ex. xix. 14.
   - The mode of cleansing—repentance in heart and life, Mark i. 4; Matt. iii. 8; Luke iii. 11-14.
   - The outward sign of cleansing—Baptism with water. Mark i. 5; Luke iii 16. Compare Ps. li. 7; Ezek. xxxvi. 25, 26; John iii. 5.
   - Qualifications for his ministry—(a) his austere life, Mark i. 6; (b) his consuming zeal, Mal. iv. 5; 1 Kings xix. 14; Matt. xvii. 10-13; (c) his fearlessness, Luke iii. 19.
   - Method of his ministry—preaching the coming kingdom, Matt. iii. 12.
2. Why was Jesus baptized?

The fashionable view in the Southern Presbyterian Church is that it was His installation or consecration as priest. The arguments used are (a.) It was "to fulfil all righteousness (Matt. iii. 15,) but "righteousness" implies a law; what law fits the case? the answer given is Ex. xxix. 4. (b.) John was a Priest and so had authority to consecrate Him (Luke i. 5); (c.) Jesus was the age at which Priests began their ministry (Luke iii. 23; Num. iv. 3).

This theory lies under the following fatal objections: (a.) There is no evidence that John ever qualified as a Priest—on the contrary see Luke i. 80; (b.) If to "fulfill all righteousness" required fulfilling the law of Ex. xxix, 4, it would have involved the fulfilling of the whole complicated ceremonial recorded in that chapter to which the "washing" was only a preliminary—see chapter; (c.) John was of the Levitical priesthood and could not initiate into a priesthood of a higher order, Heb. vii. 5-7, 9, 10; (d.) "The priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change of the law," Heb. vii. 12, with vss. 15-17. That John and Jesus conformed to the Jewish custom as to the age of beginning their ministry is surely not an argument by itself, and the rest has been demolished. What then? It could not be to Jesus the Baptism of repentance (Mark i. 4), but it was the recognized mark of those who expected and wished to enter the kingdom of righteousness; and to "fulfil all righteousness" the King must enter the kingdom by the same door. As a member of the Jewish Church He had submitted to circumcision that had the same spiritual significance—the cleansing of sin; so He must identify Himself with the new movement for righteousness before He leads it. The moment He by this act becomes a part of the movement for the kingdom, that moment the Father seals Him by the Holy Spirit, and marks Him as its leader (Mark i. 10, 11; John i. 29-34.)

Sixth Step. Jesus in this act is an example for us all. The testimony of God only comes to us as we do, so far as we see and know it, the duty of the hour, John vii. 17; Rom. viii. 14, 16.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

After getting an accurate recital of the story of the lesson, and adding yourself, or getting (in the case of advanced pupils) the scholars to add, touches from the other evangelists, present simply and clearly the argument for the mode of Baptism, and then take up the first Bible Reading that they may have a thorough view of the ministry of John. (Some scholars may need reminding that this is not the John to whose gospel frequent reference is made in the Bible Reading.) Then, having mastered yourself the second Bible Reading, without taking it up in the class, or alluding to the controverted view, get into the minds of your class a clear view of why Jesus was baptized, and draw the lesson in the Sixth Step.

Prize Questions.

85. Name the other occasions (with reference) when a Divine voice spoke to Jesus.
86. On what occasions were the heavens opened to give angelic help to Jesus?

On the morning of July 17th, 1894, in Greensboro, N. C., Mrs. D. D. GILLESPIE, surrounded by sorrowing relatives and friends, "fell on sleep." That Saviour in whom she had long trusted was her support in the trying hour. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

At her late residence N. 4th street, Wilmington, N. C., Mrs. CAROLINE E. HENDERSON passed away peacefully in the 58th year of her age. She was patient and full of prayer through long illness and entered into rest with the word almost the last upon her lips—"precious Saviour"—Miss Hansley was born in Pender county, but as Mrs. Henderson lived in Wilmington.

A Tribute.

REV. JAMES L. CURRIE, DIED JULY 17, 1894.

I knew thee well, thine honest heart
Was open as a summer's day;
And long 'twill be ere one depart
Who closer kept the narrow way.

Grander than marble crypt could be,
Or regal tomb by hand of man,
Memorial sweet thy life will be,—
It followed close the Master's plan.

Thou art at rest; no more while here
We'll grasp thy kindly, loving hand;
But one sweet thought shall check the tear,
Though thou art gone; 'twas God's command.

Thou didst obey the heavenly call
Throughout thy life, "Go preach my Word;"
But ne'er discourse in sacred hall
Could move like this we often heard

From high, from low, who knew thee best,
"He lives a Christian." Matchless power
That lies in life! A higher test
Than all the rites of Sabbath hour.

To die is sweet if life be pure:
Oh, grant that when the Reaper pale
Shall come to us; then safe, secure,
God's love shall guide us down the vale.

Where Jesus waits: where angels fair
The golden streets have ever trod;
No pain, no tears, no death, shall there
Disturb our resting place with God.

WANTED—A GOOD PERMANENT LOCATION FOR A SCHOOL OR COLLEGE.

A Presbyterian minister (wife and one child) thirty-seven years of age, with several years' experience in the school room, desires a good location (prosperous and healthful) for a school, or college, either male, or female, or for both sexes. Would undertake the school on his own responsibility, or under a Board of Trustees. The school building would have to be rent free, a good local patronage would be very desirable; and there would have to be the proper facilities for boarding pupils.

The school ought to open in September, or October.

The minister would prefer a location where he could serve a church, or churches.

FOR THE FAMILY.

WOMANLY CONVERSATION.

Keep a watch on your words, my sisters,
For words are wonderful things;
They are sweet, like the bee's fresh honey—
Like bees, they have terrible stings!
They can bless like the warm, glad sunshine,
And brighten a lonely life;
They can cut in the strife of anger,
Like an open, two-edged knife.

Let them pass through the lips unchallenged,
If their errand is true and kind—
If they come to support the weary,
To comfort and help the blind;
If a bitter, revengeful spirit
Prompt the words, let them be unsaid:
They may flash through a brain like lightning,
Or fall on the heart like lead.

Keep them back, if they're cold and cruel,
Under bar and lock and seal;
The wounds they make, my sisters,
Are always slow to heal.
God guard your lips and ever,
From the time of your early youth,
May the words that you daily utter
Be the words of beautiful truth.

In Due Season Ye Shall Reap If Ye Faint Not.

The discouraged teacher of a large infant class who had for several years seen her pupils pass from her training into higher classes in the Sabbath-school without showing the change of heart for which she has so faithfully labored and prayed, was cheered in her work in a most unexpected manner. While on a visit in a neighboring town, she received a call from an unknown lady who asked, "Are you Miss B. the teacher of the infant class in the Sabbath-school at C?" I am.

"Then I want to tell you something, and thank you for what you taught my precious little girl, who is now "safe in the arms of Jesus."

Sometime ago my little Mamie came running in from a walk saying, oh mamma! I want you to come with me and look at something so beautiful I have just seen. Being an invalid, I was unable to go at the time, but when able to take the walk, was surprised when she took me to an art collection, and pointed with great enthusiasm to a picture of the crucifixion, saying, is'nt that beautiful mamma?"

I asked her why she thought that sad picture beautiful?

"Oh mamma! because He died for us; and in her own sweet words she told the old, old story." I said, why my darling, I have known that a long time. With great astonishment she asked, then why have you never told me?

With tears of anguish that mother said: "I thank you Miss B. for teaching my child what her mother's unfaithfulness left untaught, a short time ago she went to see the Jesus whom you taught her to love, and will shine as a star in your crown of rejoicing, while her mother did nothing to help her heavenward."

Work on faithful Sunday-school teachers sowing the seed in tears and discouragements, for you shall reap in joy, even though you may never know the results of your labors in this life. And oh Christian parents! do not delegate to Sunday-school teachers the glorious privilege and duty of training your children for Heaven; teach them at home, of Jesus and his love.

Things Useful.

For burns or ulcers take white wax two ounces, lard four ounces, melt and add two and one-half drachms of powdered acetate of lead, stir constantly until cold.

Pineapple water-ice may be made of the canned fruit, if the fruit is not to be had. To one grated yellow pineapple, or one quart can add one full pint of loaf sugar. Allow it to stand one hour, and then pass all the juice possible out through a fine strainer. Stir well into this juice of two lemons and one quart of water. It is then ready for the freezer.

Raspberry Meringue.—Line a pie-plate with good light pastry, and bake in a quick oven. While still warm, spread thickly with red raspberries. Make a meringue of the whites of four eggs beaten stiff with a half cupful of powdered sugar, and when it is a froth stir lightly through it a half-pint of raspberries. Heap the meringue on top of the berries in the pie-plate, and brown very delicately in the oven. Eat as soon as it is cool.

Fence posts are made very durable if the part to go in the ground is steeped in lime water. This is most easily done by putting the posts, butts down, in a pit two feet deep, with fresh lime mixed in among them and some under them. Water is then poured on the lime, and this is slacked: the heat of the slacking drives the air out of the wood, and more water being thrown on the lime, this is absorbed as the wood cools; thus the pores are filled with lime, by which the albumen of the wood is destroyed, and his being the principal agent of decay in timber, the posts are generally increased in durability. They have been known to keep sound for over forty years after this treatment.

THE CHRISTIAN'S SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work, besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

Law Taught By Mail

It was the boy on the farm; the boy behind the counter; the boy in the mill; the boy in the lawyer's office; the boy in the bank—the ambitious boy, who first made this method of teaching law a necessity. The outcome is found in the Sprague Correspondence School of Law, an institution that gives a thorough legal education by mail, and helps practicing lawyers to review. The tuition fee is small, the course complete, the examination thorough, the result perfect. Send 10c. for particulars.

WHY MOTHER IS PROUD.

Look in his face, look in his eyes,
Roguish and blue and terribly wise—
Roguish and blue and quickest to see
When mother comes in as tired as can be;
Quickest to find her the nicest old chair;
Quickest to get to the top of the stair;
Quickest to see that a kiss on her cheek
Would help her far more than to chatter, to speak,
Look in his face, and guess if you can,
Why mother is proud of her little man.

The mother is proud—I will tell you this;
You can see it yourself in her tender kiss,
But why? Well, of all her dears
There is scarcely one who ever hears
The moment she speaks, and jumps to see
What her want or her wish might be.
Scarcely one. They all forget,
Or are not in the notion to go quite yet,
But this she knows, if her boy is near,
There is somebody certain to want to hear,
Mother is proud, and she holds him fast,
And kisses him first and kisses him last;
And he holds her hand and looks in her face,
And hunts for her spool, which is out of its place,
And proves that he loves her whenever he can—
That is why she is proud of her little man.

A Tomato Story.

"Have another tomato Johnny," said grandma, as she saw the last red slice disappear from Johnny's plate: "I think you like tomatoes."

"I do," said Johnny. "I like them raw and stewed and baked and 'most every way."

"I wonder if you would like them the way I ate them last summer in Wyoming?" Cousin May said. "They were not plenty there; and we ate them like fruit, with cream and sugar."

"Well," Johnny said, "I'd just like to try them that way!"

"Why, bless the child!" grandma said. "We'll have some for supper. "That's the way we always used to eat them, but it's gone out of fashion now."

"Didn't you like tomates when you were little grandma?" Johnny asked, as he saw grandma looking at his plate with a smile in her eye.

"No," grandma said; "but that's because I was a big girl before I ever tasted them. I never saw any until I was thirteen years old.

"I can remember it so well! A peddler who came by our farm once a month, bringing buttons and thread and such little things to sell, brought the seed to my mother.

"He used to carry seed and cuttings of plants from one farmer's wife to the next, and they liked to see him come. He could tell all the news, too, from up the road and down.

"One spring morning he came, and after mother had bought all she needed from his big red wagon, and he had fed his horses, and was sitting by the kitchen fire waiting for his dinner, he began fumbling about in his big pockets in search of something.

"Finally, he drew out a very small package, and handed it to mother."

"'I've brought you some love apple seeds,' he said. 'I got them in the city, and I gave my sister half, and saved half for you.'

"'Thank you kindly,' mother said, as she looked at the little yellow seeds. 'I'm right glad to get them. What kind of a plant is the love-apple?"

"'Well,' said the peddler, 'the man who gave me the seeds had his plants last year in a sunny fence-corner.'

"The flowers are small; but the fruit a bright red, and is very pretty among the dark green leaves. You can't eat the fruit though, it's poisonous. It's some thing new. The man who gave me the seeds got them from the captain of a ship from South America. They grow wild there.'

"So mother planted her 'love-apple' seeds in a warm corner, and they grew; and the little yellow blossoms came, and after them the pretty red fruit.

"We children would go and look at it, and talk about it, and wonder if it would hurt us if we just tasted it.

"One day mother heard us talking about it; and she called us away, and told us that, if we could not be satisfied to look at the pretty fruit without wanting to eat it, she would have to pull up her 'love-apple' vines, and throw them away.

"We knew she would hate to do that; for no one else had them, and she was very proud of them. So we kept away from that corner; and the vines grew and blossomed, and the red showed in new places every day. The birds didn't seem at all afraid of the poison fruit, and ate all they wanted of it.

"One day in the early fall my uncle came from New York to make us a visit. When he went out in the garden, he stopped in surprise. 'Why, Mary what fine tomato vines you have!' he said to mother. 'Where did you get them?

"'We call them love-apples,' mother said; and then she told him how the peddler brought the seeds. But, when my uncle found that we were afraid to eat them, he had a hearty laugh at us; and then he showed mother how to get some ready for supper.

"And that was my first taste of tomato, Johnny," grandma said, "and you shall have some the same way, with cream and sugar, for supper."—Youth's Companion.

Opportunities.

A cripple beggar was one day trying to pick up some old clothes that had been thrown to him from a window, when a crowd of rough boys gathered about him

They made sport of him, mocking his awkward movements, and hooting at his helplessness and ragged clothes. In a few minutes up came a noble-looking little fellow, and, elbowing his way through the crowd of boys, he helped the poor cripple to pick up his gifts, and made them into a bundle for him. Then after slipping a little money that he happened to have into the cripple's hand, he was starting to run away, when he heard a voice above him which said, "Little boy with a straw hat, look up." And, looking up, he saw a lady looking out of an upper window, and she said: "God bless you, my dear little fellow! God bless you for that!"

As he walked along home he could not help thinking how glad he had made his own heart by doing an act of kindness to another. He thought of the poor crippled beggar's surprised and grateful look; of the lady's smile and pleasant words; and last, and best of all, he could almost hear God whispering to him from heaven, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."

"Let us all, "as we have opportunity, do good unto all men; and God will fill our lives with usefulness and our hearts with more happiness than we can possibly have in any other way.—Weekly Home.

The Crown Prince of Siam.

Far away in the warm Orient is the kingdom of Siam. Sailing over the China Sea and up the great Gulf of Siam we reach the city of Bangkok, the capital.

At first we see only a floating city. Streets are laid out in the water as regularly as upon the shore. There are shops and booths and markets and hundreds of home, all built upon rafts. Beyond them the rest of the city stands upon solid ground under the shelter of great mountains. There are forts on each side. The flag of Siam is floating over them; a clear, red flag, with a white elephant upon it. Beyond there are beautiful porcelain towers and domes that gleam, in the sunlight, like mother-of-pearl.

There are some very modern things about Bangkok, too. Horse cars rumble about the city, and at night the streets are lighted by electric lamps. Among the public buildings of Bangkok are two royal palaces. One is the king's, the other is the crown prince's palace.

Sometimes, of course, the crown prince is only a very small boy, but the palace is there, all waiting for him when he can occupy.

The present crown prince is seventeen years old. He is a fine fellow, and speaks and writes easily in English, French and German. He has recently written several stories in English, for young people.

He is not a boy, however, for in Siam when a boy is fourteen he becomes a man. Till then his hair, on the top of his head, is never cut, but is kept in a neat little coil. On his fourteenth birthday there is always something of a celebration; his head is shaved and he is a man.

Three years ago, when the crown prince lost his coil, there was a grand festival covering several days; till I fancy he grew thoroughly tired of it and wished he was a boy again.—Warren H. Frych, in Our Little Men and Women.

Say Soes.

For people who wish to live happily together there is this sound advice—Do not live too much together.

Ram's Horn: People have to be living very near to the throne before they can enjoy having their faults pointed out.

Stop, Lady, Stop!

Lean and lank,
He's such a crank;
My stars! I thank
I'm not his wife;
He'd make my life
A scene of strife.

Stop, lady, stop! his liver is out of order. "He's just too nice for anything," his wife says, "when he is well." Every wife's husband should, if sick, take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It puts the liver and kidneys in good working order, purifies the blood, cleanses the system from all impurities, from whatever cause arising, and tones up the functions generally. Guaranteed to benefit or cure, or money paid for it refunded.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets permanently cure constipation, sick headache, indigestion and kindred derangements.

Good manners include not merely pleasant things said and done, but unpleasant ones left undone.

A sick-room that needs cleaning can be made fresh and sweet without sweeping and without dust by wiping everything in it with a cloth wrung out of warm water in which there are a few drops of ammonia.

Always rinse all soapy suds from your sponge, and then throw it into your basket. A sponge cared for in this fashion will never be slimy, sour, or musty.

AT EASE IN ZION.

This descriptive phrase of the prophet has a natural affinity for two others. One is the expression about SIMON PETER that "he stood and warmed himself." The other is the saying of the royal bride in the Song of SOLOMON: "I have put off my coat; how shall I put it on? I have washed my feet; how shall I defile them?" Putting their meaning into prose we have the condition of many nominal Christians. Such are indifferent to the calls of duty, indolent or inactive, considering personal comfort or actually selfish and unmindful of the call to receive CHRIST and feast with Him. The last of these three references will suffice for present study and will illustrate the other two with fulness enough to make us wonder whether we are at ease in Zion.

There are several theories as to the incidental origin of the Song of SOLOMON. Let them be for the curious while we assert this that, whatever natural association or origin the song may have had in the mind of the writer, it comes to us as a part of the Bible and with sweetness and strength spiritual and with moral purpose. A recent poem, which we have noticed, takes SULAMITH as a heroine and weaves a fabric of romance with SOLOMON as hero, in such wise as to include the book of Ecclesiastes as well as this. This poem puts the books into new and attractive associations, which well repay several readings. It leaves us with the opinion held before that the song of SOLOMON is not a mere narrative of common place events, but a conversational narrative by several characters. It is not easy to separate the poem into its several parts. As a help to do this in a practical way, Dr. J. HUDSON TAYLOR, founder of the China Inland Mission, has issued from the Mission Press of Toronto a little help to practical piety entitled Communion, being a brief exposition of this Song of Songs.

The words we have quoted appear to be those of the bride in finding fault with herself for missing the offered kindness of the king. In prophecy and type we have the relation of the Church and every Christian to CHRIST. As this bride had put off her robe that she might make herself comfortable and had fallen asleep in her selfish ease, and as she had washed her feet and hesitated to soil them in the service of her leige lord, so the cold church and the comfortable Christian have put off the robe of ready reception and hesitates to rise and soil the feet in going to open the door and welcome JESUS.

This figure of the bride and the bridegroom is frequent in the Old and New Testaments to represent the relation of the Church to CHRIST. Thus it is written in the very figure of the song and the familiar type: "Behold I stand at the door and knock."

"Oh! lovely attitude, He stands
With melting heart and laden hands."

He stands waiting, even in the night watches until His head is wet with the dew. He knocks for entrance. He offers to spread the feast and to be the GUEST. But the cold church or the comfortable Christian has deliberately put off the receiving robe of entire consecration and patient, prayerful waiting for the LORD and has fallen asleep. Indifference to the claims of CHRIST has grown into indolence in His service.

Half asleep the knock is heard and a sort of feeling that the door should be opened is there but the feet have been carefully washed and there is the dainty unwillingness to soil them in the service necessary to go and open the door. This is the picture of the Christian who has been lifted out of the miry clay and placed on the Rock, forgetting the pit whence digged, the clay whence drawn, and now become vain, self-conceited and too fine to soil the feet to rise and welcome the LORD.

The MASTER knocks in His Word, and His Providence and by the HOLY SPIRIT. Being at ease in Zion, or like PETER making ourselves comfortable when the cause of CHRIST is on trial, or ease-loving and indolent instead of watching unto prayer we are not willing to rise and put on the robe of consecration and consistency, and to soil our feet in service that we may in these things throw back the bolt and open the door which shut our LORD out. This is the picture of the Church or Christian which does not know what a blessing is offered, does not appreciate the riches of good in communion, does not know that though rich and increased with goods there is soul poverty, "poor and wretched and miserable and blind and naked."

This receiving CHRIST is not dependent on pious meditations merely and does not depend on formal worship. It is the welcome of a friend into our hearts and homes and a ready service to Him even if the service seems menial and the duty of it require contact with what may seem to soil our self-conceit.

There are two examples of the benefit of this receiving CHRIST and serving Him. One is the case of the servants at the wedding feast of Cana. When the best wine was brought to the guests, only the servants knew whence it came for they had done the bidding of CHRIST. The other was that of MARY who knew the secret of the death of JESUS when even JOHN the beloved disciple did not.

At ease in Zion, self-satisfied, indifferent to the knocking at the door of our hearts, we may fall asleep in a religious stupor and have a sort of self-flattery and selfish sloth, but we cannot be happy. Happiness is real and full only in receiving CHRIST as SAVIOUR, FRIEND and COUNSELLER, being ready and willing to give up comfort, and touch the lowly and defiling habitations of sin, if need be, doing anything, everything, in our reach and power to serve Him.

HERE AND THERE.

THE MINUTES OF THE ASSEMBLY are at hand. The cover looks bright and the make-up as a whole reflect, great credit on our Committee and on Messrs. WHITTET and SHEPPERSON. An inquiry within is not, to most, attractive. Long columns of figures methodically tabulated have a look that is a trifle hard and dry—and in very truth there is little succulence in them. Nevertheless, possibly, we may draw some encouragement or may learn some useful lesson from the tale they tell. Let us see:

WE TAKE THE COMPARATIVE SUMMARY given elsewhere for this inquiry: We find 445 candidates against 427 last year and 363 five years ago—an increase steady, regular, gradual. We have 48 ministers more than last year and 140 more than five years ago—the increase being larger 1893-'94 than in any other one year. Churches have increased 61 in 12 months and 313 in the half decade. Licensures largely over last year, which however was much behind the year immediately previous to it. The number of ministers who died 1893-'94 was only 21 the fewest for any twelve months within the period under consideration. Ministers received from other denominations 14 dismissed to others 3—a preponderance, on the right side of the account, noticeable all through. We organized fewer churches the past year than in any other year of the five and dissolved five more than during the year just previous—which may be encouraging or may not—all depends on the reasons why not or why. Three churches were received from other denominations and three surrendered to them which balances accounts. Have added 1911 persons to communion on profession of faith—which is clear gain—and our rolls are now 10,621 larger than last year which means as we added 21.896 that we lost by death or otherwise 11,275. Scholars in Sunday-schools have increased over 15,000 and teachers over 11,000 in twelve months—an increase greater than the aggregate increase of the three years 1891, '92, '93.

But let us get to the dollars and cents. The total expended by our Church for all things and all causes last year was $54,781 less than the year just previous, and less by over $32,000 than the year before that—but here is comfort: $22,000 of the $54,000 dropped off in the gulf, Miscellaneous, and nearly $12,000 in the Congregational. The pastors' salaries, sad to say, had to bear $20,000 diminution. In Presbyterial and Bible cause the falling off is very trifling. Colored Evangelization dropped down $1,300; Publication, $1,500; Invalid Fund, $1,225; Foreign Missions, $800; Church Erection, $14,330—a not very accurate account we imagine. Sustentation and Evangelistic gained $7,657 and Education $11,500. On the whole not a very encouraging exhibit, but under all the circumstances not a discouraging one. But for the newspaper stoppages to enable parties to contribute to the benevolent causes, who can say what would have been the result?

THE ATMOSPHEBE IS CLEARING AND things begin to look brighter. Crops everywhere seem to be in best condition possible and are made at much less expense than usual. The hearts of farmers are being lightened. The strikes are over. The effects are upon those who promoted them and will be for a time, but time heals all and recuperation we may believe will be speedy. Truly GOD is blessing us and it becomes us in all our ways to acknowledge Him, with profoundest thankfulness for the evils and the dangers from which He has rescued us and for the bright promise of the future with which He reassures us.

FROM HON. JOSEPHUS DANIEL Superintendent of Public Printing, we have the report of Prof. HENRY W. ELLIOTT on "The Seal Islands of Alaska"—an exceedingly valuable book of its kind. A book to lay by you for extraction of nuggets of knowledge as to the seals and seal fisheries, the inhabitants of the Seal Islands, the manners and customs, the birds and beasts and creeping things, and very much else. The work is comprehensive, the index detailed and minutely specific—capitally so. We heartily thank Mr. DANIEL for remembering us.

A DAY OR TWO AGO IT WAS ANNOUNCED that the "Ragnvald-Jarl" with the WELLMAN party of Asiatic explorers without doubt was lost—crushed it was supposed in the pack ice which in neccesarily abundant this year. We copy now the news which puts a brighter face on all this. It is by telegram from London, last Saturday:

A telegram was received to-night from the Captain of the Erling, a Norwegian sealer, which arrived to-day at the Island of Tromsoe, Finmark, Norway. The Captain of the sealer said that near Amsterdam Island, in latitude 84 north and 0 longitude, the Erling spoke the Ragnvald Jarl, the steamer which was conveying the Wellman arctic expedition to the edge of the pack ice. The Ragnvald Jarl, in reply to signals, asked to be reported at the nearest place the Erling touched at, saying that all were well on board and full hope.

The Ragnvald Jarl, the Captain of the Erling also telegraphed, had been beset by pack ice, which had delayed her progress considerable. But, the sealer Captain added, Wellman and his party were then free of the pack ice and they should now be well on their way to the north pole.

This cheering news has delighted everybody interested in arctic explorations, and further news from the Wellman expedition will be awaited with a great deal of interest, as people are beginning to really believe that with Nansen, Jackson and Wellman striving for the honor of planting their flags at or near the pole something away ahead of anything before accomplished may be recorded this years.

Safety of God's Children.

How many who call themselves Christians are always looking forward with forebodings, worrying about this and that, fearing for the safety of themselves, their friends, or their property, never feeling the sweet peace which can be had by "casting all their care upon him" "who is encamped around about them who fear him," and who has said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.' If we could have at all times "that perfect love which casteth out all fear, how much enjoyment we might have.

It is wrong for one who professes to have faith in God to yield to despondency. They should rise above it, feeling that "all things work together for good to those who love God." The Bible contains many precious promises of God's care for his children. Though they may be in actual danger, God has said he would not suffer even their feet to be moved, for he will preserve their going out and their coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore.

In these promises, God does not promise to do all the caring for us unless we do all in our power, which is consistent and right, for our own safety. We should not needlessly go into danger, thinking God will care for us. That would be a sin, and God would not bless us in so doing.

God does not always care for us in the way which we think is right. He permits trouble, and trial, and suffering, but in the end we find it was good for us, far better even than if he had not suffered us to be tried. Then let us not think in our trials and troubles that God has withdrawn his care from us, but trust him always, trust him ever. Though he leads us where we cannot discern our way, though the pathway be rough and thorny, yet above us "the fire by night and the cloud by day" are guiding and sheltering us. God's care is over us all the time, and we have been led nearer to him, although it seemed a cross to us.

God will care for his children, and keep them so that the "wicked one shall not touch them," and though assailed by temptation they need not fear, for we are told to count it all joy when we fall into divers temptations, for the trying of our faith worketh patience. Christ himself was tempted, so "he is able to succor them that are tempted," and will, with the temptation, provide a way of escape. At the passover supper on the night of Christ's betrayal, he said to Peter: "Simon, behold Satan hath desired to have you that he may sift you as wheat, but I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not." Even so will he pray the Father for us, asking that "we may be kept through the Father's name, that we may be one even as he and his Father are one." He prayed not only for his disciples, but for us, and for all who should believe on his name.

His care will go with us everywhere we go; even down to old age, and when we enter the dark valley he has promised to go with us. He has been there before, and can safely pilot us through until we land on the other shore. Even if we have all our life feared the grim messenger, he has promised to "deliver them, who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage," and he will enable us to exclaim in truth: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"—Religious Herald

DISAPPOINTMENT.

"He performeth the thing that is appointed for me."—Job xxiii. 14.

"Thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass."—Job xiv. 5.

"Disappointment—His appointment."
Change one letter, then I see
That the thwarting of my purpose
Is God's better choice for me.
His appointment must be blessing
Tho' it may come in disguise,
For the end from the beginning
Open to his wisdom lies.

"Disappointment—His appointment."
Whose? The Lord's, who loves me best,
Understands and knows me fully,
Who my faith and love would test;
For, like loving earthly parent,
He rejoices when he knows
That his child accepts unquestioned
All that from his wisdom flows.

"Disappointment—His appointment."
"No good thing will he withhold."
From denials oft we gather
Treasures of his love untold!
Well he knows each broken purpose
Leads to fuller, deeper trust,
And the end of all his dealings
Proves our God is wise and just.

"Disappointment—His appointment."
Lord, I take it then as such,
Like the clay in hands of potter,
Yielding wholly to thy touch.
All my life's plan is thy moulding,
Not one single choice be mine;
Let me answer, unrepining;
Father, "not my will, but Thine."

POPULAR TALKS ON LAW.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE.

Contracts Made on Sunday.

According to the popular notion, contracts made on Sunday are void; and in brief statements of business law for laymen this statement is always included. Like all attempts to gather up the decisions upon any question of law and to state the conclusion in a few words, the result is more or less misleading. To a certain extent it is true that contracts made on Sunday are void, and yet there are many exceptions to the rule, fully as important as the rule itself.

At common law, all contracts made on Sunday were valid. It follows, therefore, that inasmuch as we have in our American States adopted the common law so far as suited to our conditions, this fundamental rule of that system of laws is the rule in this country except where modified by positive enactments of the Legislature. The common law holds in our American States, with the exception of Louisiana, so far as positive statutes have not contravened it.

On this question of Sunday contracts, then, it may be more truthfully said that all contracts made on Sunday are valid unless prohibited by statute. Nearly every State in the Union has some statute upon the subject of Sunday observance, and before one can say whether any certain act is void if done on Sunday one must know what is the statute of the State regarding Sunday observance. What may lawfully be done in one State on Sunday may not be lawfully done in another on that day. The decisions in the various States hinge upon the wording of these statutes, and as the wording differs the decisions themselves seem to differ. In themselves, therefore, they present a mass of conflicting opinion on the subject.

The wording of some statutes seems to intend that only manual labor is forbidden on the Sabbath day. Where such is the statute, courts will generally uphold contracts of a commercial character as not being within the meaning of the term "labor." Other statutes make void all commercial transactions, which term is held to include the making of deeds, contracts, notes, agreements of sale, etc.

Almost all the States have a statute broad enough in terms to include as unlawful the transacting of business, including not only the keeping open of stores and the selling of merchandise, but also the doing of any one commercial act, as that of making a note. So general are these provisions in American statutes that it has come to be loosely stated as the law in this country that contracts made on Sunday are void, although there are States in which such is declared not to be the law, because as stated, the wording of the statute in these exceptional cases does not cover commercial transactions of this character.

As stated, at common law all contracts made on Sunday are valid. The history of the growth of the present law on the subject is interesting and instructive. The ancient Christians used all days alike for the hearing of causes, the reason being that they might not imitate the heathen, who were superstitious about the observance of days. One reason for doing this was that by keeping their own courts always open they might prevent Christian suitors from resorting to heathen courts. The practice ceased about the year 500 by a canon of the church issued at that time, and it became unlawful to hear causes on the Lord's day. This canon, with others of a similar character, was confirmed by William the Conquerer and Henry II., and so became a part of the common law of England. These canons extended, however, no further than to prohibit judicial business on Sundays, and did not interfere with fairs, markets, sports and pastimes. With the spread, however, of the Reformation, and the consequent improvement in civilization, the views of the people changed on the subject of the rational observance of the Sabbath, and in all Protestant communities laws were enacted to secure it. Pastimes of various kinds were prohibited in the reigns of Charles I and Charles II. One or two laws were passed in England before the country became Protestant, but the principal English statute on the subject is that passed in the twenty-ninth year of the reign of Charles II. This statute enacts that no person shall do any worldly labor, business or work "of their ordinary callings" upon the Lord's day. This was the first statute to materially affect the common law on the subject, and it was strictly construed, the courts declaring that a man might do anything, buy or sell, or work in any way on Sunday if not in his "ordinary calling."

In this country Sunday laws were passed in most of the Colonies, and are now in force in most of the States. The prevailing distinction in the early statutes was between "works of necessity and mercy," or "necessity and charity," which were permitted, and all others which were prohibited.

In Massachusetts the words of the statute are: "No person shall do any manner of labor, business or work, except only works of necessity and charity, on the Lord's day."

In New Hampshire: "No person shall do any labor, business or work of his secular calling, works of necessity and mercy only expected, on the Lord's day."

In Vermont: "No person shall exercise in secular labor, business or employment, except such works only as works of necessity and charity, on the Lord's day."

Similar provisions are found in the statutes of Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Alabama and Kentucky. Under the above statutes it is well settled that all contracts of every description entered into on Sunday, and not within the exceptions noted, are unlawful and void.

In Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont the giving of a note on Sunday has been held illegal and the note void.

In Massachusetts a bond executed on Sunday is declared void. Decisions are found agreeing with these cases in Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Alabama, Kentucky, and Michigan. An exchange of horses on Sunday was held void in Kentucky. In New York the statute provides that there shall not be any service, labor or working on Sunday, excepting works of necessity and charity, and that no person shall expose for sale any wares, etc,, on Sunday, excepting certain goods mentioned. Under these provisions it is held that any contract which has for its consideration the doing of any ordinary work or labor on Sunday is void, and that a contract to publish an advertisement in a newspaper issued on Sunday is void. It has been held in New York that the prohibition extends not to mere private contracts of sale made without violating, or tending to produce violation, of public order and the due solemnity of the day, and that therefore a private transfer of personal property made on Sunday is valid.

In Ohio, the words used as expressing the sort of work that is rendered unlawful are, "at common labor." It is held that these words embrace the business of trading, selling or buying any goods, wares or merchandise. It has been held in that State that a contract entered into on Sunday for the sale of land is valid. In Indiana the statute is precisely like that in Ohio, but it has been held in that State that all contracts made on Sunday are void. These cases declare that while neither the English statute nor those of this country expressly declare that contracts made on Sunday, shall be void, that the principle is well settled and of general application that all contracts made in violation of the statute are void.

In Indiana, Pennsylvania and Alabama it has been held that a deed made on Sunday is void, but that, as it takes effect from the delivery, if it be delivered on Monday it is good. The efficacy of a legal instrument is imparted by its delivery. A contract cannot be said to be fully executed until delivery. It is generally held that if a contract is commenced on Sunday, but not completed until a subsequent day, or if it merely grew out of a transaction which took place on Sunday, it is not for this reason void. Some cases hold that where a contract is entered into on Sunday, and is therefore void, it may be rendered valid by a subsequent recognition or ratification. There is a difference of opinion among the authorities on this question.

Parsons says that when a contract of sale is made on Sunday and the property is delivered to the vendee, but the price is not paid, he is inclined to think that the property so delivered becomes the property of the vendee and that he may retain it without paying the price.

The statutes of South Carolina, New Hampshire and Rhode Island use the words, "servile labor" and "exposing goods for sale."

Inasmuch as the majority of courts of England and America that have considered the question have agreed that a third person who takes a note on Sunday, before its maturity and for good consideration, and having no notice of any illegality in its inception, may maintain an action thereon against the maker, our statement that a note made on Sunday is void must be modified to agree with the law as here laid down, that a note made on Sunday is generally void as between the parties, but not as to third persons who have taken the note before its maturity for good consideration and without notice of its illegality.

In New Jersey it has been held that contracts made on Sunday are void and cannot be afterwards ratified.

In Iowa, however, it has been held that such contracts were capable of ratification.

In Missouri, a note made and delivered on Sunday is void for illegality.

The result of our investigation, therefore, may be summed up as follows: Under the common law, contracts made on Sunday were good, and hence in our American States a contract made on Sunday is good unless it is in conflict with some statute. Almost every American State has a statute on the subject, these statutes differing considerably. Any act or contract which is within the penalties of these statutes, and any executory contract, the consideration for which is something unlawfully done on Sunday, is void.

Where the statute prohibits persons from doing on the Lord's day what is within their ordinary calling, a contract made by one outside of his ordinary calling is valid.

As to what acts come under the head of "common labor" there are differences of opinion. Affixing one's name to a note or bond or the loaning of money fall under the term "business." Almost all of the statutes, except what is done from necessity or charity. Generally the illegal contract cannot be ratified later, on a week day, although there are decisions to the contrary.

A note that is void between the maker and payee because of its having been made and delivered on Sunday may be good, as to innocent third parties to the note. A contract may be good when written and signed on Sunday if delivered on another day, and it may be void if written and signed on a week day and delivered on Sunday. When a Sunday contract has been performed, money paid and goods transferred under it cannot be recovered back. Money paid on Sunday in discharge of a debt, and retained afterwards by the creditor, is effectual for the purpose of payment.

The reader is cautioned to consult the particular statutory provisions and adjudication of his own State.

"Criminal Good Nature."

This expression originated with Mr. Herbert Spencer, we believe, as his criticism upon the too largely prevailing disposition among the American people.

Good nature, amiability, easy going complaisance are not to be the sole considerations when there are questions of law, morals and truth involved, and when the interests of humanity and religion are trembling in the balances.

These are matters not to be disposed of lightly and laughingly. These are questions which demand most earnest and thoughtful consideration, with serious and judicial regard for truth and right. The man who commits crime, or who condones wrong-doing, can not atone for it by being amiable, and the one who tramples on truth or who excuses it does not compensate for the evil that it wrought, by having a sweet spirit. Sweetness and smiles are not rare in this world, and even if they were they would not take the place of truth-speaking and right acting, without which smiles and sweetness would soon be driven from among men.

There is much to indicate that there is not a sufficient regard for law and authority in our midst. We enter into no comparison with other lands and other times, but would impress the fact, painfully apparent, that too many people excuse themselves from obedience to the laws of God and of the land. The second city of our land has been recently the scene of riots destructive to life and property, and the most prominent business interest in the country has been in an anxious struggle, from ocean to ocean, to continue its traffic with any sort of regularity.

Most vividly is it impressed upon us that that city, one year ago, was the scene of the most defiant disregard for God's law and express orders of Congress, issued in answer to the united prayers of millions of citizens, in the matter of keeping open the World's Fair on the Sabbath. What else could the courts and authorities expect as they sedulously inculcated and compelled disregard for divine and national laws than that their community should learn and practice the lesson well. And what else could the Mayor of Chicago have expected when, only a few weeks, ago, he recorded his official veto to the ordinance closing secular business houses, saloons included, on Sunday, passed by the Council in answer to a great petition from citizens? Such sowing to the wind brings the whirlwind. Lawlessness breeds lawlessness. Disorder kindles disorder. When a city teaches disregard for law its baser elements accept literally its instructions.

With equal distinctness is impressed the fact that the railroads have been in a conspiracy against the Sabbath, God's and man's law, year after year, and most flagrantly. How could they expect to compel their employes to give up their Sabbath rest, and labor on the day that belongs to no employer, without, at the same time, breaking down the nice distinction between right and wrong which should obtain in every mind and which is a mightier police force than a standing army? Unnecessary freighting, ostentatious excursion running, continual and useless Sabbath business, all have been persisted in until they have been one of the most efficient agencies for promoting lawlessness in the land. No business is more vulnerable than theirs, and upon none does the well drilled touch of lawlessness rest with swifter and more disastrous cosequences.

Law must be respected and enforced. In home and Church and State authority must rule. It will not do to let wrong-doing go unrebuked and unpunished. We can not be amiable to the guilty degree of complicity with crime without being involved in its ruinous results. As a nation we have been too much unconcerned while crime has held on its way. Municipal corruption such as has been unearthed in New York has eaten its way into too many communities and we have sat in our ease. Deeds of violence have been perpetrated, and our courts have failed in swift justice and men have been emboldened by the delay to further crimes. Law-breakers have flaunted their crimes in the very face of the law, and we have kept good-natured and sweet-tempered and let them go.

Crime and anarchy must be rebuked in the State. The State and the Church and the home must teach respect for the law, and good men must urge its enforcement. Lawless socialism, mawkish liberalism, weak indulgence in wrong-doing, and sneering at authority, must caese. It will not do to interfere with the civil government when exercising its just prerogatives nor to arraign the Church when discharging its duty in the way of Scriptural discipline.

We must act like men in such times as these We can not afford to ignore our duty to stand firm in the discharge of our duty in upholding the laws of the State and of God.—Herald and Presbyter.

An Illustration.

A minister once illustrated the difference existing between those Christians who consider it presumption to say that we know that we are saved, and those who rest in that blessed assurance. Thus: Scene, Egypt. Night of the passover. Imagine the occupants of one house worrying as to their safety, not deeming that they could be sure of it till all was over; while those in the next house were peaceful and calm, knowing that, 'He is faithful that promised.' (Heb. 10. 22, 23: Eph. 3. 12; Isa. 30. 15.) Both were equally saved by the blood, but the latter had joy as well as salvation.

LET US FORGET.

Let us forget
The memories that bind us fast
To our mistakes outgrown and past;
The trust betrayed, the tarnished name,
The look of scorn, the blush of shame,
Let us forget.

Let us forget.
That once we strove for selfish gain,
Regardless of another's pain;
The vain remorse, the sense of loss,
The burden of our self-made cross,
Let us forget.

Let us forget
The slight, the stings, the anguished tears
That marked the paths of by-gone years;
The bitter cup, the dark despair,
The one sad hour which none might share,
Let us forget.

Let us forget
All but the love, the grace, the light
That bore us to our present height,
And haunting ghosts of grief and care,
The guise of angel hosts shall wear,
Let us forget.

BOOKS.

The Jewish Question, and the Mission of the Jews. New York. Harper and Brothers. 12 mo. cloth $1.75.

This volume of 355 pages was evidently written by a modern, liberal Hebrew. Its philosophy is rationalistic. It is an attempt to fix the Jewish question in the mind as extra Scriptural. This we cannot believe possible. Their origin and history are in the Bible and there prophecy forecasts their mission and their destiny. The author fails to maintain his half-asserted belief in a mixed blood genealogy and does not prove that the Jews are not a separate people among all people. They have a nationality among nations. This book is clearly written and a real contribution to the literature of this subject. It will set the reader to thinking and help the thoughtful, and give both pleasure and profit.

ELDERS' AND DEACONS' INSTITUTE.

Red Springs, N. C., July, 1894.

To Our Christian Brethren:—We take great pleasure in announcing to you that the third annual meeting of the Elders' and Deacons' Institute, for the study of the Bible under the direction of the Presbytery of Fayetteville, will convene at Red Springs, opening August 6th, 1894.

As Local Committee of Arrangements we lay before you the conveniences and attractions offered this year and extend to you an urgent invitation to attend.

Red Springs, as a health resort, needs no recommendation from us, but suffice it to say here, that a short stay at this place would amply repay the expenditure, from a temporal point of view, were there no spiritual benefits to be derived.

An immense Tabernacle has been constructed, capable of seating some five-thousand people, which is a decided improvement over the accommodations offered heretofore.

Reduced rates have been obtained on all railroads.

Special arrangements for board, at hotels and private boarding houses, have been made. All persons wishing to board themselves will have free access to Fair Grounds and buildings.

An attractive programme, with prominent speakers from abroad, has been arranged.

Superb music, under the leadership of Rev. A. D. McClure, of Wilmington, who is well and favorable known to our people.

Gospel Hymns Nos. 5 and 6 combined will be used and all persons having these books, either separate or combined, are requested to bring them.

We hope all will attend who can, possibly, and we earnestly request all Christians to pray earnestly for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, that not only the officers of the church may be awakened to a more faithful discharge of duty, but that all Christians may be aroused to an earnest discharge of their duty also.

Yours fraternally,
J. A. McKAY,
Dr. J. L. McMILLAN,
PETER McQUEEN.

Two Millionaires.

BY OBADIAH OLDSCHOOL.

I met them to-day, but not in the same place. One of them was in a private parlor in a fashionable hotel. As he was an old acquaintance, we had a long and confidential conversation. He told me of his early struggles after he left the school where we were fellow students—of his speculations, disappointments, and final sweep. He said: "You know, Obadiah, how poor our folks were. I was disgusted with poverty and determined to be rich. I went to California, worked in the placers, and saved my dust until I had enough to go prospecting. I staked out several claims, and thought I had 'struck it rich,' again and again. But the ore failed to pan out as I expected. At last, however, I did get on a quartz ledge that went five hundred to the ton. I worked it deep enough to make a good show, then I organized a company and put the stock on the market. While it was booming I sold out, and invested all that I had made in government bonds. Here they are, I brought them from my box in the safe deposit vault to cut off the coupons. They amount to a round million, and give me an income of forty thousand a year. I don't own a foot of real estate, or any kind of property. I have just this package of bonds (taking it out of his bosom), so you see that I am free from care. My bonds are safe in the vault, and whenever I want any ready cash I have only to go and cut off coupons."

"But," I said, "that bundle of paper in your bosom, which you say makes you a millionaire, has no intrinsic value. Those bonds are only promises. Suppose the signer of them should fail."

"Why, man, they are United States bonds. The faith of the government is pledged for their redemption. They are better than gold or silver. My only fear is that the government may pay them at maturity. I would be glad to have them run as long as I live."

"So you are a millionaire by faith," I said. 'You don't see your real wealth, or handle it, but only pieces of paper that represent it."

"Yes, that is so; and while those pieces of paper represent the wealth and honor of the best government in the world, I am satisfied."

The other millionaire I found in the county poorhouse. I used to know him, too, in former times. He was a good boy at school. He grew up a bad man. But "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," and this old friend had a succession of financial disappointments, followed by broken health, until he was compelled to go to the pauper's home. He, of course, was without lands or material wealth of any kind, and yet he had, like the man in the hotel, a bundle of promes. As I sat by him in his narrow chamber, he took from under his pillow a well-worn Bible. He held it up in his thin, trembling hand, and said: "Obadiah, people call me a pauper, but I am worth millions. Why, in this Book which I sometimes think that God has written expressly for me. there are more than three thousand 'exceeding great and precious promises.' I wouldn't exchange one of them for a $50,000 Government bond. The bond I would have to leave in a few years at furthest; but these promises I shall take with me when I die, and claim them in the land where there is no more death. They are the bonds of Him who owns, not only the earth, but all the stars in the sky, and all the worlds that roll around them:

As I walked slowly home, after that second interview, and thought over the events of the day, I concluded that I would rather be in the place of the millionaire in the poorhouse than in that of millionaire in the Palace Hotel. Both are rich in faith; but the basis of the confidence in one case is human, and in the other divine. I am an enthusiastic patriot. I believe that our Government is the best on the earth, but I would rather trust God, yes, a thousand times rather, than it. His wealth is boundless, His power is limitless, His truth is immutable, and His love is infinite.—Interior.

EDUCATIONAL.

AGNES SCOTT INSTITUTE.

ONE OF THE SOUTH'S MOST POPULAR SCHOOLS.

THE WORK IT IS DOING.

The next session of this noted Presbyterian boarding and day school for young ladies, commences on September 5th, next.

Already applications for catalogues are being received and the promise is of another prosperous year.

The past year has been one of widespread financial depression, but notwithstanding this fact, the Institute has had a prosperous year.

No school in the South has enjoyed more constant and brilliant success than the Agnes Scott, and the causes of this success are evident:

1. Its location in North Georgia is unrivaled; the local surroundings are ideal, Decatur having long been noted for its refined, educated and religious society.

2. A large and accomplished corps of trained and experienced teachers, each member of the faculty having been selected for his or her character and special qualifications for the chair occupied.

3. Thorough work. The utmost effort is made to do thorough teaching, and no careless or antiquated methods are used. None of the officers or teachers have any financial interest in the management of the Institute, and each teacher is able to give her or his entire time and undivided and disinterested attention to the work of instructing. Pupils not making satisfactory progress or not improving their time are not allowed to waste the money of parents by further attendance.

The curriculum is already high. It is rigidly pursued and is being steadily advanced as the school grows in years. It is the desire and aim of trustees and faculty to place the Agnes Scott as the leader in elevating the standard of female education in the South.

The special departments, as music and art, are well equipped and under charge of skilled specialists, are fully abreast of the times and the best schools.

4. The low scale of fees, these having been fixed, not with the view of money making, but simply to cover current expenses, repairs and equipment.

5. The superb buildings were constructed especially for school purposes after the best approved plans. They are all of brick, heated by steam, lighted by electricity, scientifically ventilated and supplied throughout with hot and cold water and fire hose.

Applications for catalogues, general information, etc. Should be addressed to

First Church, Wilmington:—Rev. Dr. Peyton H. Hoge who has been supplying Brown Memorial church, Baltimore, for the past month returns home this week and will occupy the pulpit of this church next Sabbath. His flock will heartily welcome him, notwithstanding that during his absence they have been most acceptably and edifyingly served by Mr. Cornehlson, a graduate of Columbia.

Rev. D. McNeill Turner, D. D.:—The Fayetteville Observer says: The session of the Presbyterian church in Fayetteville has invited Rev. D. McNeill Turner, D D., who was their pastor from 1831 to 1840, to make them a visit. He will reach here in time to preach on the next Sabbath, July 29th, and will probably remain over the week and preach again the following Sabbath August 5th. Dr. Turner left Fayetteville in October 1840, and has not since visited it. It has been 54 years of absence and he will find many changes in the appearance of the town, and perhaps not find ten persons whom he knew at the time of his residence here. The whole generation has about passed away.

High Point:—I have had another precious privilege of witnessing another outpouring of the Spirit of God. Bro. Black has just closed a protracted meeting at this place, and we have had a great blessing. Young Brother Wakefield, a Union Seminary student, labors here during his vacation. We also had with us Mr. W. C. Brown, another theological student, and Bro. Pool who led the singing. These three young brethren are certainly learning to bear the yoke in their youth and have made a beautiful beginning in their life-long work.

Bro. Black closed last night and I must say that rarely, if ever, have I witnessed such a precious season of grace. Not far from sixty have professed faith in Christ. Of these fifteen have already connected themselves with our church and several others will do so in a short time—next Sunday—I think.

And let me say here that a large number of these have come from the Sabbath-school of the church, superintended by Bro. E. A. Snow and his faithful co-workers. God bless them and all faithful Sunday-school workers.

Let me say right here too, that if Brother Black's committee does not moderate his labors, I greatly fear he cannot continue his work through many years. But how could he do otherwise when hundreds upon hundreds crowded around him from day to day and from night to night to receive his message. The Lord spare the dear brother and bless him yet more abundantly. P. H. D.

Dedication of Brookston Chapel:—This chapel has been erected by the efforts of the pastor and people of the Presbyterian church at Henderson, especially Mr. J. R. Young, a member of the Henderson church session. Here for some years Mr. Y. has superintended a very efficient Sabbath-school. Here the pastor of the Henderson church has for two years preached every other Sabbath afternoon in the month. The Sunday-school and congregations became too large to find accommodation in the log school house, and a lot five miles from Henderson was secured and a pretty chapel was erected in a delightful grove. Recently it has been completed and paid for, a good organ and other furniture provided, and arrangements were made for the dedication. Rev. J. H. Smith, D. D., of Greensboro, came to assist the pastor in the dedication exercises which were of great interest. The day was fine, the congregation large, and in a rich and earnest vim of thought Dr. Smith preached the dedication sermon from Psalms 89:15. "Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound." The dedication prayer was offered by the pastor, and the interesting services were concluded with a hymn and the benediction. After a plentiful dinner spread in the grove, the congregation assembled for a second service. Dr. Smith remained for several days and preached with much earnestness and power to large and delighted congregations. There was much solemnity of feeling and several persons made confession of their faith in Christ.

North Wilksboro:—Rev. S. G. Walker writes: I wish to say to the Christian public through the columns of your paper that I am just from North Wilkesboro where I preached on Sunday. I also did some efficient work toward our new church and school enterprize. We have now about four-fifths of the building material necessary for the present building. We want money to pay for the door and window frames, also the doors and sash, &c.

Again we want the necessary amount of money to enable us at once to employ carpenters to erect this building, for it is sorely needed. The white Presbyterians are rallying to our cause, notwithstanding the facts that they are laboring under a great burden from their own churches. I believe that the material will all be had by donations from friends to the cause, so what we want is money to pay carpenters and purchase material from the factories. I wish to make an acknowledgement of the following receipts for our church building in North Wilkesboro for the month of July: Misses M. L. Lea, $1; E. S. Murray, $5; S. O. H. Dickerson, $2; Edwin Shavers, $1.

Yours truly for this cause,

S. G. WALKER.

Jones Schoolhouse, Near Yanceyville:—Licentiate W. K. Forsyth, assisted by Mr. W. A. Hall, also of Union Seminary, have been preaching here. The former writes:

We have just closed a five days meeting at Jones' schoolhouse. Mr. W. A. Hall, of Union Seminary, was with us and preached the Word in its beauty, simplicity and with power. The Spirit's power was manifested in eight or more conversions and in greatly reviving professing Christians. To Him be the praise.

Our Sabbath-shool, with Mrs. S.C. Corbett as superitendent, comes forward with four pupils who, in the last two weeks have recited perfectly the Shorter Catechism and are waiting for their Bibles and diplomas as premiums. They are: Johnnie Corbett, aged 12 years; Tommie Henderson, 11; Irene Gunn, 11; Rhea Henderson, 9. Have you a younger pupil than Rhea who has recited it? W. K. F.

Concord and Nevill's Prairie:—Protracted meetings were held in Concord and Nevill's Prairie churches, Houston county, in which Rev. S. F. Tenney was assisted by his son, Rev. S. M. Tenney. These churches seem encouraged and spiritually quickened by these meetings, and one member was added to Concord church by profession.

Rev. S. M. Tenney recently graduated at Princeton Theological Seminary. He has agreed to supply the church at Longview, and will enter upon his work at once. His postoffice will be Longview, Texas.

A MISSIONARY SCHOOL.

PROCTOR, CARE N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.

I see your notice. I do not think that it is probable that anything will come out of this letter but will write at a venture.

Our Home Missionary work in the Indian territory must have a school feature. At Durant, a town of about six hundred and growing, on the great artery, the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad, about thirty miles from Sherman, Texas, we have bought a two story building, seating perhaps one hundred on each floor. We hope soon to have a boarding house erected, with the idea of allowing boys to do their own cooking, as a club. This, so as to put the school in reach of many who otherwise could not attend.

Our interest in the school is solely for the sake of its religious character. There are two teachers on the ground who are popular. One a bachelor who proposes to abide in the boarding house with the boys. The other is a married man with family. Our local Board there have employed those two men on salaries conditioned on the amount of tuition received. We want a first rate man for Principal. Our purpose is to have a Christian school. The principal will be the leader as to this. The school is to be opened and closed with prayer, reading and exposition of Scriptures. The Scriptures are to be memorized, hymns to be learned, singing and a Bible course, all of which the principal will put in shape and utilize the two teachers there to the best advantage in that line. Monthly reports of work and results to be made. It is a missionary school, out and out. We go into it for Christ's work. We want to make the best school possible and then invite patronage, and aim to make the patronage pay as much of the expenses as possible. We will teach orphans, perhaps twenty, and worthy poor, free. We cannot make debt. The tuition and a fixed amount ($1,000 this year) must cover the outlay. If the school will not justify the employment of the two teachers, one can be dropped on twenty days notice, or they can quit by giving us twenty days notice. That is the plan for this year. There is an almost boundless field for good, for the Master there. I, for my part, prefer a teacher not a preacher. One preacher living in Texas has been named to us as the proper man, but there has been no selection as yet. We may settle it very soon. It is Missionary work as much as if in China and needs a consecrated, wise, prudent every way capable principal.

If this strikes you please write me at once—give me your references. A man of Christian spirit, gentle, liberal, but firm, a positive Presbyterian, is needed. He will have to deal with Indians, whites, other denominations, all, and must go there to do the work of our denomination for the Master.

Yours with the kindest regards,

J. N. CRAIG,
Secretary.

A work for Christ, with a sufficient living are the inducements. The influence of a good school there, will tell for generations. Things there are now in the formative state—what salary would you want? $800 or $900, or with good tuition fees possibly $1,000, will probably be the figure. We give missionaries about $900, as the average. They keep horses and buggy, but have homes without rent. We are beginning here. May get into better shape in a year or two—will if we get the right man for Principal. J. N. C.

INSTITUTE FOR COLORED MINISTERS, HENDERSON, N C.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Rev. S. G. Walker, a colored member of the Synod of North Carolina suggested this enterprise to the undersigned. In the interest of his people he was very anxious to see such Institutes held in the Synod. The Institute we held at Henderson was conducted by the Minister's Alliance (white) of Henderson and though strictly Evangelical in all of its features was undenominational. It was designed to instruct and edify the colored ministers of all Christian denominations in the counties of Vance, Granville, Warren and Franklin, N. C. Henderson the place selected is readily accessible from these counties. A program having been adopted, the colored ministers of Henderson were invited to a conference with us. The object of the Institute was explained and their co-operation in the work of offering their church buildings, inviting attendance, entertaining the delegates, and in furthering the parts assigned them was secured. They were all supplied with copies of the program and they undertook to distribute them and to do personal work in securing the success of the movement. The following is the program adopted. [The program was not enclosed and so did not reach us.]

Besides the pastor of the Presbyterian church at Henderson, Rev. W. L. Cunniggim, pastor of the Methodist Church South, Rev. Robt. Van Deventer, of the Baptist, Rev. Julian Ingle, of the Protestant Episcopal and Rev. T. M. Johnson of the Methodist Protestant church gave their assistance. A number of delegates attended, and the key note of the Institute of a high and edifying character was struck in the first address. After the white ministers had read their papers or made their addresses the colored brethren discussed the topics in brief and often in forcible speeches. The two days were fully occupied and the exercises were on all hands voted a gratifying success. The colored delegates individually and collectively expressed themselves as greatly benefitted and aided in their work, and they voted a unanimous request to our Alliance to repeat the Institute services; this we expect to do. A desire to see work of this character extending over the South prompts this communication. One of the most discouraging features manifest in the narrative reports of our various church courts is the moderate measure of work done among our colored people. Here is one way to reach them i. e., through their ministers. Who ever contributes to the instruction and spiritual elevation of this class aids in raising the whole race to a higher plane of virtue. Among some of the advantages of this plan may be mentioned. (1.) The increase of spirituality and of evangelical tone among the colored ministers. (2.) The softening of denominational jealousies and asperities among them. (3.) The golden opportunity it presents for molding opinion and directing their policy in regard to vital questions of morals which may emerge. (4.) A cultivation of confidence in their white brethren of the South. (5.) An economical means of reaching this great class of people whose destinies so largely affect our own. Our brethren of the North are more able to give of their funds, we though not rich in silver and gold may give what we have; our sympathies, our labors and our prayers.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., July 25th, 1894.

Although hopes are expressed that a compromise will be reached that will result in ending the existing tariff deadlock between the House of Representatives and the Senate there are few outward indications of any such satisfactory ending of the dispute. It has been a very exciting week in the Senate. The tone of the speeches made plainly indicated that the even tempered calmness that should accompany legislation on matters of great public importance was sadly lacking. The only encouraging feature about the situation is that individually the Senators and Representatives all appear to recognize that the country wants the tariff uncertainty settled much-worse than it wants any particular tariff bill to become a law. The business of the country can and will accommodate itself to any tariff law, but it must remain in a state of semi-stagnation so long as there is a doubt as to what the tariff law is to be.

The Cabinet has decided to endorse the action of Minister Willis in promptly recognizing the Hawaiian republic, although it would have been more pleasing to the administration had he waited for instructions before doing so. A formal protest has been received from the ex queen, but it is not probable that any official notice will be taken of it.

The latest news indicates that Secretary Gresham's commendable efforts to prevent war between Japan and Korea and China have been unavailing, although the hope is still held out at the legations of the countries involved that the trouble is exaggerated in the meagre cablegrams that have been received.

The Anti-Saloon League has made arrangements for a plentiful supply of ice water for the Knights of Pythias who will take part in the street parade which is to be a big feature of the encampment to be held in Washington next month. In making the offer to the citizens' committees having charge of the arrangements for the entertainment of the visiting Pythians and their friends, the communication from the Anti-Saloon League stated that it was done to prevent the visitors patronizing Saloons. When the G. A. R. had their immense street parade here it was charged, and was probably true, that the saloon keepers on portions of the route took extra precautions to prevent cool water being supplied to the marches in the neighborhood of their saloons, because they wanted their thirst to drive them into the purchase of intoxicating drinks.

Representative Bryan, of Nebraska, used some very plain language in an address at one of the weekly meetings of the Brotherhood of Philip and Andre. "The common people heard him gladly," was the biblical quotation upon which Mr. Bryan based his remarks. He said that he thought the Church often fell short in its duty, and that instead of concentrating in its corporate capacity the high ideals of its divine founder it catered to cliques and classes, which oftimes robbed it of the opportunity of doing lasting good After dwelling briefly on the significance and impressiveness of his text he said: "In fact Christ's love for the common people leads me to believe that it is one proof of His divine nature." He also aptly quoted the well-known words of President Lincoln—"The Lord must have loved the common people, because He made so many of them." He advised young men to adopt three rules for their guidance. First: Be careful as individuals not to allow money to dwarf your better nature. Second: The Church is no respecter of persons, and the third: Truths and duties never conflict. Of the first he said: "Jesus did not say how much money we ought to have. When a man's pile is so high he cannot look over it to see his fellowman, he has too much; when a man's money becomes so heavy that it squeezes out of him his sympathy for his fellow-man, he has too much. A very little money may do that if we have a very little sympathy, but if we have a large amount of sympathy it will take a great deal of money. If our sympathy is strong enough money may be only the means of showing that sympathy." Mr. Bryan closed with these words: "As Christians, believing in the brotherhood of man, believing in the equality of all people, believing that they were made and put here and that our sympathy must extend to them, I insist that it is the duty of every Christian to examine every law and see that it concurs in this purpose and that you can share the responsibility of it."

At a meeting of representations of the Evangelical Sunday-schools of the District of Columbia, held this week, it was decided to hold a three-day Sunday-school Convention, beginning October 8th, next. The principal object of this convention is to increase the interest in and improve the methods of Sunday-school work, which is every day becoming a greater factor in moral reform and Christian work. Third Quarter.—Lesson VII.

Aug. 12.—The Temptation of Jesus.

Matt. iv. 1-11. Commit vss. 1-4.

Golden Text. In all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.—Heb. iv. 15.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. The lesson follows immediately upon the last. The connection is obvious. Jesus is now the heaven-acknowledged leader of the hosts of God, and as such Satan must have a trial of strength with Him. The parallel account is found in Luke iv. 1-13; and a summary statement in Mark i. 12, 13. Read also Gen. iii. 1-6.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: Led to the conflict by the Spirit, vs. 1; the fast and consequent hunger, vs 2; the first temptation and answer, vss. 3, 4; the second temptation and answer, vss. 5-7; the third temptation and answer, vss. 8-10; the victory and reward, vs. 11.

Third Step. Consult your helps for any points needing explanation:

Vs. 1. Led up of the Spirit. A constraining influence from the Holy Spirit of whose power He was full (Luke iv. 1). O. T. prophets sometimes describe an actual physical force (Ezek. viii. 3).

Into the wilderness—generally understood to be the wilderness of Northern Judea, not far from Jericho. There is mountain named Quarantania—from the Latin word for forty—that is the traditional scene. But it may have been the wilderness of the wandering and on Horeb where both Moses and Elijah passed their forty days fast (Ex. xxxiv. 28; 1 Kings xix. 8.

To be tempted. Many find a difficulty in distinguishing between the liability to temptation and the liability to sin. Jesus could not have been human without the capacity for temptation; He could not have been Divine unless it was absolutely certain that He would not sin. One can feel the power of a temptation without yielding to it one whit even in desire. In every sin there is an element of satisfaction or advantage promised that is in itself a legitimate object of desire: the sinfulness consists in the means or circumstances of gratification. When the desire passes over from the legitimate desire for the object in itself considered, to a desire for it in spite of the recognized sinful condition, then the desire itself has become sin, and the sin has been committed in heart. Christ was liable to the former as a human being, and so was temptable; he was not liable to the other and so was not peccable. There was a threefold necessity for the Temptation: (1) for His own sake, to fully test His own powers, to clearly determine His own mission, Heb. ii. 10; (2) for our sakes, that He might set us an example and that we might come to Him as one who could be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, Heb. iv. 15, 16; (3) for redemption's sake—as the second Adam He must conquer where Adam fell.

Vs. 2. When he had fasted forty days—tempted all the time (Luke iv. 2). The temptation during this time was probably internal and subjective, Satan not appearing outwardly until the three formal temptations narrated. The substance of these temptations was doubtless to the same end—to doubt His Divine mission and to relinquish the stupendous task—"Father, if it be possible let this cup pass from me."

Afterwards a hungered—a state of spiritual exaltation having to this time saved Him from consciousness of His bodily needs. Satan choses the time of physical collapse that followed for His fiercest and final onset.

Vss. 3, 4. FIRST TEMPTATION. Sinless element—bodily appetite. All bodily appetites are in themselves innocent and have proper gratifications. This one our Saviour was now feeling acutely. Sinful element—distrust of His Heavenly Father. There was no more harm in making stones bread, than in making water wine, or in multiplying loaves. But to use the power God gave Him for the salvation of the world in satisfying His own desires would be to destroy His own example to His followers whom He was to teach that

"He who feeds the ravens
Will give His children bread."

(Matt. vi. 26, etc.) This is the substance of His answer, which has the added force of being taken from His Father's Word (Deut. viii. 3,).

Vs. 5. Taketh Him. Whether in the body or out of the body we cannot tell (2 Cor. xii. 2). In either case the effect and appearance to Jesus would be the same.

Vs. 6. SECOND TEMPTATION. Sinless element—confidence in God under all conditions; immediate recognition by the people as their Messiah, when born on angel's wings He miraculously landed in the midst of the Temple Courts. (Compare the taunt in Matt xxvii. 39-43). Sinful element—Presumption in putting God to the proof as to whether He would fulfil His promise, and asking God for any other evidence of His Messiahship than had been given in the voice from Heaven, and the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Satan quotes Scripture (Ps. xci. 11, 12) but he omits the saving words, "to keep thee in all thy ways:" when we go out of our proper way we have no claim upon the promise.

Vs. 7. Shalt not tempt. Misunderstood by many as being simply a rebuke to Satan for tempting Him. That would not have been a answer to the temptation. The word "tempt" here is used in the sense of a presumptuous putting to the proof, as seen from the context of Deut. vi. 16, compared with Ex. xvii. 7.

Vs. 8. Showeth him. Whether there was a bodily transfer to the mountains or not there was a supernatural agency in making the kingdoms of the earth and "the glory of them," pass before Him. It was Satan's last device—to which so many of the noblest of the earth had succumbed.

Vs. 9. THIRD TEMPTATION. Sinless element—to have the sovereignty of the world, the very object for which He had come, without the shame and the cross, Sinful element—to hold it as a fief from Satan, recognizing Him as its rightful lord, instead of casting Him out.

Vs. 10. Get thee hence, or Avaunt, Be gone. Hitherto he had simply parried Satan's strokes. Now he rises in the might of a conqueror and drives Him from the field. The difference is due to the fact that hitherto Satan had not proclaimed his personality, but had been disguised as a kindly-intentioned friend. This temptation unmasks him, and reveals him as the arch-enemy Jesus had come to conquer. In the other temptations Satan had sought to deceive; now he no longer conceals the evil but aims to overcome by the magnificence of the bribe. We may discuss with others questions of right and wrong of suggested actions, but when one seeks to corrupt our integrity, there should not be a moment's further fooling. There is but one word—a sorrowful, "Begone."

Thou shalt worship. Deut. vi. 13, but made more emphatic by inserting the substance of the first commandment, and of the O. T. generally, in the word "only."

Vs. 11. Then the devil leadeth him—as he always will when so unmasked, recognized and resisted (Jas. iv. 7) But we must remain on our guard; his departure is only "for a season" (Luke iv. 13).

Behold, angels came and ministered unto him. This was his crown of victory: (1) Trusting in God. He refuses to supply His own wants, and God sends and supplies them; (2) Refusing to tempt God by throwing Himself needlessly upon the interference of angels, God sends angels to minister to His real necessities; (3) Choosing God instead of the world, God sends Him an advance-guard of that host by which, if need be, He could conquer the world (Matt. xxvi. 53).

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson. We omit ours this week as our exposition is more extended than usual, and the outlines of a summary are sufficiently indicated.

Fifth Step. Study the topic of the lesson in the light of God's Word.

Christ tempted as the second Adam.

1. The necessity of the temptation, Rom. v. 19.
   (Note that obedience to be meritorious must be deliberate, the result of choice—implying temptation.)
2. The same tempter, Gen. iii. 1, compare Rev. xii. 9; John viii. 44.
3. Contrasting conditions:
   a. A garden and a wilderness, Gen. ii. 8, 9: Matt. iv. 1,
   b. Plenty and want, Gen. iii. 2; ii. 16; Matt. iv. 2.
4. The natural (and innocent) desires worked upon.
   a. Bodily appetite. "Good for food," Gen. iii. 6; "Be made bread, Matt. iv. 3.
   b. Aspiration for higher powers, "To be desired to make one wise, Gen. iii. 6; "Cast thyself down.... they shall bear thee up," Matt. iv. 6.
   c. Love for, and desire for possession of, this world. Adam was not deceived, 1 Tim. ii. 14; "The woman, whom thou gavest to be with me," Gen. iii. 12. In short Adam was tempted through love of his wife. "All these things," Matt. iv. 9; "And the glory of them," Luke iv. 6.
5. The sins to which tempted.
   a. Distrust of God, "Hath God said," Gen. iii 1; "If thou be the Son of God," Matt. iv. 3, 6, as God had said, iii. 17.
   b. Presumption. "Ye shall be as gods," Gen. iii. 5: supernatural powers, Matt. iv. 6. Note that the presumption to which Jesus was tempted was of a much more subtle kind, based (apparently) on God's promise, and not—as in the other case—on His untruthfulness
   c. Deliberate choice of a devil-ruled world instead of God. Adam had to choose between a wife who had become subject to Satan and God; Jesus had to choose between a world held as a fief from Satan and God. (See 4 c and note on vs. 9 in Third Step.
6. Each victorious so long as the appeal was made to God's word.
   Jesus throughout, "It is written," vss. 4, 7, 10. Eve to first temptation, Gen. iii. 2, 3. From 1 Tim. ii. 14 it is evident that Adam could have met the second, to which Eve succumbed, in the same way. Had he endured the third, and chosen God, we have no doubt that God would have given him a way to redeem his wife, even as Christ refusing the world redeemed it, the covenant being with him and not with Eve.

Sixth Step. Lay to heart the practical lessons:

1. When we are in the place God has put us we need never fear for the supply of our wants. Compare Matt. vi. 25-33.
2. We cannot claim God's promises where we have rashly thrust ourselves upon the need of them. We knew a drunkard once who said he never entered a saloon without praying to be kept from drinking! Yet he deliberately went into the saloon. Prov. iv. 14, 15.
3. To choose the world instead of God is always a bad bargain: (1) Because God alone is greater and better than all the world; (2) Because he who chooses God shall win the world at last (Matt. v. 5); (3) Because "what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" (Mark viii. 36).
4. The shield of faith quenches all the fiery darts of the wicked one, as they are powerless unless we doubt God. Eph. vi. 16.
5. The sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, is the only weapon needed to drive the enemy from the field, Eph. vi. 17.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

The Bible Reading this week in the Fifth Step is only suited to advanced scholars, but the numerous references in the Fourth and Sixth Steps will give abundant exercise to other scholars in searching the Scriptures, which should be the main work in teaching any lesson.

Resolutions of Respect.

WHEREAS, On the eighth day of July 1894, Almighty God was pleased to make the first vacancy in our class by removing from its number by death our beloved Brother, HUGH KERR PARKS, we, the fellow-members, of the class of '94 of Davidson College, desiring to place on record our love and respect for our departed classmate, do hereby Resolve 1st. That, while we bow in humble submission to the will of Him, who doeth all things well and for His own glory, yet we do mourn the loss of one who gave such bright promise for a life of usefulness in the ministry of the Son of God, and who had endeared himself to all our hearts by his quiet, gentle, consistent, exemplary, consecrated Christian life.

2d. That, in expressing our deep sorrow to the sorely bereaved ones, we would gladly bear testimony to his untiring fidelity and devotion to duty, whether in the class-room, on the campus, in our social life, or in our organizations for religious work.

3rd. That we will ever cherish his sacred memory, as that of one who, although cut down in the morning of life, has fought the good fight, who has kept the faith, and who has gone to his eternal reward on "that blessed shore, where friends ne'er say farewell," and there, just over the river, is waiting to welcome us, as we at last gather home one by one.

4th. That a copy of these resolutions be sent the family of the deceased, also that copies be sent the Davidson Monthly and NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN with request for publication.

Tribute of Respect.

The following resolutions were adopted at a meeting of the congregation at Stoney Creek church, July 22d, 1894.

WHEREAS, Our Heavenly Father in His most holy and wise providence has been pleased to take home our beloved pastor, Rev. JAMES LAUCHLIN CURRIE, therefore be it resolved by the congregation of Stoney Creek:

1. That we lost in his death a faithful, earnest pastor, in whom there was to be found charity, patience, faith and a gentleness born of true humility. He was honest in purpose, pure in mind and cheerful while performing his many duties.

2. That while we bow to the will of God, we shall ever cherish in memory his sermons pregnant with love and simple truth, his godly example, his earnest prayers, his unfailing kindness and gentleness.

3. That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to his sorrowing wife and sons, and pray that God who is Father to the fatherless and a Judge of the widow, will give them the blessed assurance that our much loved pastor has run with patience the race that was set before him, and that henceforth there is laid up for him a crown of joy that fadeth not away.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, one to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN for publication, and that they be preserved on the records of the church and Sunday-school.

THE SMILE OF GOD.

Oh smile of God, fair sunlight of our being,
Shine in this soul of mine!
Grant me that larger sight, sweet visions seeing,
Light from thy soul divine.

Oh smile of God, if o'er me darkness hovers,
The sun eclipsed in night,
Pierce through the gloom, which for a moment covers
This hungering for the light!

Oh smile of God, in thee no storm nor danger,
All dark forebodings cease!
Walking in thee, my soul, no more a stranger,
Finds light and home and peace.

—Rev. William Bryant.

My Boys.

School is over. Swift boyish footsteps dash up on the porch, and I hear the bell ring, as only my boy friends ring it. There is always a royal welcome waiting for them in my sanctum, and right well they know it, so up stairs they rush, full to overflowing with the day's doings. If I might be the center of some brilliant French salon, and draw about me the wisest and wittiest of a court, I would not change my guests. Coats, caps, and mittens strew the chairs, and the boys drop down upon the rug, sit upon the arms of my chair, or perch like Brownies upon the corners of my desk, while they all talk at once. All the cares that the day may have brought, all petty vexations, all heart-ache and disappointments vanish at the touch of those strong young arms, those half shy, and wholly tender boy caresses, and I am ineffably content as I look at them, and listen to their happy talk, my dear boys! My heart is their kingdom, and they know that they have absolute sway in it. Not for one instant do they question my sympathy in everything which interests them, and they lead me lovingly into that unattainable of places to most mortals—a boy's confidence. Looking into those clear earnest eyes, the veriest wells of delight to one who loves them as I do, I give myself up to an abandon of joy.

The ink dries upon the half written page, my books are pushed aside, but what matters it? If by my love, my interest, I can strengthen ever so little the strand of love that holds these boy hearts to my own is it not incomparably the grandest work in the world that can come to me? To-day they will let me into their hearts, they will give me a place in their love, and I may be honored with their confidence; to-morrow it might be too late, and if I should bid them wait until I had finished some other work first, it might be that upon bended knees I should sue in vain for what I may claim now, the influence which is love's right.

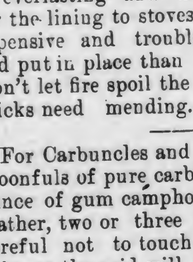
Just now their lives are so sheltered, so free from temptation, that it may be only to their happiness I minister when I throw open my heart and home to them, but to-morrow! Who can say what to-morrow will bring to even the most sheltered and beloved of all those precious boys. Temptations lurk everywhere for the impetuous young feet, and it may be that suddenly some dark form will spring up in some unsuspected place and strive for the mastery. Then if it shall be that my tried and trusted love will form ever so slight a strand in the twisted cord of good influences that shall draw back from sin, is there any honor in the world, any blessing which God could bestow upon me, for which I would have more reason to give him most humble thanks than this? They are so responsive to love and sympathy, these boy hearts! You can bind them to you so closely just now when they will give back love for love and confidence for confidence. But wait till this formative time is past; repel them now, frown at their noise, ignore their interests and their enthusiasms, make them feel that they are unwelcome and unloved, and all too surely the day will come when you can plead in vain for their trust and their affection. When you might have won them, those loving, loyal boy hearts, you pushed them away, and now you are too late with your prayers and your tears. They have closed their doors against you.

All through the day I have looked forward to this hour, when I should hear the eager foosteps, and have this hour with my boys. This friendship that might be yours, or yours, for the winning, is the very choicest of my possessions, and the inspiration, the help it is to me, can never be put into words. One can trust so completely to such a loyal friendship as a boy's friendship always is. There is nothing about it that is not genuine to the very core. One longs to live up to the measure of their belief in one, to be worthy of their chivalrous regard. Ah, me! to know that one is not worthy to be crowned with such blessedness only makes the gift the greater. The short winter afternoon draws all too soon to a close, and reluctantly the caps and coats are donned. I wonder whether the mothers themselves are as grateful as I am for the privilege of building the boys up in their ulsters, and hunting for missing mittens. At last they go, one lingering a little behind the others for a last loving word. He is a little older than the rest, and knows with the swift intuitions of a boy how lonely it is when the goodbyes have all been said, and a great quiet falls upon the house. If there be one dearer to me than another it is the one who tries to fill an empty place in my heart and life by added tenderness and thoughtfulness, and a sympathy that is none the less great because more often expressed in action than words.

They are all gone now, but I can see their faces yet, each one so dear yet so different. Eager and thoughtful, quiet and impetuous, loving and mischievously defiant, fair-headed, and with dark curls crowning the young faces, oh, I know each feature as well as if they were always before me. As the twilight draws down they melt together into a composite, and in place of the health flushed, merry faces, a fair, a radiantly fair childish face rises before me. A little face that is patient with the rare patience that one sees in little children that have borne uncomplainingly a heavy cross of pain and weariness, with blue eyes that speak volumes of trust and love, and a little mouth upon which I was wont to shower soft kisses. It is the face which glorified now makes all boyhood a sacred and holy thing to me, which makes any ministry to them inexpressibly full of love and tenderness. And as I look at it through tear filled eyes a halo glimmers about the fair curls, and it is even more than the little child I once bore in my arms upon whom I look. It is the Christ child, the boy Jesus, and a new reverence is added to my love for the boys whom I bear upon my heart. Is it not "In His Name," too, as well as in the name of my own tenderly beloved child that I lay my heart down before them, a highway upon which they can walk into the kingdom of the Divine love which is as much greater than mine as the heaven is higher than the earth? It is very quiet now, but I am not lonely, though alone. The motherhood that was lavished upon my one boy runs out toward all boyhood for his dear sake, and they give me back royally love for love. And as my heart overflows with gratitude I count among the chief of my blessings the friendship which is so much to me and which gives me far more than I am able to return.

Things Useful.

Powdered soapstone and salt in equal proportions, wet with water, will make an everlasting and fire-proof mending for the lining to stoves: it is much less expensive and troublesome to procure and put in place than new fire bricks. Don't let fire spoil the stove because the bricks need mending.



For Carbuncles and Boils.—Two teaspoonfuls of pure carbolic-acid and one ounce of gum camphor. Apply with a feather, two or three times daily, being careful not to touch the surrounding skin, as the acid will burn like a coal of fire. Carbolic acid is a poison; therefore, the bottle should be plainly labelled and kept out of the reach of children.

Lobster and Tomato Patties.—Chop the lobster, and season it highly with salt, cayenne pepper and lemon juice. Slice an equal quantity of fine, ripe tomatoes, and cut in dice, or chop them lightly, taking care not to bruise and crush them. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, and add a little sharp vinegar, Make the shells for the patties in the usual way, of rich pastry, and bake. Drain the tomatoes from the vinegar, mix with the lobster, and add as much thick, white stock as will bind them together nicely. Fill the shells and serve cold.

Carbuncles Large as Hen's Eggs!

Mrs. NANNIE GOULDMAN, of Beulahville, King William Co., Va., writes as follows:

"For about eight or ten years my father, Col. T. U. Fogg, of West Point, Va., was laid up with carbuncles, the worst that I ever saw. He tried everything he heard of, his doctor could do nothing for him. Had six or seven carbuncles at a time, as large as hen's eggs. He got so weak and suffered so much he could not walk a step. In 1872 he had his bed put in the middle of his room and got on it to die. No one expected him to get well. He saw Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery advised for all blood disorders. Before he had taken half-a-bottle of 'Discovery' they began to go away. Two bottles entirely cured him. He is now 78 years old, and enjoys good health."

THE CHRISTIAN'S

SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal

Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem a most superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"GOOD-MORNING."

"Good morning, world!" On the window-seat
She balanced her two little timid feet.

She clung with her dimpled hands, and stood
Framed in like a picture of babyhood.

The clambering vines hung low and green
'Round the sunniest curls that e'er were seen,

As she stood with beauty and light impearled.
And bade "Good morning!" to all the world.

"Good-morning, world!" and the great world heard;
Each rustling tree and each singing bird.

The dancing flowers and the fields of grass
Nodded and waved at the little lass;

And the far off hills and the sky overhead
Listened and beamed as the word was said;

And the old sun lifted his head and smiled—
"Good-morning, world!" "Good morning, child!"

Margery's Mistake.

By Robert P. Utter.

Margery was a little girl who lived in Washington not long ago, and this is what happened to her on the morning of her eighth birthday.

Margery was apt to be forgetful,—absent-minded, her mother called it; but her father said that her mind was not absent; it was just lazy, and she would have to make it keep at work. So her mother said to her that morning, as she started out to do an errand: "Now don't forget, Margery,—raisins, powdered sugar, and soap; and tell him to send them right up as soon as he can. And mail this letter, as you go by the corner, too," she added.

"Yes'm, I will: I won't forget, answered Margery; and she ran down to the gate, and went skipping down the street. She seemed as much a part of the bright May morning as any bird or butterfly, her mother thought, as she watched her a moment before closing the door and resuming her work.

Margery had the money for her purchases in a pretty little alligator-skin purse, which her Uncle Arthur had just given her that morning as a birthday present. She was glad of an opportunity of using it so soon, and held it tightly clasped in her hand, peeping at it occasionally, as she ran alon. She felt quite like a lady going shopping. Suddenly she thought, "I mustn't forget," and began repeating to herself, "Raisins, powdered sugar, and soap; raisins, powdered sugar and soap." Before long she came to the mail-box on the corner, and, still repeating her list, stood upon tiptoe to reach the cover. It was a long stretch for a little girl just eight years old; but she reached it at last, and then skipped along.

But, before she had gone ten steps, she stopped suddenly, and looked at her right hand; it still held the letter, and her left hand was empty. In her anxiety to remember her commissions, she had mailed her precious new purse!

Her lip quivered; and she turned quickly back to the mail-box, with big tears rolling down her cheeks. She gazed in despair at the placid, round padlock which guarded Uncle Sam's mail from the public. She could not even climb up and look in through the slot where her purse had disappeared. She sat down on a horse-block, and gave way to her tears.

Soon a huge policeman approached; and Margery plucked up sufficient courage to lay the case before him, and implore his aid in recovering the lost property. He pulled his mustache thoughtfully for a moment, then, telling her she "would have to wait for the collector," stalked majestically on.

Margery did not know who the collector was, or what good it would do her to wait for him; and so she extracted but small comfort from his reply, and her tears burst forth afresh.

The officer was hardly out of sight, however, before a man drew near, walking rapidly down the street. Margery would not have appealed to him of her own accord; but at the sight of her little tear-stained face, he stopped, and kindly inquired the cause of her grief.

Margery told him her troubles as well as she could between her sobs. "Well, well," he said: "that certainly is a pity. Let's see how long we would have to wait." He went to the box, and read from a little card on the side which Margery had not noticed, "Hours of collection, 9 a. m., 12 m., 2 and 4 p. m." He looked at his watch. "It it ten o'clock," he said: "We should have to wait two hours. You see," he explained, "every once and a while a postman comes around and opens the box, and take out the letters people put in. If we were there he would give us the purse."

Margery nodded; and her face brightened at the prospect of regaining her property even after waiting so long.

"Perhaps you had better run home now," he continued, "and come back here in time to catch him."

Margery looked doubtful.

"There!" exclaimed her friend, "there's a collector now! I'll catch him. And he started almost at a run toward a little blue cart, which had stopped at another mail-box a block away.

Margery saw him approach the postman and speak to him. Then the postman touched his cap; and both jumped into the little blue wagon, which came rapidly, toward her. When they came to where she stood, they both got out; and the postman produced a flat key on a brass chain. Margery watched him eagerly, her eyes dancing with delight.

He opened the box. Margery stood on tiptoe to look in; but her friend lifted her up, and there she saw her purse lying on top of some letters and papers. She reached in and seized it, and held it as though she never intended to let go again.

The postman locked the box, and, leaping into his cart, drove off, touching his cap again at the courteous "Thank you" of Margery's benefactor. Then he took her hand, and they went along toward the grocery. Margery felt as though she had known him all her life, and chatted freely, as she ran along by his side.

"He knew you, didn't he?" she said. "He came right away when you asked him, didn't he? I guess he wouldn't have come at all if I had asked him. Do you think he would? She talked very fast in her excitement.

When they reached the store, he part with her at the door, lifting his hat as though she were a lady. The grocer looked after him as he went up the street; and, as he took her order, he said—

"Do you know that gentleman?"

"No," answered Margery.

"That is the President."

Margery opened her blue eyes very wide, and ran home quickly. She did not think the President was just a man. Her mother met her at the door, and, seeing the letter still in her hand, exclaimed: "There, Margery! I was afriad you would forget something. You haven't mailed my letter.—Christian Register.

A Large Waist

Is not generally considered a necessary adjunct to the grace, beauty or symmetry of the womanly form. Within the body, however, is a great waste made necessary according to the condition of things—continually in process and requiring the perfect action of all bodily functions to absorb or dispel the refuse When there is irregularity or inaction, ladies who value a clean, pure, healthy body will take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—the only remedy for woman sold with a positive guarantee to right all her peculiar wrongs.

To those about to become mothers, it is a priceless boon, for it lessens the pains and perils of childbirth, shortens labor, promotes an abundant secretion of nourishment for the child and shortens the period of confinement.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure biliousness, constipation, sick headache, indigestion, or dyspepsia, and kindred diseases.

If you have black or tinted cambrics or muslins which you hesitate to trust to the laundress, give them a first dip yourself in water, into which you have stirred a teaspoonful of black pepper. This is also said to save grey and buff linens from spots when used in first-water.

One should yawn slowly, says the Delsartean, and with the best possible breathing, thus refreshing the muscles of head, throat, and, indeed, of the entire body. If not naturally disposed to yawning the following recipe may be of use: Droop the eyelids as if sleepy, at the same time rolling the eyeballs slightly upward, though without closing the eyes; repeat the movement some half dozen times, and you will find yourself beginning to yawn.

A Minister's Suffering.

Bunyan, Beaufort county, N C.,
June 27th, 1894.

Dear Sirs:—Your favor, asking a report of my experience with the Electropoise, reached me to-day; the 21st of June closed two year's service of the instrument in my family.

When I received it I was almost without hope, having suffered fifteen months with nervous prostration and a complication of ills that would seem unbearable if enumerated. Malarial poison, indigestion and overwork had made a wreck of me.

I wore it the night of the 21st, and next morning felt better, and in a few weeks went regularly to work, and have been able to continue without interruption, except some temporary illness, this two years.

My wife, who had been an invalid six years, is now better than at any time since the beginning of her trouble.

During the last two years I have treated all the ailments in my family and many of my friends, and have had no occasion to consult a physician. In most cases I have found it to act more promptly, and in all, more satisfactorily, than any other treatment I have ever known.

I have used it with success in rheumatism, indigestion, nervousness, Bright's disease, bladder trouble, and other ailments.

In intelligent hands I see no reason why it should not be used with perfect satisfaction in any family.

Yours truly,
(Rev.) FRANCIS JOYNER.

WANTED—A GOOD PERMANENT LOCATION FOR A SCHOOL OR COLLEGE.

A Presbyterian minister (wife and one child) thirty-seven years of age, with several years' experience in the school room, desires a good location (prosperous and healthful) for a school, or college, either male, or female, or for both sexes. Would undertake the school on his own responsibility, or under a Board of Trustees. The school building would have to be rent free, a good local patronage would be very desirable; and there would have to be the proper facilities for boarding pupils.

The school ought to open in September, or October.

The minister would prefer a location where he could serve a church, or churches.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Rev. James W. Rawlings, D. D., has purchased a half interest in the North Carolina Presbyterian, and upon October first will assume editorial management and control. The new arrangement will necessarily introduce changes; changes that we trust will make the paper more acceptable to the Presbyterian public and more worthy of patronage—and especially that will render it more serviceable in the work of the Master.

THE QUAILS.

When the manna was given to the children of Israel in the wilderness all the flesh necessary was sent with it. Long afterwards the mixed multitude which had been camp followers or sympathizers to a limited extent made the people murmur with desire for more flesh. It was not want that created this murmuring but a greed of gain, a craving of more than was necessary. Thus the generations of men are alike, complaining rarely at real want, but for want of more than is needful. The complaints we hear are far out of proportion to the few cases of abject poverty and conditions of real distress and suffering. Moses must have felt this, that the people were unreasonable, and may well have been unusually fretted as well as doubtful whether God would grant the request. His questioning, when there was a promise of the superabundance, whence God would give it, was not so much lack of faith in God's ability as wondering what means would be used. There was want of faith, but mixed with the sense that Israel did not really need what they asked.

"God gave them their request." He answered their prayer beyond their asking. This He always does to His believing children, "exceeding abundantly." He gives more and does better than we ask or know how to ask. He answers in kindness, though not always in kind, as we ask. Here, however, He gave in kind, though not in the result they expected. Great flocks of quails roosted and nested in North Africa. These then, as now, went northward in Asia to feed. Flying thus, in almost countless numbers God sent an east wind and drove them out of their course; about a cubit and a half above the ground, on both sides of the camp, so that each man gathered in immense quantities and dried them in the sand or cured them in the sun. It was a great miracle with natural elements.

The people acted as we do now. They had neglected the gratitude due for past mercies. They had cried selfishly for more than they needed as, we do now. When it was within reach they worked day and night to gather overmuch. So men do now. There are the promises of God for the future and all we need, but men will risk rest and health to seize and store superfluities, but fail to regard God and their obligation of worship and service.

The prayer of the people was answered, but as a chastening and correction of their greed and folly. God "gave them their request, but sent leanness into their souls."

The immediate effect was upon their bodies as the surfeit was nauseating and the curse of God rested upon them. They fell under a great plague and their souls were lean for want of faith in God and feeding on His word.

All this may teach us that God may and sometimes does answer our prayers when they are greedy and selfish, in such a way as to show His power and correct our folly. It is a blessing to us that he does not answer all the foolish and selfish prayers we offer, that He so often refuses to give us what we ask, but He sees not good for us. It ought to make us careful to seek His glory in all we ask and to make all our requests subject to His will for our good. If the penalty be leanness of soul in granting our requests we may well ask Him not to grant them.

Our requests are not limited to our formal prayers. They may be our purposes and plans of life which we demand of God selfishly in the way of His Providence. If our hearts are set on great wealth as a good in itself or any success as a satisfying portion and we pursue these, without gratitude to God and devotion to Him and without referring these to Him and submitting all to His approval and without seeking His guidance, He will grant our desires. He may let our plans and purposes prevail and send leanness into our souls. That is the explanation of much of the success of godless traffic and business of our day. Men may not know it, but selfishness and greed, gratified, harm the soul.

Our very prayers may be selfish, and yet may be answered only to mock us with leanness of soul. That mother, whose boy was dying as the doctors said, who closed the door and selfishly demanded that God must give her back her boy's life, and lived to have that boy the bane of her life, is not alone as witness that selfish plans and prayers may be answered with sorrow of soul.

LICENSURE AND ORDINATION.—A PARTING WORD.

I do not know of any one whom I would rather have on my side in a discussion than Dr. Daniel, but next to that pleasure is the one of having him as an opponent. His position is so clearly taken, his statement of an opponent's position is so fair, and his tone is withal so courteous, as to make a discussion a pleasure to his antagonist, and really profitable—to the cause of truth.

Dr. Daniel objects to my reply as not relevant. If that means that I did not follow the lines of battle he laid down, I plead guilty. But was I not following the illustrious example of my brother who based a fight on licensure and ordination upon an article on the length of Seminary term? In that state of affairs all that I could do was to throw up a few hasty earthworks around my original position—which, fortunately, were occupied by unexpected re-inforcements from Columbia and Cincinnati—and then go off to attack the enemy in his entrenchments. And that was the way I got so "far away from my first article"—following him! Face to face to the enemy, I saw that the Presbyterian could not possibly spare me columns enough to cover his whole line of battle, so my only resource was to concentrate all my strength in a charge upon his central position.

This I claim to have captured. He said licensure was in order to a call. I claimed that it was in order to probation. This he admits, but does not surrrender, but tries to stand his ground by throwing up an inner line. The sufficiency of the probation is "evinced by receiving from the churches a good report." I do not believe that position will stand. The Book says: Presbyteries shall license Probationers to preach the gospel, in order that, after sufficiently trying their gifts, and receiving from the churches a good report, they may, in due time, ordain them to the sacred office." Dr. Daniel makes the receiving a good report explanatory, or exegetical of the sufficency of the trial. On the other hand I claim that the Presbytery remains the judge of the sufficiency of the trial, and of the "due time," and that the report from the churches is only one of the elements upon which the Presbytery is to base its judgment.

In consequence of this we claim that the Presbytery may keep the Probationer on probation as long as in its judgment it is best, and may require of him such further study and preparation as it deems necessary. This being the position of the Probationer, there is no reason that men should not be licensed at an early stage in their studies and carry on the trial of their gifts pari passu with their preparation. When the Lord sent forth the Twelve saying, "As ye go, preach," their preparation was far from complete. They were ignorant of many things that our Sunday-school scholars would be ashamed not to know. But they could call on men to repent, and tell them that the kingdom of heaven was at hand, and they returned with joy, because the very devils were subject to them. Then Jesus tells them to come apart and rest awhile, and they have another lesson of the Master's presence and are ready to learn the higher lesson He was to teach them. That is precisely what we want.

But Dr. Daniel further objects to my answer as not sufficient. Now if I captured his central position, surely humanity would require that I give him an opportunity to surrender before raking his now vulnerable lines with grape and cannister. But while I did not attempt to refute in detail all the charges brought against the proposed plan, I did show, further, that these charges were all based upon a wrong conception of the position of the Probationer if the amendments should be adopted. The "three or six year's term" is the Pandora's box from which all these evils are to spring. But Dr. Daniel overlooks the fact that licensure is now unlimited, that men have actually been on our rolls as licentiates for thirty or forty years, and that the whole intent of this provision is to limit the term of licensure, so that deadwood will drop off of itself. At the same time it is intended to indicate the period within which one can reasonably be expected to be fitted for ordination, though giving the Presbyteries the option of extending it. The Presbytery's power over the Probationer meanwhile remains unchanged. He is not a creature, like a New York Prosecutor's Committee, that once created is beyond the will of his creator.

In another sense, however, I must admit that my answer was not "sufficient." It yet remains to set forth the many advantages of the proposed change. This I may do at some other time unless it shall meanwhile have been done by abler hand. But there is one argument that to many will be quite sufficient. Dr. Daniel was the acknowledged leader of the last Assembly. He led it wisely and well, and in his leadership we all as North Carolinians rejoiced. The fact that on this question all the force of his logic and influence could not carry the Assembly, is pretty conclusive evidence that the truth was on the other side.

THE INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY UNION.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Dear Friends:—Having been "on the run" I have found it almost impossible to give your readers a short article on the late International Missionary Union convention at Clifton Springs, N. Y., June 13–20.

The union was organized eleven years ago at a meeting on the Canada side of Niagara Falls. A call was made for all those who were or had been missionaries from any field and from all the Boards to meet together for prayer and conference. Only missionaries were to participate in the discussions, while all were cordially invited to attend. It was designed to give missionaries of different fields an opportunity to become acquainted with each other and exchange views and discuss problems connected with their work. The first meeting proved so delightful and profitable that the International Missionary Union was organized and another meeting was appointed the next year in the same place. For several succeeding years it was migratory, being held in such places as gave a cordial invitation for entertainment. But many disadvantages with some advantages attended that feature of it. The addresses of missionaries at home could not always be found and some could not always find the time and place of the next meeting. One year it was held at Clifton Springs Sanitarium, under Dr. Henry Foster. The meeting was so richly enjoyed by both host and guests and all the surroundings were so suitable that the invitation was given and accepted to make it the permanent place of meeting. One word for the sanitarium itself. The institution is a fitting monument of one of the grand Christian men of the Church. Dr. Foster bought or owned a piece of marshy land near some mineral springs, and put all his fortune it, converting it into a lovely park with buildings to accommodate nearly a thousand patients. When his own funds were exhausted he continued it on the George Muhler plan of faith and works with such aid as he could obtain till his magnificent buildings and equipments are nearing towards completion. The restful religious atmosphere is no less marked a feature in its plan and execution than the advantages it affords of relief to the maladies of the body. A chaplain and physicans are always on hand, daily religious services, and Bible readings are held, all kinds of baths are furnished and a delightful place of rest for the weary and sick in mind and body make it a home as well as a sanitarium. Its influence for good has been so patent and so potent that Dr. Foster after devoting his life to making it what it is, has now turned over the property worth half a million of dollars to a board of trustees to be perpetuated on the same plan for the public good after his decease. Of course it is not entirely a benevolent institution. Those who can pay are charged for room and board as at other mineral springs or sanitariums. But it has benevolent features peculiar to itself with probably a few others. It has become almost a home for returned overworked missionaries. Several members of our mission in Siam and Laos have found great improvement there, and one was enabled to return to his field contrary to all expectations of himself and others. I think too that favorable terms are always offered to ministers and others in straitened circumstances. So catholic is it in its terms and management that I am not certain what denomination Dr. Foster belongs to, though I believe he is a Methodist. The one hundred and sixty or seventy missionaries and other representatives of missionary societies were mainly the guests of Dr. Foster at the late meeting aided by a few in the village.

Now for the meeting itself. To say that it was by far the best, as it was the largest, gathering of missionaries that I ever attended is stating it very mildly. It was crowded from Wednesday night till the next Wednesday morning with three long daily sessions, the interest increasing and culminating in the last session when all those who were soon to return to their fields made short farewell addresses.

At the opening session our address of welcome was made by Dr. Foster with responses from Dr. Gracy the president and others. The roll was called by fields when each member reported his name in full, his church and board, his field of labor, length of service and the kind of work in which he was engaged, and any other facts he could compress into three minutes. And such a roll! There were representatives of various stations in India, Turkey, Persia, Bulgaria, Constantinople, Asia Minor and the Holy Land—from Burma and Assam—from all over China and Japan and Corea, from Africa and South America, Micronesia and other islands of the Pacific, from Mexico and the North American Indians as far up as Alasks and Hudson's Bay. Such veterans as Drs. Hamlin and Wood of over forty years of service, though now retired. Bishop Thorburn of the M. E. Church of India and Malaysia was there with his thrilling report of the wonderful ingathering of the low or non-caste people of India averaging over a thousand additions a month, and Bishop Chenney of the Protestant Episcopal Mission in Africa, always ready and always interesting—and Dr. Boggs from the Telugu Baptist Mission in India, in which on one day two thousand two hundred and twenty-two converts were baptized. Time would fail to give special mention of Drs. Ford, of Persia and House, of Bulgaria, and Gulick, of the Sandwich Islands. Probably one of the most characteristic names on the roll was that of Dr. Young, for over thirty years working among the Hudson Bay Indians, where he makes his mission tours not on elephants as we do in Laosland, but on sledges drawn by dogs. Probably no other man has had such an experience and he has witnessed wonderful triumphs of the gospel. I have forgotten the title of his books one of which something like "Drawn by my Dog," I have reserved for reading on the voyage from England, his thrilling adventures told as but few others could. He is one of those men who on his visits to England can fill Exeter Hall. A man of apostolic spirit, comical enough for a stage and brimfull of wit, swaying his audience to laughter or tears.

Dr. Boggs, told an episode of ours that occurred in 1874. He was sent out with some idea of working among the Siamese Karens. The way not being open he with two associates crossed overland from Bankok to Burma. They were stopping at Rahang, the border town between Siam and Laos. One Saturday evening he saw a boat with foreigners coming up which stopped near his. It proved to be myself and family returning from our first visit to the United States. We spent a delightful Sabbath together and in the afternoon had a real union prayer-meeting on a sand-bar, in which hymns were sung and prayer offered in four languages. English and Koren, Siamesy and Laos. Next morning we separated, they to Burma and thence to the Telugu Mission in India to see such wonderful results and we, to our less prolific but highly favored work among the Laos. Dr. Graybill a Virginian was a good representative of the Southern Presbyterian Church from Mexico, and by a kind of natural chemical affinity we became room-mates, and the same or some other attraction, gave us the delightful association at the same table of the Misses Houston visiting members from Virginia. Though not foreign missionaries they were daughters, or grand daughters, or nieces of missionaries and deeply interested in all the proceedings. If I had been otherwise ignorant of the fact I would have seen from the roll that I was no longer a boy, as I believe the departure of only one or two of the members now on the field dated back before 1858, that Dr. Hamlin, in his able paper on Russia and Turkey designated as the annus mirabilis in modern diplomacy and events of historic importance. They were kind enough and sufficiently interested in our dear little Laos Mission to allow a double portion of time to its recital, dividing an hour between it and Bishop Thorburn's work in India instead of the usual ten minutes addresses; a compliment to the work that was highly appreciated.

Of course a prominent feature of the Convention was its catholicity. Although eleven boards and several self-supporting independent missions were represented, one never thought of asking what denomination a speaker belonged to, and almost forgot whether he himself belonged to any particular church. The work and not the regimental flag were the all important thing.

Closely connected with its catholicity were the breadth and scope of vision presented. Papers were read, results stated, difficulties and obstacles enumerated and missionary problems discussed too numerous to mention in a single letter. Schools and colleges had their representatives and able ones. Medical missionaries showed the grand share that the healing art has in the great warfare against human maladies of soul and body. Representatives of the work among stronger Aryan races—and the Japanese as well as of the pioneer and school work among cannibals and rude tribes. And it was wonderful to find how the work in the one class illustrated and found counterparts in the other, and above all to see that while all alike need the gospel, it has in all alike proved the power of God and the wisdom of God unto salvation. Leaving to the reader to draw interesting inferences from such a meeting, I must refer to one other item. On one afternoon and that not the least interesting the new men took the back seats and the ladies had it all their own way. And only those who have never attended a meeting of one of our Woman's Boards of Missions need be informed that in the management of such a meeting they are the peers of the men, and if any one is skeptical as to the propriety of their meeting, let the work they are doing in the cause and the results speak for themselves. If still skeptical—go and attend the next annual meeting in Clifton Springs next June, and then state your convictions. And I can think of nothing better calculated to awaken an enthusiasm on the subject of the world's conversion than for our pastors and laymen, men and women to attend those annual conventions. The missionary meetings of one of our General Assemblies or annual conferences or associations North or South, cannot be compared with them. When you have heard reports of the work of 38 laborers of the A. B. C. F. M. 34 of the M. E., 33 of the Presbyterian boards and twenty or more of the Baptist bands and societies, not to mention smaller ones you return with the greater interest and inspiration to your own individual work, and it is just such broad views that the Church needs. One thing was noteworthy, there was no pessimistic note struck during the meeting. The keynote of hope and triumph touched the first evening, was more than sustained till the closing farewell meeting. Many who from age and providential hindrances are prevented from returning expressed regret, but never a man or a woman showed aught but joy at the thought of returning to his field and his people and his work.

Our own faces are again turned homeward, as we are nearing the Irish and English shores where the first stage of our journey will end. The winds and the waves have so far been favorable. We sailed on the Umbria from New York on the 7th. It is a little world of life with its 570 first-class passengers with second-class officers and crew nearly as many more. We have probably never been so long a time, so near to so many human beings. One organized party of 150 on a European tour and another of fifty, business and professional men running from the strain of a year's work in an age where people live so fast, pleasure-seekers and health-seekers and rest-seekers all huddled together for a few days and then to separate. Ministers who have left their charges—other professional and business men their offices, and school-teachers their schools, are all as eagerly looking forward to a pleasant summer; one other, an able missionary physician from near Tarsus and Mt. Lebanon, is returning to his work of thirty years. Pray for us all—for we all alike need the Church's prayers.

Sincerely yours,

D. McGilvary.

LOVE AND THE MASTER.

Love, he led the Master
In a garden lone,
Where the darkness shadowed him
With its grief and moan.
And Oh, for him—the Master—
Within that garden drear!
The keen thorns climbed and kissed his lips
And left the crimson there!

Love, he led the Master
From that garden dim,
And with the thorns, in mockery,
Wreathed round the brow of Him.
And Oh, for him—the Master—
That Love should kiss and kill,
And carve Him there a cross to bear
Alone to Calvary hill!

Love, he led the Master
From the midnight gloom,
O'er the wild and wounding thorns—
Made the lilies bloom.
And Oh, for him—the Master—
For garden, cross and hill!
The hands that scourged Him He hath kissed,
And lives to love them still!

POPULAR TALKS ON LAW.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE.

Property Rights of Married Women.

At common law, generally, all contracts, agreements, conveyances, promises, and representations of married women were absolutely null and void at law and in equity. The theory was that a married woman had no legal existence, her existence in law being merged in that of her husband. She was presumed to be under the power and control of her husband and to have no consenting capacity.

In modern times in our American States married women are unable to contract at all, unless the statutes of the State within which she lives expressly permit her to do so. Before examining into the statutes of the various States, however, we should say that, even at common law, there were certain exceptions to the rule that a married woman could not make a contract. These exceptions were where the husband was an alien residing abroad, or where he had been banished, or had abjured the realm, or was civilly dead.

Under the statutes of the various States of the American Union, property owned by a woman at marriage remains hers after marriage. We believe this to be the rule in every State. There is some difference, however, in the statutes in the matter of property acquired by the wife during marriage. Some States go so far as to say that all property acquired by a woman during marriage, including that which she earns, is her own property. The States holding this are: Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Indiah Territory, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

There are other States that are willing to give to a married woman all property acquired by her during marriage, excepting that which comes from her husband. In other words, all property acquired after marriage by the woman from any source other than the husband is her own property. Colorado and West Virginia so hold.

The District of Columbia and Michigan give to a married woman all property she acquires during marriage except her earnings.

Some States, as Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, and Washington give to a married woman all the property she has received by gift, will or inheritance during her marriage and only such; while Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico Texas and Washington give to the husband and wife what is called community property, that is, all such property as is acquired by them during marriage which does not come by gift, will or inheritance, and is not the increase of or the income from such property, or from property owned at marriage. Community property is owned jointly by them and is subject to the husband's control.

The law of most of the States allows a married woman to make a contract as freely as if she were unmarried. Such is the case in all States, excepting Alabama, District of Columbia, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, New Jersey, Indiana, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

In New Jersey, and Wisconsin she can act in the making of contracts as an unmarried woman, except that she cannot become a surety.

In Minnesota she can act as a single woman except that her husband must join in all contracts that she makes regarding land; and in Indiana she can make a contract as if a single woman except that she cannot become surety, and her husbrand must join in her land contracts.

In the following States a married woman may make contracts concerning her separate property as if a single woman: District of Columbia, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas and Nevada. This is so also in Georgia, Kentucky, Michigan, South Carolina, West Virginia, except that she cannot make such property liable for her husband's debts.

In Alabama and Missouri a married woman can make a contract if her husband consents to it.

In Louisiana a married woman cannot make a contract which puts her under obligation for her husband's debts, nor can she enter into an agreement at all without his consent.

In Maryland a married women may bind her separate estate, but the contract must show upon its face some evidence of the intent to charge the estate, or there must be evidence outside of the contract tending to prove such intent.

In Idaho a married woman may become a sole trader by a decree of the District Court.

In Nevada she may transact business as a single woman after she is declared a sole trader by order of the court. In this State as above pointed out she may make contracts as a single woman binding her own separate property, real and personal, without the consent of her husband.

PRESBYTERIAN SABBATH SCHOOL INSTITUTE, GASTON COUNTY, N. C.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The Presbyterian Ministers' Association of Gaston county, (composed of the ministers residing in and laboring in that county) held their first Sabbath-school Institute at Olney church (one of Rev. Geo. A. Sparrow's) on Thursday, Friday and Saturday before the fifth Sabbath in July. So far as can be gathered from prevailing opinion and results, it was a complete success and thinking some accounts of it with proceedings, topics, discussed, &c., might be of interest to your readers, and possibly of use to some other county looking forward to the same thing, we send you this. The Presbyterian churches in Gaston county are as follows with the ministers serving them:

Castanea Grove, Rev. J. J. Kennedy; Goshen, Stanley Creek, and Dallas, Rev. R. Z. Johnston; Belmont, New Hope, Lowell, Rev. R. A. Miller; Union and Olney, Rev. Geo. A. Sparrow; Gastonia, Rev. R. P. Smith; Hephzibah, King's Mountain, Long Creek, Rev. R. J. McIlwain; Cherryville, Rev. W. P. McCorkle; Mount Holly, Rev. W. C. C. Foster.

There were present as delegates from these, Ministers Rev. R. P. Smith, R. A. Miller, J. J. Kennedy, R. Z. Johnston, R. J. McIlwain, with a quite a number of superintendents, teachers, elders, &c., from the different schools.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. R. Z. Johnston from Judges 11: 29, "Then the Spirit of the Lord came upon Jephtha." After this the Institute was organized with Rev. R. P. Smith, chairman or moderator, and Elder W. I. Stone, Kings Mountain, and Prof. W. L. Campbell, of Gastonia, secretaries, and then an address of welcome was delivered by the pastor, Rev. G. A. Sparrow, responded to by Revs. Kennedy and Johnston, after which the Institute settled down to work. We do not wish to take up your space (so valuable) nor try the patience of your readers with a detailed statement of the proceedings, and yet in the interest of our Presbyterian schools we feel constrained to give at least an outline. And first a few words about the church itself. It is located three miles from Gastonia on the Narrow Gauge railroad, being only about one hundred and fifty yards from it. A large frame building in a beautiful grove with a cemetery as large perhaps as that of any other in the State of its numbers, &c.

The organization is something over one hundred years old, the first pastorate being one hundred and four years ago. In that time fourteen ministers only have served it, and but comparatively a small portion of this time has it been without one. It has eight elders, a proportionate board of deacons and about one hundred and seventy-five effectve members. The iuside of the church was tastily decorated with flowers, cut and growing, while over the pulpit was in floral letters the Scripture, "The children of thy elect sister greet thee." Sermons were preached by Rev. R. Z. Johnston, R. J. McIlwain and Mr. W. L. Lingle, a candidate for the ministry, who has been for some months doing effective work in the county as a general evangelist, preaching in the destitute and waste places. During the three days many questions were discussed on the program and taken from the question box which was a prominent and interesting feature. We give some of them:

1. The Object and Purposes of the Institute and How to Make it a Success. Miller and Smith.

2. The Relation Sunday-schools Sustain to the Church and the Duties of the Pastor and Session under this Relation. Kennedy, Lingle, Sparrow and Johnston.

3. The Qualifications Necessary to Make a Success for Sunday-school Teacher. Lingle and Miller.

4. Should any One not a Professing Christian Teach in the Sunday-school?

5. Should a Sunday-school Teacher Visit the Pupils of his or her Class when Sick?

6. Should the Spelling Book be used in the Sunday-school?

7. Is it not Reasonable that Elders Attend and Teach in Sunday-school?

8. Should we say Sunday-school or Sabbath-school?

9. How Should Teachers be Elected? By the session.

10. The scope of a Superintendent's duties and how he can make the Sabbath-school exercises interesting?

11. How to meet and overcome the difficulties in maintaining a county Sabbath-school?

These are only some of the questions discussed and will give some idea of the work done by the Convention. A committee having been appointed to draft a Constitution and By-Laws, they recommended the assistance of an Executive Committee of seven, two ministers and three elders or Superintendent of Sabbath-schools "into whose hands all things pertaining to the institute be committed. Committee: Revs. Sparrow, Smith; Elders: Henderson, Dixon, Dameron. The different Sabbath-schools in the county sent in reports on blanks furnished them, The number of Sabbath-schools 11, number of pupils 718, number of teachers 80, and of these 36 were male, female 44; all meet weekly. All are kept up during the winter months; four have Sabbath-school libraries aggregating 318 books. This last does not include two mission schools one of Gastonia church, one of Olney.

A resolution of thanks was adopted and the Convention adjourned. The Sabbath was communion and Rev. R. Z. Johnston remained over and assisted the pastor. Each day a bounteous repast was spread under the trees and every one was satisfied.

It was truly a delightful occasion and one that will long be remembered in Olney church. All of us were drawn closer together, and the delegates went back to their respective charges filled with new zeal and new ideas for the Sabbath-school work. If it works everywhere as it did here, then we advise every county to have a Sabbath-school Institute. Should any information be desired as to the Institute or the Ministers' Association, parties can correspond with Rev. Geo. A. Sparrow, Secretary Association, Gastonia, Gaston county, N. C., who will be glad to give them any in his power. It is distinct and separate from the International and others because distinctly Presbyterian.

Aunt Hannah's Speech at the Missionary Meeting.

When I heard they had put me down for a missionary speech I told Moses I couldn't do it.

"Oh, yes, you can," said he, "just tell them about little Nell and the shoe."

"But I can't get to the meeting," said I; "this weather is too bad for my rheumatism."

"Now don't go to looking on the gloomy side of things," said Moses. "It will be brighter again before long. It is more pleasant after such dull weather."

That is Moses' way of looking at things. Sometimes when he lies down at night with every bone in his body aching, he says he can wait for his resting time a bit, knowing for certain its coming.

"But, Moses," says I, "I'm not gifted in speech, and maybe I'll make a blunder. If I could only talk like sister Bowers, I shouldn't mind it at all. And there is Aunt Hannah Coeymans possesses such a gift she can hold a whole meeting house full of people."

"Just do your best," said Moses. "That's all the Lord will expect of you. He don't hold you responsible for other folks' talents."

I don't know that I could do better than tell you about little Nell. It's five years come next fall since she died. She was my daughter Elizabeth's child, and she had a good many others, and her husband was sort of shiftless, and they felt glad to have Nell live with Moses and me. She was a fair child to see, and full of the missionary spirit. She used to gather berries and wild flowers to sell, and instead of spending the money as would seem childlike, she put it in a little box the Sabbath-school teacher gave her. And she wasn't satisfied with this, either. She used to beg Moses and me to give something. I wasn't even a church member then, and I couldn't see the necessity of giving the little money I had. Moses hadn't much faith in giving, either. Fact is, he hadn't much to give. With little Nell to feed and dress we had to economize in more ways than one. Moses loved the child that much he gave up his tobacco and took to chewing a button instead. I turned my old black dress and darned the holes, but I couldn't make it look like new. Still little Nell thought we ought to give something for missionary work.

Moses worked on the railroad, and Nell was such a steady little creature I used to let her go off nights to meet him. Well, one night I had supper on the table and Moses didn't come, and, Nell didn't come, so I went down to the gate to watch. Then I saw an old man carrying something in his arms and I cried, "Is that you, Moses?" He didn't answer, I reckon he couldn't, his voice was that husky. But the next instant I saw it was Moses and little Nell.

The express train had run over the child and cut off one foot. She grew tired of watching for Moses and ventured too far to meet him. We laid her on her little bed, and when Moses began to weep, she said:

"It's all right, grandpa, don't cry."

She was never very strong and like a sweet flower, she began to fade away. As we went about our work she would follow us with her eyes smiling as natural as could be. One day she called Moses to the bed, I was already there, and said:

"Now, grandpa, you can do something for the missionaries. You know I won't need but one shoe now!"

Moses burst into tears, to hear the little creature talk so. But she put her arms tight about his neck and whispered:

"You'll give the missionaries the price of the other shoe, won't you, grandpa?"

Moses said he would and took her up and began to walk the floor with her. I guess he thought she was nearly ready to enter the golden gate, where the starry crown awaited her. Well, one evening at sunset, Moses had just come in from work, Nell called us to her and said:

"I guess the missionaries can have the price of both shoes, grandpa."

At first I didn't know what she meant, but Moses did, such a scared look came into his face. She smiled as natural as could be and cried:

"It's all right, he's coming," and then the little thing was gone.

Then Moses turned comforter and said she had gone where she would have better company and be cared for. But it seemed at first I couldn't bear the cross. Then I took down her missionary box. The dear child had saved fifty-six cents. That meant a good deal to little Nell, more than to most children, for we never had any to give her. Moses dropped in fifty cents, the price of the first shoe, and began to look about to see what I could give.

Its only when we get in earnest that the opportunity comes. The apple tree in the corner of the yard was full of fruit, but they took to dropping off wormy at the core, Moses said. It struck me might take the best of them and dry them for market. Of course I didn't realize much, but I felt a sight happier for doing it. Then Moses would drop in the price of another shoe and sometimes that of a little dress and apron. By and by his clothes got so threadbare I began to suspect he was dropping in the price of them, too.

"It don't matter about this world's goods," he said, "if we've only got hold on him."

So Moses would talk; there was no shadow of doubt in his mind.

"We were poor, wandering sheep," he said, "and the Lord sent a little child to lead us into the fold."

You don't wonder we feel an interest in missionary work, do you? If only when this life over we can hear the welcome, "Well done! Enter into the joy of thy Lord."—Sallie V. Du Bois, in the Young Christian.

NORTH WILKESBORO.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Colored Presbyterian church at North Wilkesboro—I cordially enclose the following circular from Rev. S. G. Walker, a colored member of the Synod of North Carolina. Mr. Walker is laboring in the Presbytery of Orange—but in the providence of God, here is the most urgent call for funds to aid the colored evangelistic work in the bounds of our Synod. Let us help him promptly and generously. I am confident that he is an earnest and useful minister, and is heartily working for the Master's service. Let us respond without regard to Presbyterial boundaries, and give him immediate assistance.

W. D. MORTTON,
Chm. Com. Col. Evangelization of Synod of North Carolina.

DEAR FRIENDS:—You will please pardon me for presenting to you a matter of so much importance on a printed circular letter, as such generally fails to command the attention of its readers.

But now is a time for recognizing and practicing the principles and rules of economy.

Never in the history of my ministry was there a time, when the finger of the Master pointed to fields ripe for harvest and offering a more glorious reward to reapers than at present.

A sense of duty and responsibility forbids my ignoring these Macedonian cries, or treating their cause with indifference. So with thankfulness of heart and with praise ever upon my lips to the Divine Master for his care and guidance in the construction of our new church edifice at Danbury, which is now nearing completion, we hasten to answer the urgent call of the Master to work at North Wilkesboro where we have already secured a good building site and more than three-fourths of the building material needed.

More than sixty persons are directly interested and will worship in this church edifice when completed while more than seventy-five per cent of the above number are young folks whose future lives will bear the impress of Presbyterian training. We have a Sabbath-school numbering above forty scholars in regular attendance. There are now ten or twelve persons professing religion who will join in a church organization whenever the way is clear. The parties interested in the enterprise are mostly farmers who own their homes and are raising and training their children to work upon the farms. The building proposed will be for church and school purposes when completed; the indications point to the attendance of more than one hundred students for the first term. Now what we want is that the friends of the Master's cause give us the means to pay the carpenters and purchase other necessaries for completing the building. It is believed that one hundred and fifty dollars will put us in the house for services. This we hope to do before October the 1st, 1894, that we may open our first term of school about that date. To do this I rely upon my friends and the friends of my cause promptly responding to this appeal. Monies may be sent to Rev. C. W. Robinson, Winston, N. C. (Agent for colored work.) With thanks for past favors and fervent prayers for an increased zeal and interest in my work for the Master.

I am yours for His cause,
S. G. WALKER.

The Rising Generation.

BY MRS. M. E. SANGSTER.

The rising generation! It is an object of unfailing interest to the two generations which immediately precede and exist cotemporarily with it, and for it. To the generation which stands to the rising one, in direct order of parenthood, it is, of course, the most important thing on earth. To the second generation back of it, its grandparents and the greatest admirers of its marvellous developments, the rising generation is an object of pride and complacency.

In other words, the children, God bless them, occupy the largest share of the world's attention. For them, men toil unceasingly, live self-denyingly, hope continually. Homes centre about the children. Fathers and mothers have one end in view, one supreme end, and that is the bringing up of their children to take their places, honorably and successfully, when they have finished their course and gone higher.

All the vast machinery of our school systems, public and private, our academies and colleges, and our various professional institutions, has been called into operation and is kept at work for the benefit of the rising generation. To train these boys and girls so that they may make the most of themselves and of their opportunities, is held to be the sacred obligation of the State, as well as of every individual.

It goes without saying that every rising generation in its turn is the victim of blunders, and suffers more or less from the misplaced indulgence, or the needless rigidity of those who are responsible for its growth and its instruction.

Looking over the wide field of the world one's heart aches at the misery, oppression and suffering which little children and young people are forced to endure. Child labor in factories, child labor in tenements, where little ones of tender years are forced, too early, to undertake tasks beyond their strength, child slavery, as practiced virtually by those who make money from the gifts and accomplishments of children; these make a sum of agony which cries to heaven for relief and for vengeance.

Apart from special forms of bondage and hard work which come on helpless children through the poverty or the greed of the men and women who control it, a great deal of needless tronble is the portion of children because grown up people do not understand them. Accusations, for example, of falsehood are brought unjustly upon sensitive little hearts because of the difference of vocabulary. Imagination is very vivid in the case of children, and their statements are colored by their own fancies, when no untruth is intended. Along comes a big well-meaning blunderer of a father or mother, who, by a cruel doubt, gives the child its first knowledge that there are lies in the world. Few adults remember the passionate joy, the intense pain, the Eden brightness, the occasional woe, which were their portion in childhood. And so, they are harsh when they ought to be forbearing, punish when to punish is a crime against the defenceless, and plume themselves on their discipline when they ought to bemoan their own stupidity in sackcloth.

On the other hand, the rising generation is often endangered by too great liberty. The sons of the very rich, or of the moderately well-to-do, are given too much money to spend, and too little responsibility is laid upon them. The blessedness of work, in the right degree, cannot be overestimated, and some parents, having borne the burden in their own day, are foolishly ready to spare their children every trial. Such parents might take lessons from our little neighbors, the birds. These "little brothers of the air" coddle their baby broods, wait on them from morning until night, feed them incessantly, hover over and defend them, but when the time comes for them to fly who so relentless as the father bird, who so resolved as the mother? They appear to know that the younglings must try their own strength, and they insist on their doing so, even it the baby birds fall and are hurt.

The rising generation has a right to the most positive Christian training which it can receive. Perhaps the great fault and the weakest point of our education in this country and at this period, is a deficiency at this vital place. We cram with tidbits of science, with facts and dates and syntax and etymology, but we forget that with their mother's milk, children should be indoctrinated in honesty, in purity, and in the fear of God. Whatever else may be left in abeyance, it is unsafe and insane to leave the question of a religious education to accident. Children should be taught to observe the Sabbath, to obey God's law, to read the Bible, to look up in every circumstance to One who is a strong habitation for the righteous.

This is the best inheritance to which the rising generation can attain.—Christian Intelligencer.

Worshiping an Unknown God.

An apostle in one of his evangelistic tours discovered an altar with the inscription, "To the unknown God. To others who professed to be quite religious it was said by one who knew, "Ye know not what ye worship." Earlier it was said of some, "They feared the Lord and worshiped their own gods." They feared the God of Israel on account of the judgments that had been visited upon them for their sins, and worshiped their own gods from love in gratification of their sinful desires. They realized not the nature of the God that received the devoted affections of their hearts.

This is true of multitudes even in nominal Christian countries. They know not what they worship. Man is called a religious being, because in every grade of being from the highest to the most degraded, he is inclined to have some object to which he is disposed to yield service, and devote the affections of his heart. The whole intellectual, moral and spiritual being is moulded into conformity with this idol.

Much that is called worship in Christian lands is a mere pleasurable emotion with vague and incoherent ideas, that pass away, with the liturgical forms and sound in which the service is rendered, leaving no lasting impressions upon the mind or heart. It may satisfy the conscience as a kind of meritorious service in the midst of a worldly and godless life, but brings forth no fruits of righteousness. True worship is rendered in spirit and in truth, where the heart believeth unto righteousness. The fruits of it are seen in lives of devoted fidelity to Christian principles in the line of honoring God and in being a blessing to mankind. The spectacular forms may be many, attractive and imposing, but God abhors the sacrifice where not the heart is found. In true worship there is a felt vital communion and union with God in the name and by the merit of Christ.

The Lily Life.

Let your life be like the water-lily, all white and pure, with a golden crown of love right in its centre. See how its gentle loveliness riseth above all those leaves of profession that encircle it. Those leaves, O gaze on them, see how verdant they are, whilst the underside is a deep red O let us be like that; fair to the eyes of man, fresh and bright and vernal, but in those hidden parts stained with Golgotha's blood, let the dye of Christ's veins be engraved in us as well as on the surface. And above it all, lo, there shall arise one lily life, as holy as Christ is holy, as lowly as Christ is lowly. And out of that glorious golden heart the breeze wafts the exquisite perfume of a summer life over the slime and the river mud from which it has risen by power divine. The scent is floating down the stream, it mingles with wild thyme and banks of mint till it grasps the hands with the odors of the honeysuckle that clusters around the cottage window where the siek child breathes feebly. Or the lily scent rising from the stream perfumes the dull feathers of the flitting swallow's wings, as she skims away to her muddy nest in that cottage thatch. And the bee that sucks the wealth of love from this floweret storeth it near that swallow's nest Whilst the flower unconscious of its purity, its grace, its inexpressible love and self-denial sits in the waters at God's feet. He pours into its open head all the blaze of heaven's sunshine. It smiles at him. He bathes it with night dews. It sparkles with tears in the morning sun. It gazes heavenward amid his thunders, his midnight lightnings gild it with electric glory. Bruised, battered with the storms of dying autumn, it sinks into its grave, the clay from which it sprang, having lived for God. "He bade it grow, he laid it low, wherefore we do not know."

But in the Eternal Spring he shall lift it with his Divine hand, and gently place it on quiet pools of the Water of Life to float and to blossom for ever—where the surges cease to roll.—Religious Herald.

FANCY GAP, VA.

This is a quiet restful resort on the top of the Blue Ridge, only 16 miles from Mt. Airy, and reached from that place easily by means of hacks which are always in waiting at the trains. The air is pure and bracing, the water delightfully cool and the fare is plentiful and of the nerve-strengthening, health-upbuilding sort. The scenery, while climbing the mountains to reach Mitchell's, is inexpressibly grand, and there are delightful prospects from mountain peaks in the vicinify.

Owing to the hard times the prices this season will be one dollar per day for transient boarders, $5 dollars per week, or $16 per month. Special rates to families.

EDUCATIONAL.

AGNES SCOTT INSTITUTE.

ONE OF THE SOUTH'S MOST POPULAR SCHOOLS.

THE WORK IT IS DOING.

The next session of this noted Presbyterian boarding and day school for young ladies, commences on September 5th, next.

Already applications for catalogues are being received and the promise is of another prosperous year.

The past year has been one of widespread financial depression, but notwithstanding this fact, the Institute has had a prosperous year.

No school in the South has enjoyed more constant and brilliant success than the Agnes Scott, and the causes of this success are evident:

1. Its location in North Georgia is unrivaled; the local surroundings are ideal, Decatur having long been noted for its refined, educated and religious society.

2. A large and accomplished corps of trained and experienced teachers, each member of the faculty having been selected for his or her character and special qualifications for the chair occupied.

3. Thorough work. The utmost effort is made to do thorough teaching, and no careless or antiquated methods are used. None of the officers or teachers have any financial interest in the management of the Institute, and each teacher is able to give her or his entire time and undivided and disinterested attention to the work of instructing. Pupils not making satisfactory progress or not improving their time are not allowed to waste the money of parents by further attendance.

The curriculum is already high. It is rigidly pursued and is being steadily advanced as the school grows in years. It is the desire and aim of trustees and faculty to place the Agnes Scott as the leader in elevating the standard of female education in the South.

The special departments, as music and art, are well equipped and under charge of skilled specialists, are fully abreast of the times and the best schools.

4. The low scale of fees, these having been fixed, not with the view of money making, but simply to cover current expenses, repairs and equipment.

5. The superb buildings were constructed especially for school purposes after the best approved plans. They are all of brick, heated by steam, lighted by electricity, scientifically ventilated and supplied throughout with hot and cold water and fire hose.

Applications for catalogues, general information etc. Should be addressed to FOREIGN MISSION RECEIPTS FOR JULY.

It is with anxiety and sorrow of heart that we send out the report of our receipts for the month of July, $8,195.34; a decrease as compared with the receipts of July 1893, of $4,148.49. This also changes the balance in our favor for the year of $1,318.41 reported last month, to a balance against us of $2,830.08.

There are various ways in which this deplorable fact might be accounted for. For instance, there are three whole Presbyteries from which we have as yet received nothing from the May collection. If the Treasurers of these Presbyteries had been heard from as they should have been, the record might have been different. But after the fact has been accounted for it remains none the less a fact, and none the less deplorable. This is all we have to say on the subject at present.

Zion :—Rev. H. D. Lequeux, of Poplar Tent was with us, preaching every day. We received during the meeting nine young people into the church—all of them children of the covenant. Rev. R. V. Lancaster, pastor.

Elk Park Church :—Rev. R. P. Pell writes 30th ult.: We have recently had a meeting at Elk Park. Bro. Gales again preached with great faithfulness and power. We cannot speak too highly of the labors of this deeply consecrated brother. There were over thirty professions of faith and reclamations. Nine have already united with us, and many will join the Methodist and Baptist churches. We have also received five more members on profession of faith at Spruce Pine.

Alton, Mecklenburg Presbytery :—A very interesting and profitable meeting has just been closed at Alton, Union county. This is quite a recent organization, only about a year old, and is under the charge of the Evangelist of Mecklenburg Presbytery. The Northern Presbyterian Church support a school there, under the management of Miss Eva Hotchkiss. From a community of extreme lawlessness, it has been transformed into one of culture and progress; both mental and spiritual, in a few short years.

Rev R. C. Morrison, came to the help of the Evangelist, commencing services July 27th and continuing for six days. God blessed the work of His servants. Sixteen professions of Christ were made. One-fourth of these were those who were already members of some church, but who had not experienced a change of heart. Two have connected themselves with our church, four or five others expect to do so in the near future, while the others will go some to the Methodist, and some to the Baptist. The Lord be praised.

Ida Mills Church :—Six persons have been recently received on profession of their faith in Christ into Ida Mills church. the result with God's blessing of the stated means of grace, and protracted services held both at the church and at one of the neighboring factories. Only a month or two over a year old, Ida Mills now numbers more than fifty on her roll of membership; and though one of the youngest churches she is the best officered, best organized, and most active working church within my knowledge. Praise the Lord for His grace bestowed on Ida Mills church.

White Hill, Fayetteville Presbytery :—God has blessed us most graciously at White Hill this week. In a meeting just closed there, about seventeen precious souls were converted to God. We had fourteen accessions to the church. God's believing children were baptized afresh by the Holy Spirit and their Christian graces quickened and strengthened. Rev. K. A. McLeod, of Jonesboro preached for us two days with much earnestness and power.

Midway :—On Saturday, July 28th, 1894, a commission of Mecklenburg Presbytery met at Holly Springs schoolhouse in Henderson county, N. C. Present; Revs. E. A. Sample and Frank D. Hunt, and Ruling Elders, W. E. Deaver and Joseph H. Burgin. Rev. E. A. Sample was moderator and Frank D. Hunt, clerk. The way being found clear, the commission proceeded to the organization of a Presbyterian church with sixteen members, ten of whom were received by letter, four from the Mills River church, three from the Northern Methodist Church, two from the Davidson River Presbyterian church, Northern Assembly, and one from the M. E. Church, South. Six were received by examination, four of whom were baptized. The church was then organized and the following were elected Ruling Elders: W. C. Jordan, Pink Orr, and Colville Woodfin, who were duly ordained and installed on the next day, Sunday, immediately after morning service. The name chosen for the new church is "Midway" which is very appropriate as it is the purpose to erect a building at a point about midway between the Mills River and Davidson River churches.

The material of which this church is composed is very promising, being some of the most influential people in the community. The organization is the result of most active and earnest work by Bro. Sample, who has won his way into the hearts of the people and who, will continue to minister unto them. There is no church building of any denomination in this immediate neighborhood and I am satisfied that as soon as a building is erected our church will grow rapidly. They have the offer of the gift of two lots upon which to build, and are going to work at once to get out the lumber, but they need help and if any of the Lord's servants who read this will send them some money, it will be rightly used and to good advantage. Send all contributions to Rev. E. A. Sample, Hendersonville, N. C. Now is the time to help Presbyterianism in that community. Don't wait, act at once.

ALABAMA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Munford :—In November, 1892, Rev. Wm. E. McIlwain organized a church at this place with fourteen members and to give the people work to do to preserve and augment the fruit of his labors, he appointed a building committee. Notwithstanding the financial depression and the lack of a pastor the little flock persevered in their labors and in March, 1894, they were able to worship in their own building which cost about $850, besides material and work donated which amounted to $100 or $200 more. The Church Erection fund aided them with the gift of $100. The building is one of the prettiest village churches in North Alabama.

On the third Sabbath of July the church was dedicated after a subscription of $114 had been raised to pay off the indebtedness on the building, and then the dedication sermon was preached by Rev. Wm. E. McIlwain. In the meeting that followed during that week six were added to the church, four of whom came by certificate, and four infants were baptized. Rev. W. I. Sinnott has been their "supply" since Jan. 1st, 1894.

Columbiana :—We have had a delightful revival. The Lord began the work in a series of prayer-meetings in the Baptist church conducted in turn by Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians. The next week the Methodist District Conference convened and then was followed a meeting of two weeks length conducted by Mr. T. K. Roberts, a consecrated young man who expects to go forth as a foreign missionary. He was assisted by Rev. Mr. McCloskey, of Birmingham, who also has the foreign field in view as his life work, and the pastors and other Christian workers of the town. Hardened sinners became inquirers for the way of life, and cold, careless Christians were aroused from their lethargy, and some of these led the public prayer for the first time in their lives. About seventy-five persons confessed Christ and ten of these joined the Presbyterian church, besides three that were received by letter, fifteen the Baptist church, and thirty-one (including several the cause by letter) the Methodist church. All persons of Presbyterian stock over thirteen years old living within three miles of town are now in the full fellowship of the church.

FORRIGN.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Bachman, representing the Southern Presbyterian Church, called on Secretary Gresham on Friday last to ask for protection for the missionaries in Japan, China and Korea. Assurance of protection was given though the Secretary does not apprehend danger at present. The Japanese minister assured Dr. Bachman that missionaries are perfectly safe in Japan. In Korea in the event of the necessity therefor arising, the missionaries will be taken aboard on United States man-of-war. More uneasiness is felt as to China, but there the missionaries will probably be concentrated at some point where they can be effectually protected.

THE MEANS CASE.

The Statement, Protest and Testimony of the Session of the Second Presbyterian Church, Columbia, S. C.

Resolved, That this session, in submitting to the judgment of the General Assembly in the case of Miss Sadie M. Means, file upon its records the following statement, protest, and testimony:

Miss Means was sentenced under Rules of Discipline, Paragraph 234, which is as follows:

When any person shall come forward and make his offence known to the court, a full statement of the facts shall be recorded, and judgment rendered without process.

The session's record of the cause is as follows:

The session met at the call of the moderator, in the pastor's study. Present, Rev. G. A. Blackburn, and Elders McCreery and Suber. Session opened with prayer by the moderator. Miss Sadie M. Means, being present, stated that she habitually violated the Sabbath by working in the central office of the Telephone Company in this city. She was exhorted to give up that employment. This she refused to do. Mr. McCreery, after inquiring what salary she was getting, asked her if she would not rather have a place in the store. This she declined. The pastor then stated that he had requested her to give up her place and study stenography and typewriting at his expense, but she declined this offer. She was then solemnly warned of the danger she was incurring in making her choice. She still, however, adhered to her purpose. Thereupon the session suspended her from the communion of the church, according to Chapter 10, Section 5, Paragraph 224, of the Book of Church Order.

An effort was made to induce Miss Means to appeal from this judgment to the Charleston Presbytery. And upon her refusal to do so, the case was carried up by complaint of her family. The Presbytery refused to sustain their complaint. They then complained to the Synod against the judgment of the Presbytery. The Synod sustained the complaint, and ordered Miss Means restored. The Presbytery then appealed to the General Assembly, for the following reasons:

I. The proceedings whereby the said judgment was reached were irregular and unconstitutional.

1. Because under the Rules of Discipline, the complainants were not entitled to complain.

2. Because the complaint contained reasons for complaint irrelevant in themselves, and not deducible from the "record of the cause," to wit: all of that part of the third reason after the words, "confession of offence," and all of the fourth reason.

3. Because the Synod did not try the cause upon "the record of the cause" furnished by the Presbytery, but upon a "record of the cause" made by itself.

4. Because the Synod in its trial of the cause, upon the "record of cause, thus made, considered as a part of the "record" certain papers which were not before the Presbytery in its trial of the cause complained against, to wit, a complaint of A. H. and E. M. Monteith vs. the session of the Second church, Columbia, S. C., based upon an amended notice of complaint, served upon the session eighteen days after the judgment complained against had been rendered; also a protest of J. Wm. Flynn and Samuel M. Smith, with the answer thereto filed after the judgment of the Presbytery had been rendered; also a preamble and resolution offered by Wm. R. Atkinson, after the judgment complained against had been rendered; also certain extracts from the Minutes of the fall meeting of the Charleston Presbytery, said meeting having been held about six months after the judgment complained against had been rendered.

(The Stated Clerk of the Synod did not send up to the Assembly the Minutes referred to in the last item of this paragraph, and so, in order to avoid a year's delay the Presbytery withdrew the item).

5. Because the Synod permitted new testimony to be introduced in its trial of the cause.

II. The judgment of the Synod in the cause was not according to the law and evidence.

1. Because work, as an avocation, in a telephone office on the Sabbath day, is a disciplinable offence under the Standards of the Presbyterian Church.

2. Because the evidence that such an offence had been committed by Miss Sadie M. Means was conclusive.

3. Because the proceeding of the Charleston Presbytery and of the session of the Second church, Columbia, S. C., in their trial of the cause had been regular and constitutional.

The judgment of the Assembly upon this appeal was as follows:

This appeal having been heard according to due process of law, the Assembly finds:

1. That the record of the cause does not clearly show that the aforesaid Sadie Means came before the session of the Second Presbyterian church, of Columbia, S. C., to make known to the court, as provided in paragraph 234, that she was guilty of violating the Sabbath, by working in a telephone office on the Lord's day, and therefore, the record lacks the statement which authorizes trial without process.

2. The decision of the session was reached without trial, provided in paragraph 174; and these two paragraphs, 234 and 174, limit the session's power.

3. The decision was made in undue haste, and at the first and only sitting of the court, so far as the records show.

4. The sentence of suspension from the communion was of excessive severity. Premises considered, it is the judgment of the Assembly that the appeal be not sustained, and that the decision of the Synod of South Carolina affirmed. In connection with this judgment, the Assembly deems it wise to reaffirm its immutable conviction as to the universal and perpetual obligation to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

The session protests against the first item in this judgment, because its record does show with sufficient clearness that Miss Means came before it to confess her offence. For what other reason did she come, and why did she do so? We do not understand this item, unless the Assembly meant that the session did not correctly record the confession made by her. If this be the intention of the Assembly, then we protest against its violation of the constitutional law of the Church, expressed in paragraphs 213 and 245, which provide that the records of a court shall not be impeached without giving the court an opportunity of defence. Such opportunity this court has not had.

We further protest against the injustice done us by the Assembly in accepting, as true, the allegations of disaffected parties, of whose credibility the Assembly had no knowledge, without giving the session an opportunity to answer these allegations. The session could easily have show that Miss Means had frequently, before she came before the session, confessed her work to be wrong and sinful, That she so confessed it before the session, every member of this court is well aware. And it could also have been shown that she knew the exact wording of the session's record, in so far as it related to her confession, before she left the session, and that she made no objection to its correctness. It could have been shown further that she has since admitted making such a confession, with many other things confirming the truth of the session's record. If, therefore, the Assembly entertained any doubt about the correctness of this record, it ought, in common fairness, to have remanded the case in accordance with the prayer of the appeal for the pupose of allowing the session to meet its accusers on the witness stand.

Again, even though no confession of guilt had been made, the Assembly would not have been justified in reversing the session's judgment. It a person should go before a court and confess drunkenness, it would not be necessary for him to confess guilt. This was the judgment of the Assembly of 1870, as shown in Alexander's Digest, pp. 526 and 527. The court must have the thing done confessed before it by the party or proved before it in presence of the party. It is then its province to pass upon the guilt, and fix the sentence. In this case, it has never been denied that the work done was confessed.

The session protests against the second item of the Assembly's judgment because Miss Means, knowing that process would be instituted against her, came before the court without any summons from it, or without even being advised to do so by any member of it; but came with a full knowledge of all her privileges, and against the advice of able counsel, for reasons relating to her family; the session could not take from her the right of a hearing given her by paragraph 234 of the Constitutions. But even under paragraph 174, which contains the following—

When a charge is laid before the Session, or Presbytery, it shall be reduced to writing, and nothing shall be done at the first meeting of the court unless by consent of the parties.... If he confess (guilt) the court may deal with him accordingly at its discretion, the Assembly would not have been justified in reversing the session's jugment, although it might have noted the irregularity of the failure to reduce the charge to writing. So that by agreement of parties all the essential requirement, of justice would have been complied with had the trial been under this paragraph.

The session protests against the third item of the Assembly's judgment, because it was not in a position to know whether there had been undue haste or not, while session was in such a position! The session knew of the six months of patient and laborious pastoral work to save Miss Means from discipline. Nor was it until after she had broken her agreement with her pastor to give up her work, if she could not be relieved from Sabbath labor, nor until she had finally determined, under pressure from her family to comply with their wishes, even against her own conscience, nor until the session was thoroughly satisfied that there was no hope of reclaiming her in any other way, did it pronounce its sentence.

The session protests against the fourth item of the Assembly's judgment, because the sentence of indefinite suspension was the only one that could have been pronounced under Par. 158, which says:

Indefinite suspension is the exclusion of an offender from sealing ordinances, or from his office until he exhibit signs of repentance.

No signs of repentance were shown in this case, but a determination to carry out the purposes of her family, despite the testimony of her pastor, her church and her conscience. Moreover this is the sentence ordered by the Assemblies of 1885 and 1886, as shown by Alexander's Digest, 344. It was not necessary that this should have been severe. The session was ready to remove it as soon as she would cease the offence. While, as late as the meeting of Synod a formal offer was made to the counsel for complainants to remove the sentence if Miss Means would accept another equally honorable and lucrative position that was at her disposal.

The session protests against the whole judgment of the Assembly because the reasons for it relate merely to procedure. Upon such reasons a cause can only in justice be remanded. The great principle for which the session is contending, the Assembly professes to hold, while, in fact, by reversing the session's judgment instead of remanding the case, it declares telephone work on the Sabbath to be no violation of the Sabbath law. This judgment, therefore, leaves in doubt what the Assembly means by "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Does it mean that the pursuit of one's ordinary avocation on the Sabbath is no violation of the holiness of the day?

Nor does the session understand why its judgment should be reversed for irregularities of procedure, instead of the Synod's judgment, which was reached by irregularities more numerous and more flagrant than those charged against the session.

We further protest against the higher courts allowing us to be tried on accusations not deducible from our records, and not true in fact, while we have not been allowed to file an answer to them. So, while denying that there are any irregularities in our procedure, and affirming that we have obeyed to the letter the constitutional law of our Church; and while regarding it absurd that men who have been engaged in the solemn business which has occupied us, without any earthly motive for wrong doing, should be charged with corrupting their records—for it was impossible that a mistake could have been made in recording the confession of Miss Means—with persecuting a girl, with taking advantage of ignorance, and with showing partiality; we confess that we have been striving to preserve the Old Sinai Westminster Sabbath of our fathers against the new nineteenth century Sabbath which allows men to follow their ordinary avocations and pleasures under the names of "necessity and mercy." We are persuaded that in allowing the great corporations of our country to take from so many hundreds of thousands of our fellow creatures their heaven-given Sabbath, we are exposing ourselves to the wrath of God and endangering the very foundations of our civilization.

We are further persuaded that the Church is making a fatal mistake in not coming to the rescue of these enslaved thousands in such a way as to command the attention and obedience of men. Deliverances amount to nothing under such circumstances as those surrounding us, unless the world sees that the Church means what it says. We believe also that this evil has become so great that it can only be removed by such conservative measures as those adopted by us—stopping the increase, and working out what has already found entrance, as rapidly as possible. And, if the superior courts, who directed the sessions in 1884, 1885 and 1886, to begin this contest, had stood by us in the fight, we believe that a reformation would have followed which might have saved our land from destroying this "sign," and breaking this "perpetual covenant" between Jehovah and his people.

Our hope and prayer now is that the Lord will use this judgment of the Assembly to awake his Church to the fact that unless something is speedily done, the Sabbath of our Bible, of our Standards, and of our Presbyterian history, will soon be supplanted by a new Sabbath different from it in purpose and character.

Resolved further, That the papers of our Church be requested, in justice to the session, to publish this statement, protest and testimony. By order of the session.

C. W. SUBER, Clerk.

[We publish this in deference to the wishes, and at the request, of some good friends who think that justice requires the publication.]

Please correct a typographical error, (by this mention), which occurs in report of First church, Charlotte, in Assembly's Minutes. It makes the church give the preposterous sum of $9,040 to evangelistic work.

We are proud that Mecklenburg leads all the Presbyteries in Foreign Missions, and the First church, Charlotte, heads the list of all the churches in this cause, Dr. Murkland's church comes next.

Third Quarter.—Lesson VIII.

Aug. 13.—First Disciples of Jesus.

John i. 35–49. Commit vss. 42–45

Golden Text. We have found the Messias, which is, being interpreted, the Christ. John i. 41.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. The connection is given in vss. 19–34, in which the baptism of Jesus is alluded to (vss. 32, 33) as a past event. Jesus then had returned from the wrestling with Satan and is quietly waiting for some signal to begin His work, when the delegation from the Sanhedrim arrives, and John declares that he is not the Christ, but that He is standing among them (vss. 26, 27). The next day he, as the fore-runner, authoritatively points Him out (vss. 29–34). To this testimony Jesus subsequently appeals (ch. v. 32–34). The place (vs. 28) and relatively the time of this lesson is here determined.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: the personal appeal and prompt response, vss. 35–37; the greeting and invitation, vss. 38, 39; Andrew and Peter, vss. 40–42; Philip and Nathaniel, vss. 43–46; Nathaniel and Jesus, vss. 47–49.

Third Step. Study with your helps any points needing explanation:

Vs. 35. And two of his disciples. One, we are told in vs. 40, was Andrew; the other was evidently John the writer of this book: (1) Because it was his habit to conceal his own name (xiii. 23, 25; xix. 26; xx. 2, etc.; xxi. 20, 24); (2) Because the details are those of an interested eye-witness, tenderly, lovingly recalling each point (vss. 38, 39); (3) Because in Luke v. 10 the sons of Zebedee appear in exactly the same relation to Jesus as Andrew and Peter. It is evidently not his first meeting with either. From this it would appear that John had brought James to Him just as Andrew had brought Peter. The first six disciples, then, were probably gathered at this time, and we have the same six, with the single addition of Thomas, gathered together in the last scene of this gospel, supposing—as is most natural—that the "two other of his disciples" were Andrew and Philip (xxi. 2).

Vs. 36. Looking upon Jesus as He walked. Evidently alone, unattended. This picture of the Messiah among His people, quietly waiting for recognition is very striking. The kingdom of God cometh not with observation (Luke xvii. 20), but is the quiet working of leaven from heart to heart (Matt. xiii. 33).

Behold the Lamb of God. Not so full a statement as that of the day before (vs. 29), but it is the personal, individual appeal, following and based upon the public proclamation, that tells. The designation of the Messiah here used indicates the sacrificial character of His work.

Vs. 37. Heard him speak. Doubtless they had heard him speak the day before, or they would hardly have understood, but this word was evidently meant for them, so they acted.

Vs. 38. Jesus turned. That He may meet those who are following.

What seek ye? In the unutterable loneliness of His new position, He was hungering for recognition, and for their sakes He would bring them to a speedy consciousness and confession of their object.

Rabbi.....being interpreted. This expression which is frequent is used where Aramaic terms are introduced into the narrative which is Greek. There is an irregularity of usage in our translation as to the rendering of the Greek term. Sometimes, as here, it is rendered into English, and so in vs. 42. But sometimes as in vs. 41, the Greek term is carried over into English.

Where dwellest thou. Evidently a question of embarassment, but turned by Jesus into an invitation, vs. 39.

Vs 39. About the tenth hour. Four o'clock p. m., and too late to return to their own place of temporary abode. What an evening that must have been. It was enough to enable them to say with assurance, We have found!

Vs. 40. Andrew, Simon Peter's brother. The gospel was written when Simon Peter's name had world-wide fame.

Vs. 41. Messias, properly Messiah, the final letter being a Greek termination given to the Aramaic word, like Esaias, for Isaiah, etc. Like the Greek world Christ, it was not a proper name, but a title, and means, the Anointed. Its first use is in the Song of Hannah (1 Sam. ii. 10).

Vs. 42. By interpretation, A stone. As it is a proper name, the rendering should be Stone omitting the article and with a capital. But better still, as we have adopted the name from the Greek, and not translated it, is the rendering, By interpretation Peter.

Vs. 43. Philip. The first disciple personally called by Jesus. It was afterwards his customary way (Matt. ix. 9: Luke ix. 59).

Vs. 44. Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter. Explaining his prompt response—he had heard of the accession of Andrew and Peter. These Galileans were all here together, waiting on the ministry of John. The place is on the Sea of Galilee, and is alluded to in Jesus' "Woes" (Matt. xi. 21).

Vs. 45. Nathanael. Mentioned again in chapter xxi. 2 in a company of the Apostles. One of the first disciples, and with them at the last we naturally suppose that he would be an Apostle. He is doubtless the same as Bartholomew, who is coupled with Philip in all the lists. Matt. x. 3; Mark iii. 18; Luke vi. 14. The list in Acts i. is not arranged in pairs.

We have found. The Greek word has passed into an exclamation of joy. Eureka! It indicates previous expectancy and search. Luke iii. 15 describes the state of mind of earnest, devout souls at the time.

Moses....and the prophets. His faith was from the beginning a Scriptural faith.

Vs. 46. Can there any good thing, etc. The language of doubt and prejudice on account of Nazareth's evil reputation. He who was to be despised and rejected of men came from, and was known by the name of, a despised town Matt. ii. 23.

Come and see. Not argument, but knowing Jesus, is what men need to break down unbelief.

Vs. 47. No guile. Prejudice there had been, but only that growing out of ignorance. The prejudice that grows out of pride, passion and self-deceit is the most stubborn opponent of youth. But the pure, that is the guileless, heart shall see God, however He reveals Himself.

Vs. 48. Under the fig-tree. This was more to Nathanael then an evidence of Jesus' omniscience. The fig tree was a favorite place of prayer and meditation. To Nathanae so engaged God had revealed Himself in the Spirit. Jesus' word to Nathanael's quickly responsive heart is equivalent to a declaration, It was I, who communed with thee there.

Vs. 49. The prompt response of faith.

Vs. 50. Greater things. The path of faith shines more and more unto the perfect day, leading at last to the opened heavens and the full revelation of the Son of Man as uniting heaven and earth (vs. 51) like the ladder Jacob saw.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson. We omit ours for lack of space.

Fifth Step. Study the topics of the lesson in the light of God's Word.

1. The law of the Church's growth.
   - A growth of life (and not a mere accretion) Matt. xiii. 31. 32
   - By spreading, or contact of particle with with particle like leaven. Matt. xiii. 33.
   - The particles are living souls; John Baptist and two disciples, vs. 35, Andrew and Peter, vss. 40, 41; [John and James, see above]; Jesus and Philip, vs. 43; Philip and Nathanael, vss. 45, 46.
   - The means is personal testimony. "Behold the Lamb of God," vs. 36; "We have found" 41, 45; iv. 29.
   - Based on personal experience—same references.
   - Far-reaching effects. Compare vs. 41 and Acts ii. 14, 41.
2. The nature of faith.
   - Awakened by testimony, vs. 37, etc.
   - Convinced by evidence, vs. 50.
   - Instructed by God's word, vs. 45.
   - Cultivated by prayer and meditation, vs. 48 (see note).
   - But consists in spiritual vision—Come and see, vs. 46—or recognition by direct spiritual apprehension of what is invisible to the natural eye, vs. 49.
   - Only possible to the pure heart, vs. 47, Matt. v. 8; Heb. x. 22.
   - Hence the need of regeneration, iii. 3; Eph. ii. 8.
   - Expresses itself in action, vss. 37, 39, 42.
   - And testimony, see above.

Sixth Step. Have you found Jesus? If not, come and see—see just the Saviour you need as He is revealed in the Gospel. Let speculation and metaphysics alone, and come to the gospels praying, "Lord, that I might receive my sight." If you have, are you revealing Him to others? Have you no brothers, as Andrew and John, or friend, as Philip, to whom you can go, and, out of the depths of a personal experience, say "I have found the Christ?" Even the woman of Samaria could do that. And who knows but that you may find a Peter?

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

This lesson is full of the preciousness of the gospel. One must enter into its spirit before one can teach it. Once full of its spirit, the narrative is so simple and the lessons so plain, that one can hardly go amiss in method.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF JUNE 21 AND 28, AND JULY 5.

71. (a). Rachel, Gen. xxxv. 19, 20; (b) Naomi, Ruth 1. 19; (c) Ruth, Ruth i. 22. (Leah and Orpah were named in some of the answers, but Leah had no association with Bethlehem and Orpah was never there.)
72. At the creation. Job. xxxviii. 7.
73. At the repentance of a sinner. Luke xv. 10,
74. The readiness of Jacob to die after seeing Joseph. Gen. xlvi. 30.
75. (a) Miriam, Ex) xv. 20 (b) Deborah, Judg. iv. 4; (c) Huldah, 2 Kings xxii. 14; (d) Anna, Luke ii. 36–38; (e) The four daughters of Philip, Acts xxi. 9. (Noadiah, Neh. vi. 14, was a false prophetess and should not be counted; the allusion in Is. viii. 3, is probably to the prophet's wife. This was not given, however, in any of the answers. It would be proper to call Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 1–10; Elizabeth, Luke i. 41–45, and Mary, Luke i. 46–55, prophetesses though not expressly called so in the Scriptures.)
76. Jacob Gen. xxvii. 11 or Manoah, Judg. xiii. 8. The questioning and doubt of Abraham (Gen. xvii. 17 is quite different.
77. The Queen of Sheba, 1 Kings x. 1.
78. Judg. v. 20.
79. The glory of God, Ps. xix 1.

Entered into Paradise, July 17th, 1894, in the 67th year of her age, Mrs. CATHARINE A. GILLESPIE, beloved wife of Mr. Daniel D. Gillespie, elder in the Westminster church, Greensboro, N. C.

It is with an acute sense of personal bereavement that we record the death of this elect and gentle lady, whom we have known and loved from boyhood, and whose sympathy and affection did much to make sweet the years of our first pastorate. Her refinement of feeling, her quickness of sympathy, her unaffected warmth of heart, the sensitiveness and depth of her womanly nature, drew the affection of a wide circle of friends. But her gentle and retiring disposition made home the natural sphere of her thought and action, and there she was the centre of such a family love as makes earth heavenlike.

Having given her heart to the Saviour in happy girlhood she lived on earth for fifty years the life that is hid with Christ in God. These years were marked for her by many dark Gethsemanes, so that, looking upon the chastened and tender expression of her face, we have often been reminded that

"Only those are crowned and sainted
Who with grief have been acquainted."

Her married life, brightly begun in 1847, was soon overshadowed by the successive deaths of many dear children. Though five grown children survive their mother, yet for the last twenty-five years the family has been more in heaven than on earth. "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous, nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." This promise "afterward" was signally manifest in the spiritual blessings that for years have sweetened and brightened her heart and home, in the chastened loveliness of character that forms the personal flower and fruit of sanctified affliction, and in the joy of seeing all her surviving children as they grew toward manhood and womanhood brought into the active service of Christ. For many years the deep unutterable gladness has been hers of knowing that while some of her children were in heaven all the others were on the road thither. Only a few weeks ago one of the dearest hopes of her life was realized in the consecration of her gifted son to the gospel ministry Perhaps deep down in her heart she whispered, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace."

The immediate cause of her death was a slow and long continued fever, in which everything that love and skill could do to win her back to health was done, but in vain. A few days before the end, during an interval of consciousness, to the question whether Jesus was with her in all her sickness, she replied, "Yes, he is very precious to me all the time." At a quarter past seven on Tuesday morning she gently fell asleep in Jesus. At the final moment her eyes brightened and her face was suddenly illumined, as with the rapture of the heavenly recognition, the radiance of the coming glory. We believe that ere her feet had touched the narrow stream, her ear had caught the music of the angels, and upon her wasted brow blew fresh and sweet the breath of the eternal morning. We love to think that amid the partings from her loved ones here she heard the greetings of her loved ones there, on the other brighter shore. Let our mourning hearts catch by faith the echoes of those celestial notes of welcome, and let us be comforted concerning her. And when nature will have its way and on the green hillside our tears fall where her precious dust lies sleeping, let us remember that she has simply ceased to be seen of us, and through the beautiful gate that opens over all Christian graves has gone up into the Holy City, where yet a little while and we shall see her again.

"Lovelier in heaven's sweet climate, yet the same."

EGBERT W. SMITH.

IN MEMORIAM.

At a meeting of the session of the Presbyterian church of Burlington, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, He who doeth all things well, hath seen fit to remove from this earthly tabernacle, to a brighter and happier land, as we humbly hope and sincerely believe, our beloved pastor, the Rev. JAMES L. CURRIE.

Resolved 1st. That in his death the church here loses a tried and faithful pastor, and the Church at large a wise and conservative presbyter: his widow a loving husband, and his children a kind father, and society one of its brightest ornaments, we can pay him no higher eulogy, than to say that a good man has gone to rest—the Lord took him:

2d. That while we mourn the death of him who has so long gone in and out before us, we sorrow not without hope, and that we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father.

3d. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the widow and orphans in this sad bereavement and trust that they will seek and find consolation in Him, who has promised to be a father to them.

4th. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and that copies be sent to the Burlington News and the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, with a request to publish, and that the same be spread upon the minutes of the session.

FOR THE FAMILY.

THE LITTLE ARM-CHAIR.

Nobody sits in the little arm-chair
It stands in a corner dim,
But a white-haired mother gazing there
And yearningly thinking of him,
Sees through the dust of long ago
The bloom of her boy's sweet face
As he rocks so merrily to and fro,
With a laugh that cheers the place.

Sometimes he holds a book in his hand,
Sometimes a pencil and slate;
And the lesson is hard to understand,
And the figures hard to mate;
But she sees the nod of the father's head,
So proud of his little son.
And she hears the word so often said:
"No fear for our little one."

They were wonderful days, the dear sweet days,
When a child with sunny hair
Was here to scold, to kiss and to praise
At her knee in the little chair.
She lost him back in her busy years,
When the great world caught the man
And he strode away past hopes and fears
To his place in the battle's van,

And now and then in a wistful dream,
Like a picture out of date,
She sees a head with a golden gleam
Bent over a pencil and slate.
And she lives again the happy day.
The days of her young life's spring,
When the small arm-chair stood just in the way,
The centre of everything.

Easily-Made Jelly.

I wish every one who attempts to make jelly, who has not tried the following method, would do so. It is so easy, so simple, so sure, that any who have tried a hap-hazard method of making would feel infinitely relieved to know just exactly how to make jelly that will jell almost before you take it from the fire.

A common mistake in jelly making is the idea that the more water you use in cooking fruit, the more juice there will be, and hence the more jelly. The more water you put in, the more you will have to cook out before your jelly will form. Another mistake is trying to be economical with sugar. Some may use less than measure for measure of fruit juice and sugar, but it rarely results in as fine jelly, or often not in jelly at all but in syrup.

Some do not press fruit at all, but simply let it drain through a bag. This makes the clearest, finest jelly; especially is this true if you strain the juice a second time and through a flannel bag. That fruit may be pressed and still have a nice-looking jelly, I know by experience. Still if fruit is plenty, there is no call for pressing, because the pulp will find ready utilization.

To make jelly easily put the fruit in a stone jar or crock, and place this in a kettle of tepid water, set over the fire and bring to a boil. Keep the fruit closely covered and cook until the fruit is well broken; it may be stirred occasionally to aid in breaking the fruit. Drain through a bag until juice is extracted, or all that will drain through without pressing; for the finest jelly press a little if not so particular. When drained, measure liquid and allow measure for measure of fruit juice and sugar. Use none but the best white sugar.

Put the juice over the fire in a granite kettle, put the sugar on tins and place in the oven to heat. Boil the juice twenty minutes after it actually begins to boil. The sugar should be hot by this time. If it has melted or even burned a little, no harm is done as the lumps can readily be skimmed off the top of the jelly. Add the hot sugar. It will hiss as it falls, and dissolves almost immediately. Just let all boil up and remove from fire. My jelly often forms at once.

If cups are used simply fill them; if glasses are used set them upon a cloth wet in water, and the boiling liquid may be poured in without breaking them. Jelly always seems to shrink a little, so fill the cups as full as possible. It is said that a tissue paper wet with brandy, and placed over the top of jelly, will prevent it moulding. I seldom use any special precaution. If glasses are used the tops are put on, if cups or bowls, paper is pasted over. In lieu of anything better, flour simply wet with water makes a very adhesive paste for this purpose. Some use the white of egg and others mucilage. I believe anything canned keeps better in the dark, and some things are spoiled by keeping where it is light. Keep jelly cool and dry and there is little danger of its spoiling.

There is a difference in fruit about jellying easily. Grapes and currants are especially good. Strawberries, very ripe raspberries and blackberries and peaches, need something to make them a little more acid in order to make a firm jelly. One lemon to every pint of peach juice will makes a most delicious jell.

Green grape jelly requires one third more sugar than juice to make a nice jelly.

Quince jelly. Peelings, cores and all are used for this. Put into a jar or granite kettle. Allow a cup of water for every five pounds of fruit. Cook until fruit is soft, and proceed the same as with others.

Crab apples and apples make one of the firmest and surest jellies, Cut the fruit up, putting in seeds, parings and all; allow a cup of water for every six pounds of fruit, cook until soft and proceed as with others. Cranberries I experimented with last winter, and I think they make a cheap and delicious jelly. Three cups of water may be used for two quarts of fruit, and the usual process makes a beautiful jelly.—The Household.

Things Useful.

Plum Custard.—Stone and stew a pint of plums. Lay them in the bottom of a pudding dish, sprinkle with sugar and pour over them a cream made by cooking together until thick and smooth 2 cups of milk and 2 tablespoonfuls of flour, and adding to this after it comes from the fire a tablespoonful of butter and the yolks of 3 eggs, beaten light. Bake the cream-covered plums ten minutes, cover them with a meringue made of the whites of the eggs beaten with 3 tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, brown lightly, and eat cold with cream.

Instead of throwing away tin cans when emptied of their contents, save them. Melt off the tops and bottoms, paste stout cloth over the bottoms, fill the cans with well prepared soil, and plant in each one, two or three seeds, and set them in a sunny window. Transplant all the surplus growth and set the can, without disturbing the central plant into the garden bed, first cutting open the cloth-bottom.

Egg Lemonade.—Separate four eggs. Beat the whites and yolks separately until light. Dissolve one cup of sugar into one pint of boiling water, add to it the juice of four good sized lemons. Now, turn into this say one quart of grated ice, enough to chill it quickly, Stir the yolks of the eggs into the whites, turn them into a pitcher and pour in at a good height, the lemonade. Pour the mixture from one pitcher to another for a moment and serve.

Peach Water Ice.—Twelve large fully ripe peaches, one pound of granulated sugar, one pint of water, two small fresh lemons, three drops of cochineal, one white of egg. Pare, stone and quarter the peaches and put them into a porcelain-lined saucepan with a simple syrup, made by boiling the sugar and water together until the sugar is entirely dissolved; add the white of egg, whipped, to a stiff froth, and one peach kernel (blanched.) Let all simmer gently till the peaches are pulped, when taken out and press through a sieve, adding the juice of the lemons and cochineal. Mix all thoroughly together and freeze in the usual way.

THE CHRISTIAN'S SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal

Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

It was the ambitious young man and woman on the farm, behind the counter, in the mill, in the lawyer's office, in the bank—the man and woman without the opportunity of a college education, that made this method of teaching law a necessity. We offer two courses—

1. A Course Preparing the Student to Practise Law;
2. A Business Law Course for Business Men and Women.

The tuition fee is small, the course complete, the result perfect. Nicely printed catalogues explain both courses. They can be had for the asking. Address

THE BROOK AND THE WIND.

A bright little brook
Flowing restlessly by,
And reflecting the clouds
Of the pretty blue sky.

The wind came along
In a very great breeze
And tore down the branches
And rushed through the trees,

"Well, wind," said the brook,
"You seem angry to-day,
And I very well think
You had best blow away."

"Now, here," said the wind,
As he tore down a tree,
"I think you'd be wise
Not to sing thus to me."

"When you come to your station
Just blow as you please,
But don't whistle at me,
I'm too fresh for a breeze."

"You are growing too rough
With the waves of your hand;
So dry up, I'm going
To the beach to raise sand."

And the cold, dreary earth,
In the sun's arms grew warm.
For the wind danced away,
And the brook became calm.

Scarlet Ribbon and Daisies.

"It's all gray together," murmured a child, as she stood with her head leaning against the sitting-room window, and her eyes fixed upon a doll in her arms.

As she spoke she moved her head slightly and looked out of the window once more, and again repeated the low, sighing murmur:

"It's all gray together."

The assertion was quite true. The whole out-of-door atmosphere was gray. Even the trees and grass looked gray in the damp, heavy air. And the new doll in the little girl's arms was entirely dressed in gray. Gray hat, gray shoes. All gray, and nothing but gray. She stood there leaning against the damp widow, feeling very gray herself.

Suddenly she started slightly, a brighter look came into her face, and she stood upright, listening. The sound of a voice and quick steps coming up stairs had made the change. The room door opened.

"Sylvia, are you there?"

"Yes, auntie."

And the child sprang forward eagerly as she answered. There was no dullness in the brisk, bright tones of dear Aunt Mary's voice, as the further question was put:

How came you to take your doll out of my room, dear, before I told you?"

Sylvia's eyes widened with surprise.

"Why, auntie, Uncle John told me to."

"Yes," said Uncle John, who had also come into the room in time to answer for himself. "I found the little one looking so forlorn two minutes ago, that I told her to fetch it. I heard you say, just before you went out, that it was ready for her."

Aunt Mary looked puzzled for a moment, and then laughed. "Ah! I begin to understand. I expect I spoke a part of my thoughts aloud, as I often do. What I was thinking just before I went out was—now I have only to put on the trimming, and then it is ready for Sylvia."

At this explanation both Uncle John and Sylvia laughed heartily. Perhaps Sylvia felt the more ready to laugh for the mention of that word "trimming," and the sight of the soft paper parcel in her aunt's hand.

Five minutes later Aunt Mary was seated near the window, a small table drawn up beside her, covered with a bright mass of scarlet ribbon, and narrow white lace. The gray dressed doll in her lap, and before her, with sparkling eyes and smiling lips, stood little Sylvia. Her imagination was quite vivid enough to picture her doll's different appearance when it should be adorned with that generous supply of ribbon and lace.

Aunt Mary turned her eyes for a moment to the window.

"How gray it does look out of doors, to be sure. All gray together!"

"Does it, auntie?" said Sylvia absently. But the next instant recollection flashed back upon her, and she added with a little note of surprise in her voice:

"Oh, auntie, it does seem curious. You have said just the same words I said to myself a little while ago. But, do you know, it doesn't seem gray to me now not dull gray at least. I seem to be able to see a tiny hint, all about, of the sun breaking through the clouds all in a minute, bright and beautiful as it did last week."

Aunt Mary looked at her little niece with a loving smile.

"Have Dolly's scarlet ribbons done all that for you, my darling?" she asked gently. So gently that Sylvia's little rosy face grew softly serious as she answered slowly:

"I suppose—it's that—auntie. But—are you thinking of something?"

"Yes, dear," was the reply, "and if you will bring your little chair here, and sit beside me, I will tell you what your words made me think of.

"A few months ago a lady was visiting some poor people. As the morning wore on she found herself in a dingy, dreary little garret. There was no one else in the miserable room but a poor sick boy lying in bed. There was nothing to be seen out of the window but a bit of gray sky. The window itself was gray with dust. Everything in the garret from the coarse gray blanket on the hard bed, was of a sort of dingy grayness. Poor and dirty, yet the boy's face looked bright.

"He held in his hand a rough little bunch of smutty buttercups and daisies.

"'Sally brought me these,' he said joyously, 'out of her missis's back garden.'

"'That was thoughtful of her,' answered the lady. She felt glad to think that anything had come to cheer that poor boy's gray day.

"'You like flowers very much,' she said, a few moments later, as she watched the boy smiling at those poor little flowers. He raised his eyes from them to her face.

"'They seemed kind of reminders, like, of the heaps of love there is for us everywhere, even when we can't see it.'"

Aunt Mary ceased speaking. There was intelligence, with tears of sympathy, in little Sylvia's eyes. "Auntie," she said, in a low voice, "that boy saw the light of the Sun of Righteousnes, you mean, even through all that great grayness of everything about his life."

"Yes, dear," came the gentle answer. "But a certain little girl I know, who is quite well, and surrounded with comforts, could not remember even that there was a created sun, for looking at a gray sky and a gray dolly. Could not let her own little face be a bit of sunshine to brighten the gray day, but could only look, 'a forlorn little creature.' Remember, my darling, that a poor suffering boy had the sunny light of the love of Jesus Christ in his soul, before he learnt to find joy and comfort in a few poor little smoke-dried London daisies. And now there is Miss Dolly, bright enough with her scarlet ribbons, I'm sure; so run away and play with her, but never forget, dear, where the true sunlight comes from, without which our very lives themselves must be gray."—Sunday at Home.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Lumberton Robesonian: Up to date the crops in this county are the finest for over twenty years.

Goldsboro Argus: The watermelon crop and trade of this section is something truly immense. In the farming territory lying between this city and Dudley alone, there are thousands upon thousands of melons being shipped daily to all parts of the country.

Clinton Democrat: We have seen a tomato, grown by Mr. J. L. Rose in his garden. It was eighteen inches in circumference and weighed two pounds and two and one-half ounces.

Salisbury Herald: Farmers in town to-day bring good news of the crops. They say corn is finer than they ever saw it and cotton is good. Good rains have fallen everywhere.

Charlotte Observer: Things have been quiet in the direction of Surface Hill for some months, but the monotonous music of the picks was broken Monday by joyous exclamations occasioned by a new find. A new pocket of ore was opened, which is one of the richest yet found. A bucketfull of the ore was taken out, and then the pocket closed. One hundred dollars worth of gold was found easily in the bucket. The pocket is to be opened up and worked later.

Monroe Enquirer: There is great complaint of musk rats on the creeks. A gentleman who lives near Waxhaw Creek, in Jackson township, tells us that acres of corn have been destroyed on that creek by the sly little animals.

The two students who led the Freshman class of more than one hundred students at the University of North Carolina last year were both prepared at the Horner School. Five of the base-ball team were also students from this school. By a system of awards instead of penalties, they have succeeded in stopping entirely the use of tobacco in the school.

Judge Joseph Holt died in Washington City on Wednesday of last week. He held various prominent political positions, in one party or the other. During the latter part of the Buchanan administration he was Secretary of War. He espoused the Union cause heartily and under Lincoln was Judge Advocate General. He was conspicuous in the assassination trials and was charged with preventing President Johnson from receiving or hearing matter favorable to Mrs. Surratt and which might have saved her life—though his friends denied this. He was born in Breckenridge county, Ky., in 1807.

FOREIGN.

The Emperor of China incensed at the inaction in preparing for war has divested Li Hung Chang, the viceroy, of the order of the Yellow Riding Coat, which conferred upon him privileges next to royalty. By this action the services of the ablest man in the kingdom are virtually set aside though he is not deposed from office.

The Royal Geographical Society, London, has received information that the steamer which arrived of the Wellman expedition was crushed in the ice. Six of the seamen returned to Norway, but Wellman and the rest pushed on toward the North Pole. Their situation is critical.

Spain is uneasy now lest Japan should become dominant in the far East and her possession of the Philippine islands should be endangered. The Spanish government looking to complications with Japan has bought three warships.

Say Soes.

Among the replies to an advertisement of a music committee for "a candidate as organist, music-teacher," etc., was the following: "Gentlemen, I noticed your advertisement for organist and music-teacher, either lady or gentleman. Having been both for several years, I offer you my services."

THREE WANTS.

"Reason's whole pleasure, all the joys of sense,
Live in three words, health, peace, and competence."

So says the poet. Competence counts for little when one is sick, and peace is disturbed when health is upset, so that the poet rightly places health first. To have good health you must have pure blood. From the blood the system receives all its material of growth and repair. The best blood-purifier is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which is world-famed and sold everywhere. It is a sovereign remedy for all diseases due to impoverished or impure blood, as consumption, bronchitis. weak lungs, scrofula, old sores, skin diseases and kindred ailments.

Delicate diseases of either sex, however in duced, promptly, thoroughly and permanently cured. Send 10 cents in stamps for large illustrated treatise, sent securely sealed in plain envelope. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main Street, Buffalo N. Y.

For those who lead a sedentary life exercise is very necessary, but if they are employed in any intellectual labour their recreation should be of a nature to make few demands on their brain power. For this reason fencing, gymnastics, riding and the like may sometimes be unsuited to either the overworked schoolboy or the student of full age, who should in that case try to find exercises which are so simple in character that the action becomes almost mechanical

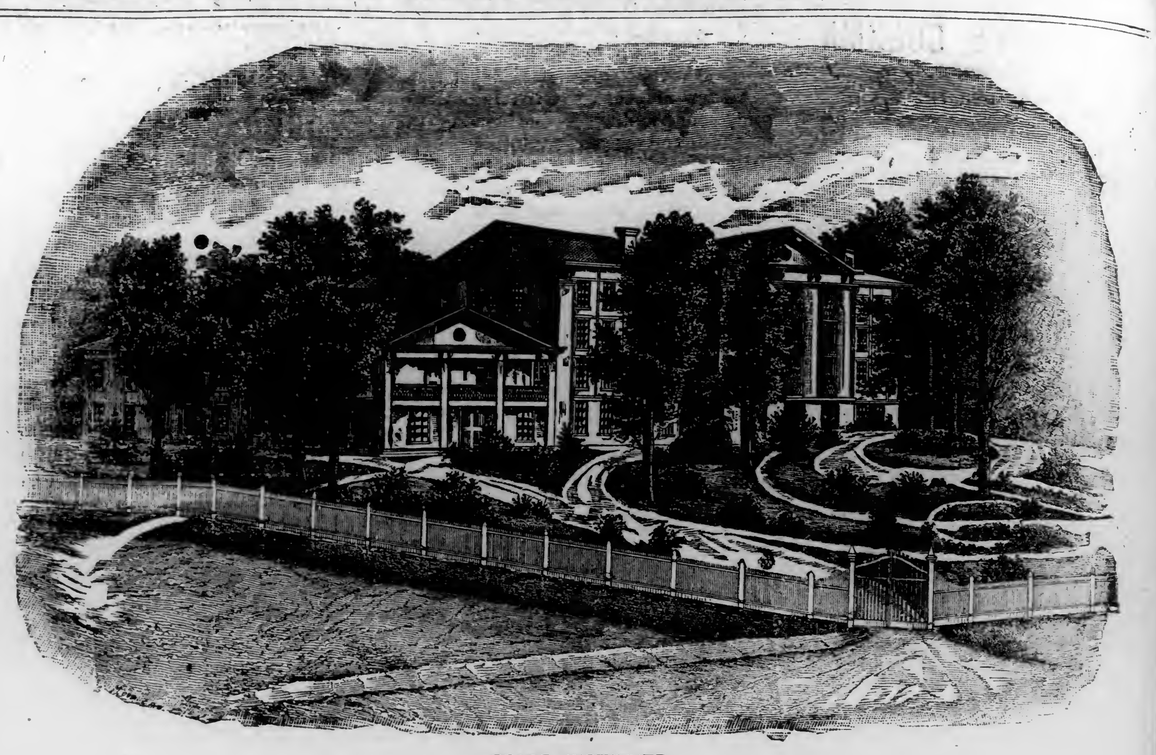
WANTED—A GOOD PERMANENT LOCATION FOR A SCHOOL OR COLLEGE.

A Presbyterian minister (wife and one child) thirty-seven years of age, with several years' experience in the school room, desires a good location (prosperous and healthful) for a school, or college, either male, or female, or for both sexes. Would undertake the school on his own responsibility, or under a Board of Trustees. The school building would have to be rent free, a good local patronage would be very desirable; and there would have to be the proper facilities for boarding pupils.



The school ought to open in September, or October.

The minister would prefer a location where he could serve a church, or churches.

THE INSTITUTE.

The Presbytery of Fayetteville is in earnest to bring its Elders' and Deacons' into yearly council and communication upon their duties and their Judicious Committee has added for this third and subsequent years a commodious and permanent tabernacle of excellent acoustic properties. All this at Red Springs. Last year there was rain. This year there is more rain but happily ceasing to fall near the beginning though detaining some speakers by swollen streams and floating bridges. This lessened the attendance and put extra duty on me. I had an extra sermon and some other extra work.

The journey coming was very comfortable on the Carolina Central and our little party votes to call it the three C's. instead of two—to celebrate the courtesy, comfort and convenience we enjoyed. With malice for none we favor this route and shall hold on our way to Atlanta in its service.

The programme has been arranged to present a connected line of doctrinal topics from first to last by well prepared papers, two each day, with instructive and entertaining variety at other hours. The series of addresses by our Dr. HOGE on Israel in Egypt and the Exodus has been well received and sustains his reputation as a thinker and teacher; his lectures being clear, comprehensive and strong.

The attendance of elders and deacons is not as large as desirable and they cannot be induced to take as much part in the discussions as requested. They are modest and reticent, but can be trusted to take with them and use at their own home meetings the helps furnished by services, addresses, prayers and songs. They must be wiser for counsel and more earnest for work by reason of this Institute.

This Scotch section seems determined to hold on to these yearly meetings with such a proof of final perseverance that the dullest must see and be convinced of its truth. This will succeed. The duties of our church officers are being discussed by them with papers by appointed representatives. It is reaching our other Presbyteries as ministers, elders and deacons are here from them besides those of us invited to open discussions and conduct services. Dr. SHEARER, of Davidson College is here again because his addresses of last year were of great clearness, strength and instructiveness. They are not to be heard until this is being set up and may be referred to again.

The good fellowship among brethren and the enlarged acquaintance of their families is among the good results of this Institute The waters of Red Springs with iron magnesia and sulphur attract some. The open cordial entertainment provided at moderate cost encourages this and must tend to a yearly increase of visitors as well as delegates. The people of the district came in private conveyances and greatly enlarge the daily audiences.

These people believe in singing with the spirit and the understanding. They use the Gospel Hymns in the way they are intended and rightly provide that the churches shall have the Church Hymn books.

A whole day, Friday, is devoted to the work of Sabbath-schools, and appropriately as that is the work most directly administered and done by our Church officers and their families besides ruling and attending to church finances. This is not meant to supplant parental training and discipline and home instruction and worship, but to supplement that and reach out to destitute regions and families and to teach children otherwise neglected.

The Ladies' Foreign Mission Union of Fayetteville is setting in annual business and counsel at this time in this place, arranging their meetings so as to hear important addresses and discussions of the Institute and securing addresses on their own work as part of the Institute proceedings. By the labors and self-sacrifice of one woman, Mrs. McRAE, and at much personal expense in her travel, this Presbytery has been made the banner Presbytery in the number and work of its ladies Foreign Mission societies. Of the five thousand members of such societies in our Church, twelve hundred are in this Presbytery. Dr. DuBOSE, of China, has urged their union to prepare a history of its societies, how they were organized and how they work, and to offer this to our Church papers for publication. This they have agreed to do. There is one society organized a few years ago with six members, one Methodist, one Baptist, being of these six. Now they have eight members, every one earning her living at moderate wages. One is paying tuition for her seminary studies wherein she has already graduated. Yet these eight wage earners by self-sacrifice and with love for JESUS report sixty dollars sent by them to our committee for last year, just closed. This is simply wonderful and deserves to go to record many times to rebuke selfishness and encourage all our churches to work. Many such societies of this Presbytery are in the weaker feebler country churches, showing that this can be done with a blessing to such churches and the cause.

In short this Institute is far more and wider than a meeting and conference of elders and deacons, important as that is, and much as others need to hold similar ones, and we all are glad to share these blessings. A. D. M.

READING WHAT WE GIVE BELOW, ONE will scarcely feel that Ireland need pine for "Rome Rule":

"Ireland certainly seems to be enjoying a period of prosperity which has not been hers for years past. Statistics just published show that the deposits and cash balances in the Joint Stock Banks of Ireland now amount to thirty-five and a-half millions sterling, or eight hundred thousand pounds more than they were in the corresponding period of 1893. The balances in the Post Office and Trustees Savings Banks are six millions and a half sterling, or six hundred thousand pounds more than in July, 1893. This is double the highest increase in any of the twenty years from 1874 to 1893, inclusive. The railway traffic receipts for the last half-year are a million and a-half sterling, being higher than the amount in any previous half-year, and showing an incease of forty thousand pounds, as compared with the receipts for the first six months of 1893.

HERE AND THERE.

ON THE SECOND AND THIRD PAGES readers will find interesting matter for which we could not find room in the place usually devoted to articles of the kind. We especially invite attention to the discussion of "Our Present System of Sunday School Instruction." It may well be doubted whether any subject before the Church just at this time approaches this in importance.

WE TRUST OUR FRIENDS WILL NOT forget that we need all the money we can get. Please forward subcription, if due, and add to the favor by sending at least one new subscriber if you can.

WE CLIP THIS VERY INTERESTING item from an exchange:

"Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt, of whom little has been heard since the death of her husband in 1885, and who has kept so completely out of publicity that little is known of her movements, makes her home to-day the most active center of charity in New York. Soon after her husband's death Mrs. Vanderbilt organized an extensive system of charity, into which almost all of her enormous income goes. She cast about her for a man to take principal charge of the work, but under her immediate supervision. When she found him she gave him a liberal salary and so far as is known, never let any one know who he was or permitted him to tell. Under him are still other agents at smaller salaries, who make reports to him. These agents are kept in the dark as much as possible. For this Mrs. Vanderbilt has two reasons: a dislike of publicity and dread of being annoyed by the unworthy."

DR. RICHARDSON, ONE OF THE EDITORS of the Central Presbyterian, is now in Europe. Writing home to his paper a week or two ago he mentioned his visit to Hawarden Castle and to the church in which GLADSTONE worships. There he found printed and placed in a neat little frame, which was hung near the main entrance, the following suggestions to worshippers. They will suit any land or clime and we gladly give our readers the benefit of them

"ON YOUR WAY TO CHURCH."

"On your way to the Lord's house be thankful, be silent, say but little and that little good. Speak not of others faults, think of your own, for you are going to ask forgiveness."

"WHEN YOU REACH THE CHURCH."

"Never stay outside, go in at once, Time spent inside should be precious."

"IN CHURCH."

"Kneel down very humbly and pray. Spend the time that remains in holy thought and prayer. Remember the awful presence into which you have come. Do not look about to see who are coming in, nor for any other cause. It matters nothing to you what others are doing; attend to yourself. Fasten your thoughts firmly on the holy service. Do not miss one word. This needs a severe struggle. You have no time for vain thoughts. The blessed Spirit will strengthen you if you persevere."

"WHEN SERVICE IS OVER."

Remain kneeling and pray. Be intent and speak to no one until you are outside. The church is God's house even when prayer is over. Be quiet and thoughtful as you go through the church yard."

"ON YOUR WAY HOME."

"Be careful in your talk, or the world will too soon slip back into your heart. Remember where you have been and what you have done. Resolve to try and live a better life."

WHILE THESE SUGGESTIONS, ALL, ARE so heartily to be commended and recommended, that we hardly care to select one from the rest, we must call attention particularly to that which refers to behavior "In Church." Irreverence in the house of GOD during or preceding divine worship is a most flagrant sin and yet of such common occurrence as to largely escape notice. One often sees those who are recognized as the most humble and consistent followers of CHRIST, perfectly oblivious of the solemnity due to time and place of worship—whispering, sometimes talking, jesting and laughing—and all from sheer thoughtlessness; utter forgetfulness that they have come to meet their LORD, to offer to Him the homage of prayer and praise and receive from Him the blessings of joy and peace.

IN OUR NOTICE OF THE MINUTES OF the General Assembly we omitted saying the price of each copy is 25 cents—and that each minister and church officer, at least, ought to own a copy.

WE HAVE A TENDER FEELING FOR THE Agricultural and Mechanical College of North Carolina, not the less perhaps that we had not counted largely upon its proving successful. Our Legislatures do sometimes hand out money for enterprises of which one finds little more to say than than that they find employment for persons who need employment but who, it is only fair to say, do not eat idle bread in the State's service. The results to the public do not justify the expense incurred. Not so the Agricultural and Mechanical College. It is doing good work and growing in favor. Last year the students numbered 193 and this year the faculty count on perhaps as many as 200. The material benefits in the industrial development of the State will increase year by year and soon will be incalculable.

AS WE ARE MAKING UR OUR FORMS we get the programme of the State Sunday-school Convention which meets at Durham on 21st–23d, with request to give a write-up. Too late. But the Convention really should not need a write-up. Its past record of good tells all that need be told. Mr. WM. REYNOLDS is to be there. We wish it all success.

WHAT THE AGE DEMANDS OF A MINISTER.

At the induction of a minister to the pastorate of a United Presbyterian church in Glasgow, lately, the following good advice was given in the course of the address delivered:

"To determine, whatever others do, to maintain the dignity of the pulpit as his throne of power, keep it sacred to Jesus only, and hold forth the Cross plus His personality, minus self, so loftily and definitely that all men may see it and be subdued by its melting pathos and appeasing love. There is no power in any creed that hides the Cross, and no life in any theology which denies or ignores the infinite glory of the eternal Son of God. Ours is a time of searching criticism in theology as in everything else. Nothing is now taken for granted. Even those things which have been most surely believed among us—the most vital truths of our religion—are being called in question, and we are getting new departures on every hand. Never was the human mind more restless, and infidelity, even in the guise of religion, more daring. The social, political, and religious aspect of our country and the world is strikingly portentous. All that is not asbestos is being subjected to a fiery trial, and all the wood, hay, and stubble burnt up. If ever any age demanded of a minister talent, energy, firmness, extensive reading, much learning, an intimate acquaintance with the living sources of truth, it is the present. Necessity is laid upon me to preach the gospel, not merely the necessity of a great duty, but of a Divine consecration and a mighty love, and that from a soul baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire—alive with the very love and pity of the ever-yearning heart of Christ for the salvation of men—whom we preach, warning every man and teaching every man that we may make every man perfect in Christ Jesus.

AN INJUSTICE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

One of the questions asked in the blanks sent to the churches in the spring is: Did your church pay the expenses of minister and elder to Presbytery and Synod the past year? The churches having pastors mostly reply: Yes. But not so with the small weak ones served by an evangelist. Here is the injustice. Generally the evangelist's salary is small, he must rent a house, his travelling expenses, too, are much greater than the pastors. And hence often, very often, he is utterly unable to pay out of his own pocket his expenses to the Presbytery, his group of feeble churches is also unable, and he must remain away. Yet often they would be the life of the Presbytery, their reports rendered in person would greatly stimulate. Besides, they are in an especial sense the servants of Presbytery, and yet no provision is made for them to get to the governing body for personal intercourse, for counsel, for encouragement. But is it replied the expense is generally small? Granted. But the local evangelist is often in such straits, that his worldly care concerning life's bare necessities almost crushes his spirit. It does often cripple his purse.

I think that each Presbytery should feel enough interest in these faithful frontiersmen that they should never be kept away from these profitable meetings from lack of means to pay their expenses. It would cheer them so in their work, and so make them more useful in their turn.

My idea is that if the Home Mission funds cannot bear the whole of their travelling expenses to Presbytery, they should receive the proportion, on the basis of what the Presbytery pays them. For example: An Evangelist has a field which pays him $300, Presbytery adds $400. Therefore Presbytery should guarantee 4-7 of his travelling expenses to the meetings. Is not this more just, than as matters now stand?

The Value of a Church Paper.

It is astounding that some pastors, and the people generally, are so little interested in the circulation of a worthy denominational paper. Pastors stand sadly in their own light when they fail to encourage the members of their churches to take a good denominational paper. It is simply impossible for church people to be in the largest degree useful to their churches, to their denomination and to the cause of Christ at large if they do not take a religious paper. There is no investment of money which will bring larger returns for the Church, for the denomination and for Christianity than what is expended in procuring good religious papers. Five cents a week for the year will secure the weekly visits of a great, strong, wholesome and altogether superior religious paper. The general circulation of such a paper in a church is worth as much to a pastor as is an assistant in pastoral work. Church members cannot intelligently give to or work for denominational societies and other objects of benevolence except they be familiar with the scope and manner of their operations; and such familiarity can come only from the weekly visits of a religious newspaper. In all our churches there are many young members who were brought up outside of our denomination; there is also a considerable proportion of such who are more advanced in years. How can they know what our contemporary enterprises are, and how can they come into touch, either with the living present or with the hopeful future, except they take a weekly denominational paper? Men of wealth could not do better with hundreds, or even thousands, of dollars than to aid the pastor in introducing a worthy denominational paper into churches and missions. A pastor in this city a few weeks ago paid for twenty copies of such a paper to be sent to as many families connected with a mission of his church. Could he have made a better investment of the amount?—Christian Intelligencer.

LET DOWN YOUR NETS.

Launch out into the deep,
The awful depths of a world's despair;
Hearts that are breaking and eyes that weep,
Sorrow and ruin and death are there,
And the sea is wide, and the pitiless tide
Bears on its bosom—away,
Beauty and youth in relentless ruth
To its dark abyss for aye—for aye.
But the Master's voice comes over the sea,
"Let down your nets for a draught" for Me!
He stands in our midst on our wreck-strewn strand,
And sweet and royal is His command.
His pleading call
Is to each—to all:
And wherever the royal call is heard,
There hang the nets of the royal Word.
Trust to the nets and not to your skill,
Trust to the royal Master's will!
Let down your nets each day, each hour,
For the word of a King is a word of power,
And the King's own voice comes over the sea,
"Let down your nets for a draught" for Me!

IS OUR PRESENT SYSTEM OF SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTUCTION THE BEST?

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

By our present system I of course mean the International System, as used in most of our schools. This system, if we understand it aright, is, that a body of men composed of representatives from all of the evangelical bodies, or as nearly so as possible, shall select certain portions of Scripture to be studied each Sabbath in every school in the world, and that the Bible be taken in course, so that each portion shall come within the scope of the lessons once in seven years, thus enabling the scholar to form some idea of each part. The Scripture thus selected is given to the world, each denomination prepares, so far as it is able a system of lesson helps, aids to teachers, etc. Publish houses, in direct connection. with, and under the control of no denomination, also prepare the "helps" (?).

In the system thus briefly outlined, we want to consider two points: 1st, the plan of selection, 2d, its adaptability to class work.

1st. Then as to plan of selection. It must necessarily be historic rather than designed to draw out any particular truth or system of truth. The composition of the committee precludes the latter. This can easily be shown. How can a Methodist agree to a course that brings out the points, and comes to the conclusions that a Presbyterian would delight in? No, there must be no point aimed at, no culmination no drawing out of the unity of the teaching of Scripture as we see it, at any period of the course. The plan of selection has, to many, been planless or worse. Why study half of the life of Paul, leave it for six months or a year's study in other parts of the Scripture that has no direct connection with it and then back to Paul? Who has been able to find the plan in the lessons of the last half of '93? I know that some will call to mind with pleasure the lessons in John. When for a whole year we studied that book; but who can tell the reasons that some portions were taken and others left.

2nd. Is this plan suited to class work for the whole school? That is is not may be abundantly proven. The best proof is the following. We quote from the Christian Observer, "The International Primary Teachers' Union at its meeting at Philadelphia passed the following resolution:

"Resolved. That we recommend to the Lesson Committee now in session in Philadelphia that they select a separate International Lesson course for the primary department, to begin January 1st, 1894, and that it consist of one-half the length of time used to cover the regular course."

This is nothing, if not a confession on the part of the primary teachers that the plan as heretofore pursued is not adapted to the needs of the whole school. This is no new complaint, and the above voices the sentiment of a host of those who have vainly attempted to teach to children of five lessons suited only to adults.

The advocates of the International Lessons claim for them three distinct and great advantages:

1st. The inspiration of the thought that all the world is studying the same portion of Scripture on the same Sabbath. This has, practically been given up by the committee when they ask the Primary Teachers, as they have done, to formulate a separate series for the primary department. This will cut off at least one-half of the Sunday-school world from the regular lesson and the union of study is thus destroyed. This advantage, if it ever was a real advantage, is already lost.

2nd. The concentration of the scholarship of the world on this particular Scripture. There are three things to be considered here; the teacher either sticks to the helps and interpretation of his or her denomination and derives no, even apparent benefit from this fact; or if they branch out into the teaching of another only confusion is the result; or, perhaps, they get hold of some of those "broad views" so called, edited by "irresponsible parties" then we have "confusion worse confounded." This vast multitude of helps is, at best but a questionable advantage. The helps are studied rather than the Bible, but every Sunday school worker knows of this difficulty without any elaboration on our part.

3rd. The whole of the great Sunday-school movement of late years is credited to this system of lessons. We do not doubt that they have been a factor and an important one in this work, but the main-spring of the whole is, to our mind, the desire for mutual helpfulness in the spread of the Master's kingdom. The great conventions have brought together workers, ventilated methods of work, etc., etc. These things are not inseparable from the International Lessons and if this system should pass away there will still be need of instruction "how to teach," etc.; there will still be inspiration in the meeting together of earnest workers in the cause and the matters discussed then will not differ in any great measure from those discussed now.

We will now consider three objections to this system:

1st. The Bible as a book does not come into the hands of the scholars. They study helps, bring helps to school, read out of helps, tell you what the helps say, but THE BIBLE is conspicuous by its absence from many, if not most of our schools.

2nd. The standards of our Church have no connection with the Sunday-school lesson and in many of our schools no place in the plan of study, they are crowded out by the present system of lessons. This is to our mind a very grave fault for we are not teaching to the children of the Church those things that are her life, and we have those in our midst, even as teachers, the Church's own children, who cannot tell, for they do not know, what the Church believes, and why? because the Church has not taught them. If the time has come for banishing all doctrinal teaching from our schools let us do it and not tack on to the end of a lesson a question from the Catechism that has no connection with it.

3rd. Dr. Joseph Lampe, in an article in the New York Observer against the Blakeslee System says: "It is neither wise nor safe to commit to irresponsible parties the selecting, arranging and explaining of the Scripture lesson to be taught to our children and to allow them to choose or point out the material by which these lessons are to be illustrated and enforced." This is just what our Church is doing. It may be, and doubtless is true, to quote Dr. Lampe again, that "The International Sunday-school Lessons are selected by a large committee of evangelical Christians who have the confidence of all the churches" but to whom are they responsible? and they do the selecting. The arranging and explanation is in many instances done by "irresponsible parties." To whom is Peloubet, Hurlburt, Pentecost, David C. Cook, The Sunday School Times, and a host of others responsible? And yet, in what school, if it is a school at all do not one, or all of these find a place. Dr. Lampe again: "The Lessons (Blakeslee System) with all their teaching materials are prepared by outside parties. Can any church, which holds a positive creed, afford to commit to irresponsible hands a matter of such great importance? Surely not. The issues involved are too serious. The faith and life of the next generation will derive their character from the quality of the religious education which the children of this generation receive." Just so. Why does not our Church with her "positive creed" SELECT her own lessons suited to and illustrating her own creed? Why does she not arrange and explain them herself? Why does she, can she afford to allow any body of men not part and parcel of herself, and under her authority to undertake any part of this responsible work. We quote again, "These considerations are strengthened by the fact that dangerous errors are actually disseminated by means of the manuals, lesson, helps and circulars which accompany the Blakeslee Lesson." The same can be said of many interpretations of the International Lessons. But if we do away with the International Lessons what shall we put in their place?

1st. Let us have a committee full of zeal for the Sunday-school work and knowledge of its needs; who are fully informed as to and in sympathy with the doctrines of our Church, and are under the control of our body.

2nd. Let them prepare a system of lessons that will bring the Bible as a whole into the hands of the children and make it impossible to prepare the lessons without it, thus giving them a personal contact with the Book as a whole, a thing they do not have now.

3rd. That the lessons be so arranged that the standards of the Church be connected with and part and parcel of the lessons so that our children be shown that ours is a Church founded upon the Bible, and that we as a body teach only what the Bible teaches.

4th. The lessons be graded so as to suit the scholars of different ages. Dr. Lampe admits that "The graded idea has manifest advantages in giving Bible instruction." He says: "This idea of the grading of the lessons is not new, and can be applied to the International or to any other plan of Bible study."

Then let us apply it to a system that shall embrace in one complete and beautiful whole, the Bible, the standards of our church, and the Sunday-school lessons, that our beloved Church may teach her children what she believes, why she believes it, and that all of her teaching is of God.

HANDS TIED.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

A peculiar condition of affairs in Albemarle Presbytery, along one line of Christian work, is beginning, it is feared, to embarrass our work in several directions, and in one department of progress the situation is serious. It is thought that a brief statement will show our friends and helpers in the Synod how necessary is the continuance of their interest in this missionary Presbytery.

The larger churches are Raleigh, Goldsboro, Newbern, Washington, Henderson, Oxford, Tarboro. Then comes Wilson, Rocky Mount, Nut Bush, La Grange, Geneva. Notice how the ability of the majority is hindered by debt or by home enterprises—all just at this time.

This is apparent by the following example: A church building is a crying necessity at, say Parmele, where the circumstances all appeal powerfully for help. An appeal is sent to Raleigh. Result: The church there is about to build a new church themselves, and they are strained to the utmost.

Goldsboro: There they have recently finished Georgetown chapel, and are doing their utmost to remodel their old building, so much needed.

Newbern: Here we find the congregation keyed up to most excellent condition all along the line, and in addition repairing, changing and refitting their house of worship.

Henderson: Has nobly borne the burden of Brookston chapel, and suffering acutely the depression in the tobacco trade.

Oxford: Staggering on bravely under a heavy church debt, sadly weakened by business failures, removals and deaths.

Tarboro: Recently finished, meeting its obligations for Olivet and aiding the whole evangelistic field of her pastor and seeing where, in another point in the county of Edgecombe, she must soon bear the burden of another building.

Rocky Mount: Growing—but a large debt on her recently erected manse keeps her from aiding where she might desire to give.

Wilson; Again her hands are tied by a heavy debt.

La Grange: She needs more help on her debt, therefore her helping hands are tied.

Nut Bush and Geneva: In the tobacco belt our heads are above water. This is the condition of affairs in brief in the Presbytery.

Every church of much size and strength, save one, has just commenced some extra expense at hand, or is trying to meet a debt, or is beginning to breathe from a load just lightening. What is Parmele to do? and Kinston? and Mackay's Ferry—may I add Greenville too, for her church is not yet finished nor paid for? Then what for future development in church building? I look at other Presbyteries, and see large wealthy city churches in comparatively prosperous times, to which appeals are made, and from which aid flows to the feebler points around. But just at present the cry of Albemarle must mingle with these nearer appeals, and the aid so generously extended, is still needed, is expected brethren, and is, we trust, wisely expended.

GREENVILLE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The following offer has been made by a gentleman to the trustees of our little church at this place:

If they will build a neat house of moderate size, this fall, and rent it to him, he will advance, in lumber, enough rent to build the house, and also will keep one furnished room as a "prophet's chamber," to be occupied by the minister, whenever he comes to Greenville. The trustees are not able to accept this offer, as the debt on the church is taxing our resources. A comfortable manse on our lot will be a necessity in a few years, when Greenville will be the centre of an Evangelistic field. Is there not a sanctified heart with a consecrated purse in a devoted hand, willing to invest a thank-offering, tithe, or a sacrifice, in this permanent benefit to an important Home Mission centre? Or is some Presbyterian, not able to give the principal, willing to lend, at a mere nominal rate of interest, for a term of five years, properly secured, a sufficient amount to erect the building? $700 will build the house.

Dedication of "Grace Chapel."

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

At the invitation of Miss Grace G. McKeage, a member of Dr. Lupton's church at Clarksville, Tenn., I laid aside for two days, my evangelistic work, to climb to the crest of Cumberland Mountain "and view the landscape o'er" and dedicate to the worship of our Covenant-keeping God the beautiful new church built for those who summer at this delightful spot, and for those whose home is permanently on the mountain and adjourning valleys.

In honor of the loving heart who started and carried through this enterprise—it was named "Grace Chapel."

Her work of love has embalmed herself in the heart's of all who live there. Blending the forms of the Methodist and Presbyterian hand-books for dedication services—assisted by Rev. Mr. Wilson of Tracey City—the commodious and suitable building was solemnly set apart.

I had the pleasure of preaching the dedicatory sermon, and Mr. Wilson offering the prayer. How hearty was the singing! After about two hours interval, I preached again—Heb. xii. 1–2, and two young married women came forward, confessed their Master as their Saviour and were baptized, and one of them then had her babe baptized.

Believing parents, long deprived of church ordinances then presented their infants—and seventeen were baptized. Thus on the very day of dedication, Miss McKeage had the joy of seeing the first fruits of her labor of love.

Another fountain head for the issuance of fruitful streams to gladden the city of God, nestles hard by where start the streams down that mountain.

A happy day I had! three sermons; three large congregations and nineteen baptisms. "And in all places where I record My name I will come unto thee and I will bless thee."

Which?

It is fair to judge of a sermon, not only by the pleasure which it gives a hearer while listening to it, but by the abiding impression it leaves upon his mind. Two friends, on a recent Sabbath, went to hear two distinguished metropolitan preachers, and at the close of the evening were comparing notes as to the day's experiences. "I cannot exactly define the flaw in the morning's discourse," remarked one friend. "It was able, brilliant, and in a certain sense spiritual; but it sent me home to speculate and philosophize over matters which heretofore I had accepted in simple faith. It unsettled old beliefs, and gave me nothing satisfying in return. But from the other sermon, he continued, I came away with a great longing to get on my knees before the Lord, and implore Him to make me the man He designed me to be, and then send me forth to wider service for the blessing of mankind." One preacher stimulated the mental faculties, the other quickened the soul's noblest aspirations. Which sermon was the better of the two? Which effect is most to be desired?—The Congregationaalist.

A Powerful Sermon.

A very powerful sermon is contained in the following paragraph that we find going the rounds in our exchanges: When a young man who had recently found the Saviour was asked under whose preaching he was converted, he gave the following significant reply: "I was converted under my uncle's practicing." Oh, for more preachers like that uncle—men and women who commend the gospel to others by their holy lives.

PROVE TRUE.

What though on peril's front you stand,
What though thro' lone and lonely ways,
With dusty feet, with horny hand,
You toil unfriended all the days,
And die at last with man's dispraise?

Would you have chosen ease, and so
Have shunned the fight? God honored you
With trust of weighty work. And O!
The Captain of the heavens knew
His trusted soldier would prove true.

Living for Others.

Every human being born into the world has a chapter of life, a page of history, however brief and fragile, evanescent and transitory the career of that being may be. Every human being dies, the senator and the sage, the sovereign and the savage. Birth is the tender starting point of a journey; death its end. And every man that dies has his monument. With some it is pyramidical and with others it is monolithic. Some monuments are of marble, some of bronze, and some are built of deeds—deeds that will last after brass and bronze, alabaster, marble and granite have disappeared. Earth hath nothing more solid than good deeds. A monument of works is always more enduring than any other. The tall obelisk on Bunker Hill may crumble to powder, but the battle of Bunker Hill is immortal. Independence Hall will disappear, but the Declaration of Independence will never perish. A principle will always outlast a stone; an idea will always survive a material structure. And so the deeds of a man become his most enduring monument. A marble sarcophagus is often nothing but a sculptured lie; a cenotaph with nothing under it; but a man's deeds are himself, and cannot be untruthful. Many a man whose grave is unmarked with even a single stone, has a towering monument of works. We have gone into the cemetery of Geneva and looked upon the grave of Calvin—a square block of unpolished granite that the stranger would hardly notice—with the initials of his great name marked on it; yet Calvin's real monument lifts itself so high that it touches the purposes of God. In Bunhill Fields, where slumbers the old Nonconformist dust waiting for God's trump to bid it rise, are two blocks of stone, one lying on the grave of Isaac Watts and the other pressing down on the dust of John Bunyan; but the monument of Watts is his inimitable hymns, and the monument of Bunyan is that famous allegory! In the grand melody of one and the gorgeous drapery of the other, their souls go marching on.

When Christ was crucified the Romans did not erect a monument over him. The Jews gave him no such sepulchre as their kings had in the valley of Jehoshaphat. But the great day of atonement witnessed the completion of the noblest memorial of human virtues that the world ever saw. Christ had a monument; its base was as broad as the world he came to save; and its summit was as high as the throne of glory to which he lifted his believing children. O, how full was that life of his of excellence, of nobility, of grandeur, of holiness! How it shone in comparison with all other characters! What biography is like his biography? What teachings are like his teachings? Thinking as never man thought; speaking as never man spake; acting as man never acted! This language was not used with reference to Christ, but how applicable to him—"Poor, yet making rich!" He was so poor that he had not where to lay his head, but he enriched every village he entered: he added to the wealth of every house whose guest he became. He had something of more value than gold, and that he gave. He gave a brother from the grave to Mary and Martha; he gave a son to the poor weeping widow of Nain; he gave eyes to blind Bartimeus; he gave a clean heart to wretched, demon-possessed Mary Magdalene; he gave principles and ideas to the nations; he gave blood and agonies for a lost world; he became poor that we through his poverty might become rich, that the whole wealth of his nature might be crowded into his gifts to the poor, sinful children of Adam.

And Paul declares that he and his fellow-laborers had the same spirit. They were amazing contradictions to all the people of their time. Their lives were a paradox that none could explain. They lived, he himself declares, "as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing, as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, yet possessing all things."

"Living for others," was the grand idea of both Christ and Paul. There was not a breath of Christ's life that was drawn for himself, not a drop of his blood that was shed for himself, not an agony of his heart that was endured for himself. Every element of his sufiering was for others—for the guilty and unworthy. He could stand before the world and say, "I weep that you may never weep; I bleed that you hearts may never be stung with anguish; I die that you may live forever." He lived for others, not for himself; he died for others, not for himself. He stood in the place of the great guilty world. He bore the brunt of a broken law, for others, not for himself. Thus he is the sublime model of all human virtue that culminates in living for others. It was the one grand purpose, the supreme achievement of his Sonship—to bring lost man to his Father through the breach in his own body. He hung aloft the banner of victory stained with his own blood. He trod the winepress of the wrath of God that he might have the vintage of the earth. In losing his life he saved it, and in saving it saved lost mankind.—Christian Inquirer.

Too Much Domesticity.

BY MRS. M. E. SANGSTER.

Does it ever occur to you, Mrs. Clever Housewife, that there are perils in being exclusively domestic? It is of course a praiseworthy thing to keep one's home in absolutely beautiful and elegant order, to have one's rooms dusted and shining, and spick-and-span, to arrange one's table with precision, and induce one's family to conform to rule's of invincible regularity! And yet, dear Mrs. Clever Housewife, one may pay too costly a price for this system, this elegance, this unapproachable excellence.

"What has become of that little lady who was your opposite neighbor on Elmwood avenue, in 1887," I asked a friend the other day. "I mean," said I, "the pretty, bright-faced little woman, whose doorsteps were a dream of cleanliness, and whose windows shone like mirrors; the one who dusted all the books in the library every week, and who finished the stairs with a hairpin in the corners."

My friend looked sad. A retrospective glance came into her eyes. "You refer to Mrs. Craig-holme," she said. "Poor child, she has been in a state of nervous depression bordering on insanity for the last three years. They have given up housekeeping, all the furniture is stored, the books are packed, the children are at boarding school, and Mr. Craig-holme spends his time in taking his wife from one place to another, hoping to rouse her from the apathy into which she has settled. The doctors said that her life had been too narrow It had shut about her like prison bars; she is a victim of too much domesticity.

A peril of this same virtue-turned-into-vice, is that we lose the power of seeing things in the right relations. To the intensely domestic woman, a spoiled batch of bread is a heartache, a delayed meal is a disaster, a spot on the paint is a catastrophe. She laments over trifles until she has no breath nor strength to spare for the real joys of life, nor, indeed, for the sorrows in which she ought to sympathize. Her sons and daughters, and her husband, too, are afraid of infringing on her province by criticizing where occasional criticism is deserved; they know how jealous is her pride in her housekeeping, and how resentful she is if any one, be he or she the dearest of the dear, does not consider it absolutely without a fault or a defect.

Again, Mrs. Clever Housewife, the over-domestic woman, as you must admit, cannot keep a servant. Her "girls," whether elderly women or slips of eighteen and twenty, are apt to leave her at unexpected moments, and she is always dissatisfied with the kitchen contingent, and always making changes. Her cooks drink, or are wasteful, or ill-tempered. Her waitresses break china and neglect their duties. Everyone who serves her fails to reach her standard, and wearies of her never-ending fussiness.

It is well to be a good housekeeper, but dear Mrs Clever Housewife, it is very poor economy to be this only, and nothing more. For the house exists for the convenience of the people whose abiding place it is, and whether it be palace or cottage, its single claim upon our respect and regard is summed up in the four little letters which make the word "home."—Christian Intelligencer.

Dont Be Mulish!

This is a free rendering of a striking verse in one of the Psalms, which runs, "Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding, whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle lest they come near unto thee." Paraphrased in modern version the counsel might he rendered on this fashion: "Act like an intelligent being—not like a balky horse, or a stubborn mule. You have intellect, use it; you have knowledge and the means of acquiring information—employ them. Do not back, and balk, and kick, and turn, and refuse to work, until a bit has to be put into your mouth, and a halter strap on your neck, and chafing harness is put on you, and you are forced into the track of obedience, and the way of workfulness. Do not kick against the goads. Do not wait to be driven by force, and urged like a brute by strenuous means to your rightful work. Become amenable to the motives of conscience, of reason, of gratitude, of love, of loyalty. Respond to the appeals of God's law with instant obedience, with hearty devotion. Reflect upon his precious promise—I will guide thee with mine eye. Let the relations of loyalty, of fellowship, of sonship, be so close between you and the Almighty Father that you shall need only a glance of his eye, a motion of his hand, a whisper from his Spirit to move you in the line of prompt and obedient action. Do not wait to be pulled and hauled, to be haltered and harnessed, to be directed by affliction, by physical law, by the restraining and chastening influences of providence, by the penalties which make the way of the transgressor painful and hard. Be not like a mule—be a man!—Central Christian Advocate.

The Difference.

There are too many people, both in city and country, who require a more pleasant day and more favorable conditions for going to church than for almost any other purpose. If there is slush or ice on the pavement they feel quite excusable for staying at home; but they would not think of declining an invitation to dine with a friend if they had no better excuse. It is seldom that the roads are too muddy or too rough to keep the farmer from going to market with his produce, but how frightfully bad are they on the Sabbath! The young people must get to the social entertainment, however disagreeable the weather, but it is only at a time of unusual religious interest that many of them will encounter the storm to attend the prayer-meeting.

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions met in special session at 9 a. m., called in view of the possible peril of our missionaries in China, Japan and Korea.

The Secretary reported that he had sent to the Secretary of State a list of the names of all our missionaries in those countries with their locations, requesting that the authorities in Washington do whatever might be possible for their safety.

Correspondence had also been had with Dr. Gillespie, Secretary of the Northern Presbyterian Board, with a view of concert of action with them should the occasion make it necessary.

Dr. J. W. Bachman, a member of the Committee, being in Washington City, a telegram was sent him to confer with the authorities and with the envoys of China and Japan. Cablegrams were also sent to China, Japan and Korea instructing the missionaries to take whatever steps might be necessary for their protection.

It is hoped that none of our brethren abroad are in personal danger, but knowing the disposition of the mandarins and Buddhist priests to charge all calamities befalling these countries to the presence of foreigners and seeing that in one place an anti-foreign riot had already occurred, it was thought best to leave nothing undone that could possibly contribute to the greater safety of our brethren there.

The Committee also took action requesting that the Church everywhere should remember these brethren and their work in special prayer-meetings at this time. The work is obliged to be seriously hindered temporarily even though the missionaries should not personally suffer.

It is hoped, therefore, that in special meetings as well as at the regular services of the churches, that prayer will be continually offered until the time of peril is past, and especially that God will overrule the present disturbance and apparent interference with his work to the furtherance of the gospel everywhere.

The Treasnrer's report showed the receipts for the month to be $8,192.34, a decrease of more than $4,000 as compared with the month of July last year. It is earnestly hoped that all church and Presbyterial treasurers having funds for our work will forward them promptly, so that we may send forward enough funds to the missionaries to enable them to take all necessary steps for their safety.

The first number of the children's missionary magazine was ordered to be issued in September, the name to be "The Children's Missionary."

A letter was read from Miss Charlotte Kemper, of Lavras, Brazil, reporting all well and expressing the nrgent need of a lady helper at that station.

Letters were read from Messrs. Robert Whyte and Dr. G. D. Mathews, of London, giving interesting acconnt of the visit of Mr. Sheppard and his party, and stating that they had made a profound impression in London, and that they had left in health and spirits on July 6th for Africa.

Letters were read from Messrs. Sydenstricker, H. M. Woods, M. H. Houston and J. L. Stuart, of China, reporting all well and the work progressing hopefully. Mr. Stuart's letter stated that at their last meeting they had sixteen applicants for baptism.

A letter was read from Rev. G.W. Painter, who is at Tacoma, Washington, stating that he was improving in health and hoped to be able to retnrn to his field before long.

A letter was read from Rev. W. B. McIlwaine giving interesting information of the work in Japan.

The usual routine bnsiness was transacted, and the Committee adjourned at 1 p. m.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Presbyterian Home in Charlotte :—The Charlotte Observer says : A Presbyterian home is soon to be an institution of the city. As previously stated in the Observer, Mr. R. B. Alexander, with generosity highly commendable, gave the Presbyterians of the three churches a honse and lot on North McDowell street, valued at $1,200, to be used as a home for old ladies and children, and to be known as the Presbyterian Home. This offer Mr. Alexander first made conditional on the First and Second churches raising $600 each as a guarantee that the place would be kept up. He has, however, agreed to give the lot anyway and let the churches pay the amounts stipulated as they can. The home will probably be opened by September 1st.

FAYETTEVILLE INSTITUTE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The Third Annual Elders' and Deacons' Institute for Bible stndy was opened on the night of August 6th, by sermon from Rev. A. D. McClnre, of Wilmington, N. C., on the subject assigned, "The Ministry of the Holy Ghost." This gave the Institute a good "send off." The subject was ably treated.

Tuesday Morning, Augnst 7th.

Is in keeping with the last few days, and it rains and don't rain, and the greater part of the morning is spent looking and waiting for the selected speakers, who with many others are detained on account of high water. Mr. McClure was used for the 11 o'clock service, and gave an excellent discourse on Persistence in Prayer

Dr. H. G. Hill, after waiting for the train, which was detained on account of a washout, came on by private conveyance, arriving about noon.

Tuesday Afternoon : Dr. Hill spoke on "The Bible, the Standard of Truth and Duty," which goes withont saying was good. Mnch sweet singing under the leadership of Mr. McClure. Short talks were made this afternoon.

At night : "How to obtain a Saving Knowledge of the Scriptures," was forcibly preached by Rev. D. Fairley. Thus closed the first day of the Third Institute.

Wednesday Morning, August 8th.

Prayer and praise services were conduected by Elder Hector McLean, of Laurel Hill church, reading of the Acts, and exhorting as to the duty of Elders, Deacons and Ministers as found in this chapter. Dr. P. H. Hoge, discussed the subject of "Israel in the land of Egypt." Rev. P. R. Law, then followed in the discussion of the "Covenant of Works." "Man's Depravity and Total Helplessness," was ably treated by Rev. W. B. Arrowood.

Afternoon : Praise services were conducted by Major J. R. McLean. Rev. A. D. McClure sang "Throw out the Life Line" in a most feeling manner, the choir taking the chorus, and after prayer he spoke on "Woman as a Factor in the Evangelization of the World." This subject was not on the program, but the Ladies' Missionary Society of Fayetteville Presbytery, through their representatives requested and insisted on a place for an address on the subject, and were delighted at their success, in securing an opportunity and such a ready, willing and effective speaker. After prayer and a song, "The Pastor and his Duties," were discussed by Rev. Jos. Evans, of Wilmington Presbytery in an able manner. After recess, at Mr. McClure's suggestion the whole Assembly of one thousand people or more stood and sang 'There is a Fountain Filled with Blood." Even many of the little children joined in this old familiar hymn.

Dr. Hoge then lectured on "Rameses the Great, or the Pharaoh of the Oppression," which was rich, as history, and delivered with the greatest of ease. It evinced careful and studied preparation by the speaker, and demonstrated that God is Supreme and overrules all things for His glory.

At night Rev. D. W. Fox, preached a sermon on Regeneration, and made an excellent exposition of that subject.

Thursday Morning, August 9th.

Prayer and praise services were conducted by Elder J. L. McLean. The subject discussed on yesterday by Rev. Mr. Evans, "The Pastor and his Duties" was taken up this morning by Dr. Hill who made a short but a good speech on the subject. At this juncture a request for prayer was read wherein a young man struggling against his besetting sin asked the prayers of the Institute in his behalf Dr. Hoge led in this prayer. Mr. McClure sang a song of prayer, "Jesus Saviour Pilot Me." Dr. Hoge then spoke upon "Jehovah and the God's of Egypt."

After recess, Rev. A. McQueen discoursed upon "Christ the Only Saviour," taking for his text, "God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross of Our Lord Jesus Christ." At the close of which Dr. J. B. Shearer led in prayer. This is said to be Mr. McQ's. best sermon. In the afternoon praise services were conducted by Capt. J. D. Malloy. The Office, Functions and Qualifications of Ruling Elders, was treated by Rev. A. N. Ferguson at this point.

Mutual Relations and Authority of the Eldership and Diaconate was opened up in a plain practical speech by Mr. J. W. McLauchlin, and was continued, elders and ministers, intermingling in discussing the subject.

This afternoon Dr. Hill as one of the committee in charge of the management of the Institute, made a report of its financial condition and showed the cost of the building and the calculated current expenses of this meeting. He referred to the liberality of Dr. J. L. McMillan in deeding to the trustees of this Presbytery the land on which the tabernacle rests and as much other ground as will be necessary for hitching purposes. On motion of Mr. Hector McLean, a vote of thanks was tendered Dr. McMillan and the building committee for what they had done for the Institute. This was responded to heartily by a rising vote.

At night Rev. W. F. Thom preached on Christ Our Righteonsness. A sermon full of good seed, which with God's promise will not return void.

Friday Morning, Aug. 10th.

This morning, Rev. J. S. Black seems to be acting chairman, and already new life seems to be infused into the day's work, from the fact that Mr. Black cannot introduce a subject nor speak in a dry manner, but with a smile on his own face he raises a smile on all faces before him, and with some little remark which he is sure to make, often causes harmless laughter. This is laid out for field day in discussing Sunday-school work in all of its phases. Prayer and Praise Service by Rev. J. S. Black.

Dnties of the Church to the Sabbath-school. The Parent's Dnties to the Sabbath-school. The Superintendent, his Qualification and Duties, were discussed by Revs. W. F. Thom, J. W. Johnson and Laymen J. M. McIver, A. D. McGill, Major M. McR. McLauchlin, of Cheraw, S. C., Capt. S. C. Rankin and Mr. Archie Johnson. These addresses and that of Mr. Jas. Dinwiddie, of Peace Institute, N. C., were spicy and full of life and zeal for the Master's work. Good thoughts, good counsel were thrown out and many duties and remedies pointed out, all of which let us hope will be put into practice, and good results be achieved.

A sermon on "Christ our Model," preached by Rev. A. J. McKelway, was a beautiful unfolding of our Saviour's life as absolutely perfect. This is the most applicable sermon or address of the occasion, fitting preacher and people of all stations of life alike Oh! that all people would imitate "Christ Our Model" in all avocations of life. Dr. Shearer led in a fervent prayer for God's blessing upon the word spoken.

Afternoon : Sunday-school literature and music was pleasantly, beautifully and intelligently discussed by Col. E. F. McRae.

The Teacher, his Qualifications and Duties, was well and truthfully presented by Rev. S. M. Rankin, one of the coming young ministers of Fayetteville Presbytery. After a song, Rev. P. R. Law spoke on "The Use of Our Standards in the Sabbath-school"—insisting on the use of the Confession of Faith and the Catechisms, of the Presbytertan Church, in the Sabbath-schools.

After recess, blackboard and pictorial illustrations were admirably given by Rev. A. J. McKelway. He recommended the use of Bible Lesson Pictures in all Sabbath-schools, as it is a good thing to teach by the eye as well as by the ear. Public discussion of Sabbath-school work was then entered into. Mr. Gilbert Patterson opening the discussion by saying that every phase of the work had been discussed, and nothing was left for him to say, but before he sat down it was evident that the subject had by no means been exhausted. Major McLean then made a few remarks and Rev. A. McMillan led in prayer.

At night among the many beautiful songs sung before the sermon, a solo (a prayer; No. 103 in No. 6) was most touchingly rendered by Mr. McClure. Rev. J. W. Johnson whose subject on the program was "Infant Salvation" thought it useless to discourse upon a subject that everybody believed, i. e., in salvation of infants. So he spoke upon the salvation of living children, which he thought should concern us all the more than of those who are "Safe in the arms of Jesus."

This the fourth day of the Institute has been the best in attendance and in discussion and in other ways. The weather has been fair, and with the exception of the intense heat, everything is as nice and pleasant as could be. The singing while not as strong as it ought to be—perhaps from the lack of books—is correct and melodious, two pianos and a cornet being used. Several good voices from different sections, are always found in their places in the choir. J. McL.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 8th, 1894.

The Senate this week, after devoting a small portion of two days to debate, passed a bill that in the opinion of many well-informed persons deals with a subject of quite as much or even more importance to the future welfare of the United States than the tariff, to which months have been devoted without reaching a conclusion. The bill in question is for the further restriction of immigration and the absolute prohibition of the coming of anarchists. The bill passed by the Senate is a substitute for the House bill providing for the inspection of all immigrants by U. S. Consuls, and both bills are now in the hands of a conference committee. The Senate bill is a long one, the first three sections being devoted to providing for the exclusion of anarchists and for the deportation under certain circumstances off those already in the country, and the last three to the duties of U. S. Immigrant Inspectors, which the bill provides for. The House bill makes the U. S. Consuls abroad do the inspecting. Which ever bill, or parts of either or both bills, shall meet the approval of the conference committee, it is certain that the perfected bill will retain the provisions against the coming of anarchists, who are, a very large majority, in and out of Congress, believe doing great harm, particularly in our large cities. No one who has made even the most casual investigation of the class of immigrants we have been getting during recent years can fail to heartily endorse this or any other measure that promises to keep out the worst of them and to improve those we do get. It is an admitted fact that the very worst classes in Europe have furnished a large percentage of the last ten years immigration, and it is more than suspected that many of them have practically been compelled to come, for the good of the countries they left. It requires no argument to show that such immigrants do not make good citizens.

A motley congregation, indeed, was that which confronted Rev. Dr. Corey and a portion of the Epworth League of the Metropolitan M. E. Church, last Sunday. The pulpit was an empty box, surrounded by poles from which floated small American flags, under the shade of the near-by trees. The congregation was made up of the unfortunate men who have been deluded by smooth-talking demagogues into coming to Washington with one or another of the so-called "industrial armies," and the services were conducted in their camp on the Virginia side of the Potomac, just opposite Washington. Dr. Corey based his remarks upon the brotherhood of men, and at the end of the exercises he asked all who were desirous of returning to their homes to raise their hands. Every hand went up. He then asked them if the present movement to secure railroad transportation for them was successful would they promise never to start from their homes on such foolish mission again. Once more every hand went up in token of assent. One of the men made a few remarks, thanking Dr. Corey and the members of the Epworth League, and saying that the men never would have come to Washington if they had not been grossly deceived. The men have paid dearly in personal suffering for allowing themselves to be deceived.

Judging from the number of letters and telegrams received by Congressmen and others in Washington on the subject, considerable anxiety is felt for the safety of American missionaries in China, Japan and Corea, owing to the war between China and Japan. Dr. J. W. Bachman, who is at present in Washington, was requested by the Executive Committee on Foreign Missions of the Southern Presbyterian Church to see Secretary Gresham and urge upon him the necessity of taking some steps for the protection of American missionaries in the countries named. Dr. Bachman had an interview with Secretary Gresham but it was not very satisfactory. Secretary Gresham told him that the same protection would be given the missionaries as is extended to all citizens of the United States abroad, but further than that he could make no promises; that this government had no power to especially care for one class of its citizens more than another; that the interests of the United States were being amply looked after by our war ships, and should the missionaries at any port seek refuge on board an U. S. vessel, protection would be accorded them. All of which might have been taken for granted without a word from Secretary Gresham. If our missionaries can get only the protection they ask for from our war ships they will not get much, as most of them are in the interior and would but put themselves in additional jeopardy by attempting to reach a port, without even the certainty of finding a U. S. vessel there should they succeed in reaching it. It does seem as though this government might demand that the governments of the countries in which they are should protect American missionaries. Other governments do it for their citizens. T.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

REV. PEYTON H. HOGE. D. D., Editor.

☞All communications for this department should be addressed directly to Dr. HOGE and not to the office of the PRESBYTERIAN.

Third Quarter.—Lesson IX.

Aug. 26.—First Miracle of Jesus.

John i.i 1–11. Commit vss. 1–5.

Golden Text. This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and manifested forth his glory.—John ii. 11.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. The connection between this lesson and the preceding is very simple. In i. 43, we are told that Jesus would go forth into Galilee, but first finds Philip, of Bethsaida, who in turn brings Nathanael, who was of Cana (chapter xxi. 2). They set out at once and on the third day (ii. 1) this event takes place in Cana.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: The wedding guests, vss. 1, 2; the domestic difficulty in which Mary turns to Jesus, vs. 3; his reply and her orders, vss. 4, 5; the miracle, vss, 6–8; its perfection, vss. 9, 10; its significance and results, vs. 11.

Third Step. Study with your helps any points needing explanation:

Vs. 1. Cana of Galilee. A village 8 or 9 miles northeast of Nazareth, and 60 miles from Bethabara.

The mother of Jesus. From this time always mentioned without Joseph. He had evidently died some time after Jesus' 12th year, when we last heard of him. Mary appears to have come to Cana especially to this marriage which was probably that of a relative, as she seems to have responsibility (vs. 3) and authority (vs. 5) in the management of the feast.

Vs. 2. Both Jesus and His disciples. Perhaps invited after their arrival; or, Jesus may have come to Cana especially to the wedding, and His disciples being with Him were asked afterwards; or, all may have been friends and previously asked, not as disciples of Jesus but as friends of the family; Nathanael was a neighbor, Philip a friend of his, and Andrew and Peter were Philip's fellow townsmen, while John and James were partners of Andrew and Peter.

Vs. 3. She turns to Jesus not only as one upon whose help and judgment she had been accustomed to rely, but, after the recent events, as one from whom miraculous aid could be expected. The last is evident from His answer.

Vs. 4. A verse of extreme difficulty. Not for its apparent harshness, for that is only in the English. The word for "Woman," was the most respectful form of address, equivalent to our "Madam," and the following words (lit. What to me and three?) is an orientalism whose significance depends chiefly on the tone of voice. It is evident from the following verse that she did not understand it as a refusal. The real difficulty is: (1.) That the changed relations implied in the question seem inconsistent with the following words, Mine hour is not yet come; and (2.) That these words seem inconsistent with the action that followed. The best explanation is found by comparison with a similar reply to a similar interference on the part of his brethren (John vii. 3–6). It is evident there that His "time" was the open manifestation of His Messiahship and the inauguration of the Messianic Kingdom. Such a thought He preceives lay hidden in Mary's appeal, and His reply is equivalent to this: Our relations are now changed; do not attempt to dictate my Messianic movement, or to press me into an inauguration of the kingdom before the time. It was a reproof, but a gentle one, and in his own quiet, unostentatious way He grants her request.

Vs. 6. Six waterpots. ....purifying of the Jews. Every Jew must have water poured over his hands before he could partake of food, lest he might have touched something unclean (ceremonially, and his food be ceremonially defiled by contact with his hands (Mark vii. 2–4). It was also a customary hospitality to wash the feet of guests on the removal of the sandals (Luke vii. 44.) One servant poured the water over the feet while another wiped them with a towel. For this the amount of water mentioned (from 100 to 150 gallons) would not be too much. The vessels were now empty, this ceremony having been at the beginning of the feast.

Vs. 7. Fill.....with water. It would have been as easy to make the wine without water: but (1) the knowledge of the servants that the vessels had been filled with water would make the fact of the miracle certain, preventing all possibility of fraud; (2) there is a fitness, or congruity—a conformity to the processes of nature—in using a kindred material as the vehicle of the divine power; (3) The significance of the miracle consisted in its being a transformation (see below).

Vs. 8. Governor of the feast. One of the guests selected by the host to preside. The same word, governor or ruler—it matters little which—should be used throughout.

Vs. 9. Called the bridegroom. The feast was at his house and was after the marriage. The procession (for which the virgins waited, Matt. xxv. 1 etc.) was from the home of the bride to that of the bridegroom; then followed the marriage and festivities, Matt. xxv. 10.

Vs. 10. Have well drunk. Implying satisfaction, not intoxication. Wine was the common beverage of the country—as we drink tea and coffee. The wines were light and intoxication was rare. The danger from its use now—of going on to use stronger liquors—did not then exist. It is one of the good things of God that have been made dangerous by man's peversions.

The good wine. Its excellence consisted in the richness of its flavor and not in its alcolic strength. Its great abundance (see note on vs. 6) not only made fraud impossible, but was to testify to the super-abundant gifts of the kingdom. At the same time it must be remembered that the Oriental laws of hospitality inuolved great multitudes of guests coming and going for several days.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson.

Fifth Step. Study the topics of the lesson in the light of God's Word.

1. Jesus in social life.
   - His presence at feasts, Luke v. 29; vii. 36; xii 37; xiv. 1, 7; John xii. 2 (compare Matt. xxvi. 6.)
   - Made a ground of accusation, Luke vii. 34.
   - His defence, Matt. ix. 15.
   - His approbation of, and blessing upon, marriage, Lesson, and Matt. xix. 4–6.
   - His presence in the home. Luke x. 38–42; John xi. 5; Matt. xxi. 17.
   - Christian consideration and helpfulness—recognizing the reality of social duties, difficulties and mortifications, Lesson, vss. 3, 8, 10.
   - Christian modesty and politeness, Luke xiv. 8.
   - Christian hospitality, Luke xiv. 12, 13; Heb. xiii. 2.
2. The new wine of the kingdom.
   - Transformed nature, vs. 9; 2 Cor. v. 17.
   - A richer life, vs. 10; Phil. iii. 7, 8 (1st clause).
   - Joyousness, Ps. civ. 15; Gal. v. 22; Phil. iv. 4.
   - The fruit of the Vine, John xv. 1.
   - Showing forth His glory, vs. 11; 1 Pet. ii. 9.
   - Foretaste of heaven, Matt. xxvi. 29.

Sixth Step. Whatsoever He saith unto you, do. If Mary could say this with simple confidence knowing Christ as yet only on His human side, how much stronger comes the counsel to us now that we know Him exalted above principalities and powers! And when we do His bidding the simplest acts become full of power and even at our words and deeds the transformations of grace take place.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Draw from the scholars the names of the company with Jesus, which will review the last lesson. Connect it with the purpose in i. 43. Locate Cana. Give, or draw from the scholars, an account of an oriental wedding. Do not magnify the temperance difficulty. Simply give facts, and the gospel story will take care of itself. Bring out the lessons in Bible Readings 1 and 2.

The News and Observer under management of Josephus Daniels came out in New dress on 12th inst. To both the retiring and the incoming editors we wish utmost prosperity and usefulness.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Our obliging correspondent "M." writes from Greensboro that the hearts of Guilford farmers are cheered at the prospect of the greatest corn crop of almost a life time, with also the greatest abundance of fine melons, and with a fine crop of potatoes of both kinds in sight. These products will go far to make up the very great almost total loss of the usual abundant "fruit crop" this county is noted for.

Black River is to have s new boat. The "Frank Sessoms" was launched last Saturday. She is the largest boat that has ever run on the upper river.

Sanford Express: A very rich vein of new coal was recently discovered on the line of the Glendon & Gulf Railroad. This coal is of a superior quality and will probably be worked in the near future.

Salisbury Herald; All the farmers we have talked with declare they never saw corn and cotton looking better. and that the season is as good as could be desired.

Liberty Herald: Crops are looking very fine and the prospect for cotton and corn is much better than it has been for several years Judging from the height of the corn in this section, farmers will find a need for ladders to gather their crops in the fall.

DOMESTIC.

The outlook for cotton and all cereal crops is better in the West Point, Miss., section than for years.

On Monday last the U. S. House of Representatives agreed to the Senate amendments to the tariff bill and thus ended the long wrangle.

The attorney general of Illinois has filed a petition looking to depriving the Pullman Palace Car Company of its charter. The petition sets forth that the charter, as granted, allowed the company to purchase, control and convey such property as was necessary to the successful prosecution of its business. The corporation has far exceeded its privileges, the document declares, owning a vast amount of real estate in the town of Pullman and vicinity, which is in no wise necessary to the business.

At a meeting of citizens of Fort Worth, Texas, it was decided to raise $50,000 bonus to secure the Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas Southern railroad.

By a thunder and rain storm at Winona, Miss., bridges were washed away and fences carried away like straw. Corn was blown down and cotton in low places inundated—causing great loss.

FOREIGN.

Canton, China, has both the cholera and the plague. The latter is fatal in nine cases out of ten and since March 40,000 persons have perished of it.

Catarrh of Stomach.

Tarboro, N. C., Aug. 14, 1893.

For several years I have been a great sufferer from indigestion and tried all sorts of medicines for relief. About two years ago I had a severe attack coupled with catarrh of the stomach. I was given up to die. I bought an Electropoise and within a week was at my office attending to my duties and rapidly improved, gained in a few months twenty-five pounds and am in better health to-day than I have been for twenty five years.

About two weeks ago I had a severe attack of sciatica, could not lie down. Suffered severely. I applied the Poise and on the following morning awoke relieved; continued treatment for a day or two and have not had one particle of pain since. I believe in it and would not for many times its cost be without it. I used it for cramp on one of my children with instant success. If people will use according to directions I believe it will do anything claimrd.

Yours truly,
THOS. E. LEWIS.

THE CHILDREN.

Only to keep them so,
Soft, warm and young:
The wee, feeble fingers,
The babbling tongue,
Tears that we kiss away,
Smiles that we win;
Careless of knowledge.
As guiltless of sin.

Only to keep them so,
Frank, true and pure;
Of our full wisdom
So lovingly sure.
Our frown all they shrink from,
Our fiat their law;
Our store, whence all gladness
They fearlessly draw.

Only to keep them so
Sweet hands that cling,
Sweet lips that laugh for us,
Sweet tones that ring;
Curls that we train to wave,
Feet that we guide,
Each fresh step a wonder,
Each new word a pride.

Only to keep them so!
Women and men,
Are the tinies that circled us
Lovingly then.
Gentle and good to us,
Patient and strong,
Guarding our weaknesses,
Bearing us long.

Tenderly mocking us,
Old thoughts and ways,
That scarcely keep measure
With life's rapid days.
Good to us—waiting,
Our sunset shows fair!
But, only to have them so,
Just as they were!

Items for Lady Readers.

I liked to see in London the things that I don't see at home, and the outings of royalty is one of them. I have always wanted to see Queen Victoria, not so much because she is a Queen as because she is the particular Queen that she is. She has ruled England ever since I was born, and a good deal longer, and she seems as much a part of England as Westminster Abbey or the Magna Charta. Not only is she a Queen, but she is a woman who has held a most trying position in the most admirable manner, and I have a profound respect for her. The day before I sailed for New York I saw by the paper that the Queen was to be at Richmond that afternoon to attend the christening of new-born Prince. "Here's my opportunity," said I, but at the same moment remembered that I had accepted an invitation to attend the unveiling of a bust of Keats, given by his American admirers to the parish church of Hampstead. I went to the latter and listened to all the speeches and music, saw Mr. Goose pull the sheet (veil it is called for picturesqueness) from the bust, and saw Mr. Du Maurier, Mr. I Zangwill, Mrs. Burnett, Mrs. W. K. Clifford and a host of other well-known writers crowd past the bust into the vestry room, and then I jumped into my cab and drove to the nearest district railway. While waiting at a station, where we changed cars, I suddenly remembered the christening party at Richmond. But where was Richmond from that particular point? The District Railway has so many branches that you never can tell till you ask where they may lead to. "Can I go from here to Richmond?" I asked the guard. He answered that I could. "When will there be a train?" "There is one coming now." "When will it get to Richmonp?" "In sixteen minutes." I looked at my watch. It was just 6.30. If I had luck I would arrive in time to see the royal departure for Windsor. The guard waved his flag, the engine blew its penny whistle, and I sprang into the nearest carriage. In just sixteen minutes we were at Richmond, and I saw by the crowds in and around the station that I was not too late. There was no getting in or out of the station, so I joined the crowd standing by one of the gateways. Every window in the street above was crowded with people, the buildings were decorated, and the street was filled with loyal British subjects. Just outside the gate stood the bear-skins, so I knew that the Queen would pass that way. In a few moments a body of mounted hussars dashed past; then there was a fanfare of trumpets, a wild cheer from the crowd, and past the gate flashed a vision of brancing horses, a stout woman with gray hair, Scotch gillies, native East Indias, more red-coats, and the Queen had come and gone. But I had seen her The crowd made a made rush for the other side of the station to see her walk over the carpet from the coach to the railway carriage, but it only saw her suite, of which the East Indians were the most picturesque feature. You may say that I didn't see much, but I saw the Queen of England, and I saw a show that I wouldn't have missed for a good deal. I also saw that her subjects were eager to do her homage, and I could not but regret that she gave them so few opportunities of seeing her. A glimpse of the Queen in London is seldom to be had, though she may often be seen driving about Windsor and its adjacent parks, and if you go to the castle of a Sunday afternoon to hear the band play, you are more than likely to see her at one of the windows opening on the terrace.—Jeannette L. Gilder, in The World.

Things Useful.

Chilled Watermelon.—Split a nice ripe watermelon into halves. Scoop it out, removing the seeds. Now, with a silver spoon, chop the watermelon into small pieces. Sprinkle over about a half-pound of powdered sugar and the juice of a lemon. Turn this into a freezer, pack with salt and ice, and stir very slowly for about fifteen minutes, until the watermelon is frozen like soft snow. Serve in punch glasses.

Raspberry Blancmange.—Smooth four tablespoonfuls of cornstarch in an equal quantity of milk, and add to it a quart of boiling fresh milk, to which as it thickens add four tablespoonfuls of sugar. When it is cooked, stir in half a cupful of juice from fresh berries, slightly sweetened. Turn into a mold and serve with sweet cream. The juice from canned raspberries may be used, but is not as good as the fresh fruit.

Equal portions of cornmeal and red lead mixed with molasses and spread on plates will destroy roaches." And it did. I put it in several dishes and set them on the floor, and at nine o'clock stole softly out to see if they ate it. The dishes were so covered with roaches that the mixture was scarcely visible. The next night there were fewer at the feast, and in a week not a roach was seen. I lived seven years thereafter in the same house and never saw one.

Sweet Pickles of Ripe Cucumbers.—The ripe yellow cucumbers, many of which are yearly left in the fields after the few selected for seed are gathered, make an excellent sweet pickle and delicious chow-chow. To make the sweet pickles, select ripe cucumbers, peel them lightly, cut them in lengthwise strips and remove the seed. Lay them in a light brine, made by adding a cup of salt to a gallon of water. In twenty-four hours remove them from the brine, rinse them, put them in a saucepan and cover them with vinegar. Cook the cucumbers in this sweet pickle very slowly on the back of stove till they are clear and transparent. Add whole cinnamon, cloves, a tablespoonful of cassia buds, a teaspoonful of mace blades, and two ounces of green ginger. Pour the pickle in a stone jar, cover lightly, and in two months' time begin to use it.

A LIST of reasons why you should insist upon having Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and nothing else in their place:—

Because they're the smallest, and the pleasantest to take.

Because they're the easiest in their ways. No disturbance, no reaction afterward. Their effects last.

They absolutely and permanently cure Biliousness, Indigestion, Constipation, Sick Headache, and Sour Stomach. The most common cause of Piles is constipation. By removing the cause a cure is effected.

I could get no relief night or day, until I commenced using your "Pleasant Pellets," and now for two years or more, I have not been troubled with the piles; if my bowels get in a constipated condition, I take a dose of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and the trouble is all dispelled by next day.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A REAL LITTLE ESKIMO BOY.

All the way down from the pole he came,
With a sealskin suit and a yard of name,
That each little everyday boy might know
How a little boy looks who's an Eskimo.

Think of a boy who's as big as that,
And never have tasted a thing but fat
And oil and blubber and reindeer steak—
Who never has heard of a buckwheat cake!

Jolly and broad is his dear little grin,
Showing the small boy fun within.
Maybe he'll tell you it isn't so bad
To be a real little Eskimo lad.

His stout wooden sled, all the long year round,
Goes screakety screak on the frozen ground.
His toes may be cold, and his fingers may freeze,
But he never is bothered with A. B. C's.

When he goes home, he'll astonish them there
With the curious things that they eat and wear
Down in the land when he went to show
How a little boy looks when he's Eskimo.

The Corn Lady's Story.

Little Bessie was out in the country, one week in October. Among the other pleasant events that happened to her was a visit with a little Corn Lady who lived in a large settlement of corn, near the barn.

Bessie had long admired the graceful, waving arms that the corn stretched out to her, and one day she decided to pay a visit to the field. The gentle rustling of the leaves and stalks welcomed her with a peculiar soothing melody. One old grandfather spied her first, and waved his arms in friendly greeting. The shaking of his loose-jointed head resolved itself into words, and Bessie declared that he said:

"Welcome, little girl, glad to see you. Come and let me introduce you to my family."

So Bessie bowed, too, when one after another of the tall heads about her bended low, and each murmured something she could not understand, but she thought it had a very pleasant sound.

She sat down and watched the curious motions that this strange family seemed to be making for her benefit. It was so soothing and delightful to be there among them that she took off her hat and lay down upon some soft leaves. Gradually their voices seemed to grow into a song, and Bessie was sung into slumberland by a beautiful lullaby in corn language.

It was then that she talked with the little Corn Lady. She never could tell just how they became so well acquainted, or how the conversation began. Bessie says the little lady spoke a pretty language, and thinks it strange that she could understand her so well. She told Bessie all about her own childhood, and if you will not mind I will tell you just what she said:

"Once upon a time there was no corn upon the earth and men had no knowledge of our family. We lived then on a distant planet, but hearing wonderful stories of this one, we decided to move here. At that time all this country was peopled with the red men. They welcomed us in their savage fashion, but so cordially that we never felt sorry we came.

"The story is told in our family about a certain brave Indian who thought a great deal about helping his people and desired very much to present them with a new kind of food. He was so earnest in his desire that he prayed daily for many days and went without food until he was rewarded by the appearance of one of our great-great grandfathers.

"This is the way he came and in this way have we all come since. A little feathery leaf appears above the ground. Then it pushes its way upward until it gets big enough to give a party, when it invites some of its little friends to visit it. They come up at this invitation and soon there are several leaves, and such a merry time as they have. They roll out from the first one and before long a stalk is supporting them. You might think we are fond of fighting because our leaves are so much like swords, but a fight or quarrel was never heard of in our family.

"Soon upon the stalk is seen the tiny beginning of the ear. Our ears are not like yours, you see, for they grow into food for you, and do not help us one bit to hear. These ears grow daily until the little grains of corn can be seen, like prim rows of bugs sitting on a log. All the while the ear is wrapped in its coat, called the husk, and on the end is its silky hair.

"Upon the top of the stalk are the blossoms, and when the proper time comes they shake down a kind of powder called 'pollen,' which the silk helps the ear to catch, and then the ear soon becomes full grown and perfect.

"We dry up in the fall, changing our beautiful green clothes for some dusty yellow ones. Then we wave our dry arms about and rattle a good deal until the farmer understands that it is time to gather the ears.

"You ask if we never get hungry? O, yes. But we get our food from the earth by means of little roots. They gather moisture and the sun draws it up through the stalk, and thus you see we are fed."

Just then a big gust of wind swept across the field and rattled the stalks so that Bessie was awakened from her sleep. She found that this long story that the Corn Lady had told her was a dream, but the strange thing about it is that the dream is all true.—Ram's Horn.

Flip.

"Stand, Flip! Stand, sir! Now listen well to what I say. This is the second time you have put your little nose in my lunch-basket and eaten up my buttered roll."

Here Flip came down all-fours, wagging his bushy tail, evidently well satisfied with his moral character.

"Stand, Flip! Stand this minute, sir! I'm not done scolding you, by any means. The next time you do me such a mean trick I'll tie you up and thrash you well! Do you hear, doggie? Well, Sir?"

Down came Flip again, as well pleased with himself as before. Peyton heard an unexpected sound of footsteps on the other side of the hillock, and sprang to his feet. Presently Brother Jo's broad back was seen moving across the meadow, and Peyton and Flip were soon at his side. Peyton wondered if Brother Jo had heard Flip's scolding; but, if he had, nothing was said about it.

Nothing, at least, on the walk; but that evening, before the lamps were lighted, as the family gathered in the twilight, Peyton was startled to hear the familiar sound:

"Stand, Flip! Stand, sir! and listen to what I say!" It was Brother Jo, sitting over at the west window; and Flip could be seen outlined against the evening sky, standing obediently on his hind legs.

"Is it you, Flip," said Brother Jo, "that uses my pen and gets it inky halfway up the handle? Is it you that tears up the day's paper into kite-tails? that turns down the corners of my books, and makes greasy finger-marks on them? Do you leave my door open, and drop crumbs on the floor, and play in my fire, and eat the apples off my table? Somebody does these things, Flip; and, if you can find out who it is, let me know, and, when your master ties you up for a thrashing, I'll thrash the fellow that gives me so much trouble."

Flip, turned loose, flew over to Peyton. "Flip's found him for you, Brother Jo," said the little boy, laughing, but with a red face, which the dusk hid. 'If Flip needs one thrashing, it looks as though his master needed six."

"Maybe that will teach the little master to be easy on people's failings when he stops and counts up his own," said Brother Jo, kindly.

Maybe it did.—Sunbeam.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT FOR ALSA SOUTHERLAND, ESQUIRE.

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst, on Wednesday, 18th day of April, 1894, at his home in Rose Hill, N. C., of La Grippe, our beloved brother and ruling elder, Alsa Southerland, Esq. Therefore Mt. Zion church puts upon record this testimonial of this deligent and faithful colaborer. We desire to bear witness;

1. To his earnest and self-denying labors as an elder of our church for many years,

2. To the beautiful resignation which he displayed in the affliction of his old age, and the warm sympathy and generous aid which he continued to give to the Master's cause, even after he was called to lay down the battle and the strife.

3. To the victorious faith which sustained him in his last hours. Mt. Zion church extends its hearty sympathy to the bereaved family and praises God for the earnest work and victorious death of this honored member of His kingdom.

By order of the Session, May 13th, 1894.

PROGRAMME OF THE ELDERS' AND DEACONS' INSTITUTE APPOINTED BY MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

To be Held at Steel Creek Church, Mecklenburg County, N. C., Aug. 21-23rd, 1894.

To the Elders and Deacons of Mecklenburg Presbytery. Greeting.

The committee appointed by the Presbytery take pleasure in submitting the following programme. But first:

A WORD FOR HEARERS.

Instead of a week's session, as held last year, the present Institute will last only three days. Therefore, we suggest that in justice to yourself and the programme as prepared, you endeavor to be present at the very first session on Tuesday, Aug. 21st, at 10 a. m. Again.

A WORD FOR SPEAKERS.

As these papers are neither intended to be exhaustive nor exhausting; but largely to open and stimulate discussion, it is hoped that they will not consume more than fifteen or at the outside twenty minutes in reading. A few exceptions are noted in which writers have been asked to give more time to certain important topics. Again

A WORD TO SINGERS.

Bring your Gospel Hymns Nos. 5 and 6. The music is in good hands. You may expect a treat.

Yours fraternally,
THE COMMITTEE.

Say Soes.

Kidneys are nicest cooked on the gridiron. After they are taken off a little piece of butter should be placed in the inside of each, and a tiny pinch of chopped parsley dropped on the butter.

Dry meals, with hot water (or weak tea or coffee, but very hot) two hours afterwards, is said to be a cure for many stomach ailments.

MOTHERS.

"One good mother is worth a hundred schoolmasters," said George Herbert. Men are what their mothers make them. But if the mothers are peevish and irritable, through irregularities, 'female weakness," and kindred ailments, they find no pleasure, no beauty in the care of their babes. All effort is torture. Let all such, who feel weighed to the earth with "weaknesses" peculiar to their sex, try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. They will find the little ones a delight instead of a torment.

To those about to become mothers it is a priceless boon. It lessens the pains and perils of childbirth, shortens labor and promotes the secretion of an abundance of nourishment for the child.

When suffering from sick headache put a teaspoonful of liquid ammonia in a cup of hot water. Take a teaspoonful every hour or half-hour, if needed. It gives great relief.

The following is highly recommended as an effective insect destroyer: Put alum in hot water and boil until dissolved, then while it is hot apply with a brush or feather to the cracks where the pests are found. Ants, bed-bugs, &c., are killed by it, though there is no danger from poisoning.

WANTED—A GOOD PERMANENT LOCATION FOR A SCHOOL OR COLLEGE.

A Presbyterian minister (wife and one child) thirty-seven years of age, with several years' experience in the school room, desires a good location (prosperous and healthful) for a school, or college, either male, or female, or for both sexes. Would undertake the school on his own responsibility, or under a Board of Trustees. The school building would have to be rent free, a good local patronage would be very desirable; and there would have to be the proper facilities for boarding pupils.

The school ought to open in September, or October.

The minister would prefer a location where he could serve a church, or churches.

OBSERVATIONS.

The waters assuaged and the attendance at the Institute grew from Thursday until Sabbath, when the crowd was variously estimated from 1,500 to 3,000 people. They came from all points of the compass on foot and by all manner of conveyances except the railway train. Happily no trains run on the Sabbath on the railroad which passes Red Springs. It was a painful surprise to learn that a Sunday excursion was run to our city of Wilmington on that same Sabbath day. If we do not protest and stop this Sabbath desecration our conservative Old North State will rush to ruin as so many are doing. Israel was in captivity until the land kept its Sabbaths which the people had taken. As certainly a curse rests against any people who desecrate this day. Chicago opened the exposition on the Sabbath day under plea of giving good to the laboring man. Within a year the harvest of anarchy has been reaped in the suffering of that same laboring man and the firebrand has heaped ruins where the beautiful buildings stood.

What rapid advances are seen in means of travel. A nice horse and buggy is all well enough for a pleasant short ride, but for a long journey we must have the vestibule train like the magnificent Atlanta special on the Seaboard Air Line, and a speed of forty to sixty miles an hour. No time to realize the importance of towns and cities like Clinton, S. C., with our Presbyterian paper and our Presbyterian orphanage and college and missionary training school, the blessing of God on the life and labors of Dr. JACOBS, still in the prime of lite, or Athens, Ga., and its university and distinguished Presbyterian names, and we are in Atlanta. The growth of this fine city is due very much to its facilities of railway travel and transportation. Once there we found the electric street railways hurrying the weary or the busy ones in every direction, to work or business, or parks, or the country. Instead of taking a day for sight-seeing by the older and idler way in open carriage, for a tithe of the expense, we can in a few hours from some convenient centre go and return in all directions and see all the public works, buildings and grounds.

This will include the church of Dr. BARNETT and that of Dr. STRICKLER, facing the capitol, whose lofty dome and well planned and constructed walls and apartments and elegant furnishing are the more impressive from the fact that all was done within the appropriation. It is one more evidence of the thrift of the people and their honesty. The interior, massive and beautiful, has noble decoration and portraits of distinguished citizens of the State including that of the first governor OGLETHORPE. The cheery ex-Confederate, State librarian Mr. MILLEDGE, has our thanks for his great courtesy and proved himself as chivalrous in peace and surrounded with weapons of peace as he proved himself courageous in the midst of war. The portrait of their grandfather, by his gifted sister who fell dead in her devotion to her class, hangs on the library walls. He it was who captured at Savannah when a youth the powder that gave the States our Bunker Hill. In another room is a framed commission of Governor OGLETHORPE to the father of this youth appointing him Captain of cavalry, one hundred and forty years before this great grandson received in 1883, the handsome silver set near by as testimonial of his comrades in arms for bravery in the war between the States. Another portrait of this capitol is that of Mr. STEPHENS, of delicate frame, in his rolling chair. Out in the cemetery which you may see is a monument worthy of special mention. It is a fine copy of the recumbent lion of Lucerne cut out of solid marble. It must be seen to be appreciated. It adds the features of the lion's paws on the Confederate battle flag and a few old muskets and a sword. The monument was secured as the last result of the labors of the wife of our kind friend, the librarian. She has been an invalid for more than twenty years and may have secured her own monument in this which is but the last of many memorials. This one is doubly attractive: "To the unknown Confederate dead." It was unveiled last year. How much does the world owe to its invalids! If only there were the patience, perseverance and persistence among those who are in good health and strength there would be untold blessings and beauty bestowed on mankind. Many a desert would blossom as the rose.

While in Atlanta we must not forget that one of the two most important branches of the work of our Assembly has its headquarters here. The Home Mission work in charge of Dr. CRAIG and his committee is organized and laboring to overtake the destitutions of our weaker Presbyteries, to maintain our feebler churches and to carry the gospel to the heathen at our doors, and in the compass of this fair South land for which our brave men fought and noble women suffered. The war is long passed. To its survivors there is a privilege of living over its deeds of courage and endurance without their bitterness of battle and of blight, but our generation must arise in noble appreciation of all that past with high resolve to make these times, times of peace. Our time to cement a common country in a common cause to evangelize the enemy not in civil affairs, but in the camp of our common foe to be conquered not by force of arms, but by the story of love and "the fruits of righteousness" "sown in peace of them that make peace." To do this our Southern Church must increase her gifts to carry on this work which Dr. CRAIG represents, or stand silent when the MASTER calls us to give account of our stewardship. What can we say then? Let us hope that the committee for Red Springs next year will give special attention to this cause in its arrangements. Our elders and deacons may meantime overtake the destitutions near at hand and give to send the workers to the borders.

By this same overland rapid transmit through Georgia under Lookout Mountain, across a corner of Alabama and the States of Tennessee and Kentucky our greetings are from a county seat of the Breckenridge district. We fear this disgraced public man will have disgraceful following enough in a three cornered party fight to fix shameful disgrace on the good people. These fear this and cry for deliverance. It may be that this curse across the way, the open saloon in this lately dry town, is party to this disgrace. Certain it is that the saloons of this town make rowdyism and profanity where we saw decency and order two years ago. It is the same everywhere. The saloon is the source and centre of personal profanity, political strife and public deterioration. The Institute is happy in this respect that Robeson county is a prohibition county. We may wisely abstain for our own sakes and the good of others and seek to persuade our neighbors and friends to put away the accursed thing for righteousness sake.

HERE AND THERE.

SATOLLI, WHO HAS BEEN CALLED THE American Pope, has not yet reached the point where that title is appropriate, but the point will be reached if as is now reported the Pope makes his delegation absolute and sovereign. Now SATOLLI is answerable to the congregation of the Propaganda; under the action above referred to he will be subject to the Pope alone.

MUCH HAS BEEN MADE OF THE LATE pronunciamento of Mgr. SATOLLI concerning the liquor traffic—that is endorsing a bishop who forbade any Catholic society to give any office to a liquor-seller. Given its full force and effect this does not even bring the Roman Catholic church up to the plane of Protestantism in that particular diocese. It does not at all affect the status of liquor-sellers elsewhere. In New York for instance, where the large majority of liquor seller, are Romanists, no such order is issued. In fact the general effect designed is to create a specially favorably impression, in behalf of the Roman Catholic church, among those who will never look to see whether or not these brave words of denunciation are ever followed out in acts that are becoming to them. The Roman Catholic Church, powerful as it is will not enter upon a fight with the liquor-traffic. Its interest does not, in fact, lie in that direction.

WE FIND THIS CLIPPING IN OUR exchange. It is so Jackson-like that we regard it as perfectly genuine and give it to our readers accordingly:

When "Stonewall" Jackson was the unknown teacher at the Military School, Lexington, Va., an old comrade passed a night at his house, having with him a little daughter, only four or five years old. It was the first time the child had been away from her mother, and Major Jackson showed the greatest solicitude lest she should miss the mother's care. He wanted the little one committed to Mrs. Jackson's keeping for the night, but she was shy, and clung to her father. During the darkness and stillness of midnight the guest was startled to find some one in his room; it was the soldier professor, who had crept stealthily in to see that the little girl was snugly tucked under her covers and was not grieving for the absent mother."

WHERE IS DEBS? THE WATERS OF oblivion are fast gathering around him, and his work will soon be remembered only as a warning against the folly of accepting the leadership of mouthy demagogues—for all the demagogues are not among the politicians. Fortunately the country is fast recovering from the effect of the strikes and the stubborn disregard of Congress for the bill of the people. The crops, in the South at least, are abundant, and they have been made at less expense than usual. Because of these things, for which let GOD be thanked, the people are recovering their spirits, and better times seem just ahead. We sincerely hope the coming season, as now appears probable, will be one of more ease and comfort to all classes of toilers, in country and in town alike, than many that have preceded it.

MAJOR WORTH ORDERED A PRIVATE named CEDARQUIST to take part in target practice on Sunday. The private refused on the ground that army regulations forbade such exercise on the Sabbath. The private was taken into custody for disobedience. President CLEVELAND ordered the private released and Maj. WORTH to be tried by court-martial.

THE COURT-MARTIAL LAST WEEK acquitted Maj. WORTH on the ground that the orders to CEDARQUIST were "warranted by the exigencies of the occasion, and that the proclamation of President LINCOLN was not in force at present, not being part of the army regulations."

GENERAL BROOKE IN REVIEWING THE findings says:

"The reviewing authority desires that the result reached shall not be understood as sanctioning in any degree unnecessary Sunday labor in the army, but rather as the announcement of the principle that where an officer of the army is vested by law or orders with discretion in the performance of official duty, and he honestly and with reason exercises that discretion, he is not to be held criminally respon sible for any errors of judgment he may have comitted."

IT MAY BE NOTED THAT THE REVIEWING authority does not intimate that the "orders were warranted," but that an officer honestly exercising discretion in the performance of official duty should not "be held criminally responsible for any errors of judgment, he may have committed." It will be apt to put a stop to target practice on Sunday.

LET NO ONE SAY THE TIME WILL never come when the sale of liquor will be banned as the sale of other poisons now is. Some forty years ago, Mississippi, those will bear me out who knew Mississippi then, was as far from being a temperance State as is possible to conceive. North Carolina was as far ahead of it on that line as Mississippi is ahead of North Carolina now. Think of it! Hinds county has decided for prohibition—and in six counties only, out of seventy-five in the State, is the sale of liquor allowed by law. It can not be very long before Mississippi will be totally clear of the disgrace which inevitably hangs around the sale of liquor. It might go without saying that Mississippi is fast going ahead in educational and religious matters.

THE HERALD AND PRESBYTER IS right when it says:

"Many tell us that in these days of intense activity, when the demands upon the ministry are so great, frequent changes are necessary. No man, it is said, can endure the continuous pressure in one place for more than three or four years. He must then get relief by going to a new field and working over the material that he has gathered. For the brethren whose highest ambition is to be popular preachers this may be true; but for the upbuilding of the local church and of the interests of religion in a specific locality, there is nothing so favorable as a long pastorate. When the right man gets into the right place, he ought to stay there. And if he does, he may make a record over which angels will rejoice.

WE HAVE BEEN REQUESTED, IN THE interest of good government, to publish the address of the late Populist Convention to the people of this State. We must decline. We cannot publish political documents for any party. The PRESBYTERIAN in such matters is absolutely neutral.

Seeing God.

How wonderfully rich are the words of Jesus! It is like gazing long into the depths of a pure spring to ponder upon them. From unseen sources, ever fresh, increasingly reviving, clear, and sweet, they issue, a well of eternal life. No wonder the people as he talked marveled, and said, "Never man spake like this man." How his words grow in meaning as we think upon them as our own experience deepens! It may be that in his early ministry he gave to his disciples the simpler truths as we find them in the Sermon on the Mount, reserving the more deeply spiritual for his later teaching, as recorded by St. John. And yet what richer depths than in the beatitudes are anywhere else revealed? We hear him saying: "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God"—a teaching so simple and incontrovertible that a child may receive it. In order to see the Father's face and dwell with him forever in his sinless heaven, of course we must be good and holy. Who could believe otherwise?

But our first reception of this truth is very limited. It embraces only the conditions of our future blessedness; only the pure in heart can see his face there. But as we grow in the knowledge of Jesus, as we try out his doctrine in daily living, what infinite depths we find. The blessedness of a heart cleansed from sin, sincere and teachable, is, we discover, a comprehensive "seeing" everywhere, in all things, here and hereafter. The truth so very simple deepens as we gaze beyond our power to fathom its crystal depths. As we consider what seeing God in all things at all times means, with what longing do we cry out for the pure heart that thus beholds him behind the clouds of mysterious providences, holding with unerring wisdom and strength the government of men and nations, never losing sight of the divine love, the all-controlling force in the universe which will ultimately bring disorder into righteous harmony.

A heart made pure by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit sees God in the beauty of the things which he has made as others cannot see him. A refined nature or poetic mind may realize the beauty and get great enjoyment from it.

But when the loveliness of the landscape, the trill of the birds, the scent of the flowers, become, not only revelations of beauty, but also of the Author of all that is beautiful and good, with what exquisite delight do they fill the soul. The Christian's part,

> "In all the pomp that fills
> The circuit of the summer hills," is a rich and full possession. "The wonder and bloom of the world is God's free gift" to him in a peculiar sense. The overarching sky suggests the brooding love and care of God; the trees whisper of him; the mysteries in flowers and stones fill him with reverent awe; all nature, all experience, are touched with a light unknown to eyes upon which the divine finger has not pressed with the command, "Be opened." "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God."—Selected.

"Holiness" That Don't Help a Revival.

That kind that don't pay debts.

That overreaches in business.

That ignores the the golden rule.

That talks loud and practices low.

That rests in the theory of salvavtion while destitute of the experience.

That is nettled if it cannot boss.

That is afraid of Madame Grundy.

That "flares up" or gets "miffed" when crossed.

That, like Jacob, will cheat to get the best of a bargain.

That tries to pick the motes out of others' eyes when a beam is in its own.

That don't keep its promises.

That dresses like the world, gossips like the world, backbites like the world, and votes like the world.

That cares more for the glory of self than the glory of God.

Those who profess salvation and do the above things are in the way of revivals of religion, and should be "created anew in righteousness and true holiness."—Selected.

TEMPTATION.

Oh, weary way! so dark, so hard, so rough;
With trials sore beset,
Like those which in that wilderness
Our Master met.

We struggle on and struggling fall,
Unless we look above
To him who sends his messengers
[illegible]nd of love.

We [illegible]ote too much the stones, the thorns,
Along our road;
[illegible]ands outstretched

[illegible] who hears each moan
[illegible] sore-tried breast;
Oh, may we know those messengers
Of love and peace and rest!

To thee they came when thou hadst won
Thy conflict brief.
To us they come in every weary hour
Of trial or of grief.

O angel ministers who strengthen us!
Forever are ye near,
In all our weary pilgrimage
Through desert drear.

O angel messengers! stay ever close;
Give eyes to see.
O Father-heart! give strength to bear,
And peace in thee.

Bits of Local Color.

BY AN IMPRESSIONIST.

The streets of Antwerp, where we disembarked, were more quiet than those of Philadelphia on Sunday. There was not the rush of church-going people, no rough children. Squads of soldiers passed with bands of music. At an omnibus-stand, people quietly entered the coaches, and waited their turn to start.

Many of the small stores were open, but seemed to be doing little business. Our artist eyes were enchanted with the arrangement of goods in the windows,—the butchers,' pastry-cooks,' etc.,—the massing of colors. The color of the buildings—light stone, with tiled roofs—gives a softened look to everything. No red brick, no dazzlingly white marble, no crudeness, offends the eye.

June is, of all months, the time to see the country at its best. That which lies between Antwerp and Paris (Picardy, in France) is very beautiful, and is like a succession of flower-gardens. There are no fences, though the rows of small, stiff-looking trees seem to serve as boundary lines. Brilliant red poppies (single), blue corn-flowers (bachelor's buttons), and our white daisies, grow everywhere, even along the banks of the railroad, in great profusion, varied with yellow flowers of dandelion shape and pink candy-tuft. All the land is carefully cultivated, and is divided into plats, like a vegetable garden. These are a study in the massing of colors, and one can easily understand why, in Paris, flowers and fruits are offered for sale each massed by itself; for that is the way they are seen in nature. One sees an immense patch of red poppies, one of daisies, one of corn-flowers, and at a distance these are simply masses of vivid color. The flowers grow more close together than in America. The grain-fields, too, are filled with these flowers, scattered among the grain. The trees are trimmed close, and kept small, so that the effect is of one landscape garden. The pretty, low, cream-colored stone cottages, with red roofs, add to the beauty.

One can hardly look out of the window, in Paris, without seeing several hand-barrows, made like a large flat tray, in charge of bare-headed women, in which fruits and flowers are displayed for sale. While there may be several varieties on the same barrow, each one is bunched by itself,—mignonette, forget-me-nots, carnations, roses,—almost every flower we know, and all large and fine specimens.

The fruit is as fine as the flowers. Strawberries, cherries, peaches, apricots, raspberries, are very large, of fine texture and most delicious flavor, and are as perfect as if prepared for an exhibition. They are displayed in the stores in pretty baskets lined with green leaves, and are nicely served at the restaurants; for instance, a pyramid of large strawberries on a green leaf (maple, perhaps), with raspberries on the top and around the base.

To St. Cloud, by way of the river Seine, is a delightful ride in the steamboat, and we went there on Saturday, the boat stopping at Sevres, where the china is manufactured. Saturday is the day selected for weddings by the middle classes, who keep up the customs of their forefathers, and do not try to imitate the rich. The wedding party is arranged in couples, and walks in an orderly procession, headed by the bride and groom, followed by the parents, then the relatives and friends. They go first to the civil magistrate, then to the church, and then go, either in one large carriage or in hacks, to some park to enjoy themselves. At St. Cloud we saw six of these parties, as we sat in front of a restaurant in the park there, and watched them with a great deal of interest. Some of them walked demurely past us, in spite of the exertions of a baritone singer to induce them to stop, but others were evidently bent on having the best time possible.

The bride wears a white dress,—of alpaca, cashmere, or satin, made with a demi-train, which is pinned up in the back, to allow freedom in walking,—and her hair is dressed high, with orange-blossoms. Her white slippers seem hardly the thing for walking over the pebbly paths. The rest of the party have new clothes for the occasion, some of these as pretty as one sees anywhere. The men wear black suits and high black hats.

Leaving the carriages outside the park, the party forms in procession and walks down the avenue of lindens, stopping at pleasure at the merry-go-round, where they all take a ride, then marching to a cafe for refreshments.

Another party came dancing down the path in high spirits, the bridegroom full of antics. We went close to them, as they stopped in a little grove. They formed in a ring, and ran around to the music of penny whistles and gay paper horns, which the men were provided with. Then the ring broke into a serpentine march. Finally they all sat down in a half-circle, the men standing at the base, and sang several times, solo and chorus, accompanied by the horns and whistles. They had a very good time in a very decorous way. This party had decorated themselves with small tambourines hung by red ribbons. Both families unite to pay expenses.

Well, Paris is fine! Our casement window opens on the street, and carriages are passing day and night. We can see the outdoor life of the people who sit outside the cafes eating and drinking. We notice the absence of street music, street children, and flies. There is a general feeling of cleanliness. The boys wear a black apron, made with a yoke, fastened in the back, and falling to the knee. They wear short hose, leaving the calf of the leg bare. It was impossible to get near the streets where the funeral of M. Carnot passed, but we saw many of the wreaths which were sent by the delegations, and were mostly immense, carried on stretchers by four men. These were of artificial flowers, with a background of real palms and evergreens. Some were over two yards in diameter.—S. S. Times.

The Luxury of Kindness.

Kindness has been defined as "the overflowing of self upon others." We change places, as it were, with others for the time. We seek to do for their relief or happiness as if the want or the misery in the case were our own. Thus the law of kindness is best embodied in the Golden Rule. True kindness however is more than deeds and relief measures. It is sympathy and tenderness—the actions of the spirit Benevolence, deeper than its popular sense, means wishing well. If kindness runs to help, besides the help it brings there is the encasement of love in which it is brought. And thus the blessedness it confers is a two-fold one.

Then there is the power which belongs to kindness. It is one of the great factors in the life of man. Just as sunshine and rain for his work in the soil; just as medicine and attention to hygiene for his body; so, for the joy and healthful development of his spirit is the influence of the kindness of his fellowmen. Soured and embittered through all his life is that person who, however ample his resources to preserve him from want, yet has been unaccustomed to the gentle deeds and the sympathies and the tender grace of his fellows. On the other hand, how do such kindly manifestations tend to improve one, and to evoke responsively the better points of his character. This is the talismanic charm which has opened many a door whose thick plates were deaf to all violent knockings, and whose hinges swung not to any other pressure.

Kindness to our fellows also greatly tends to incite them to similiar deeds. As they reflect upon the ever cherished experience of goodness received at your hands, the sublime rule of kindness, "Do as you would be done by," by a slight adaptation readily suggests to their conscience, "Do as you have been done by." The remembrance of their receiving brings with it the thought of their giving, and applies to the conscience the lesson of the parable, "Go thou and do likewise." Thus the exercise of kindness propagates and brings forth after its kind and throws out ever new roots.

By kindness unto others too, we bring good unto ourselves. Such acts leave a blessing as well as impart it. No one shows kindness but has its reflex influence in his own spirit. The great poet has said, "Mercy is twice blessed. It blesses him that gives as well as him that receives." And in higher wisdom and with still greater scope of benediction has the Saviour pronounced, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." There is a luxury in doing good when one is cheerful in his beneficence. And if kind deeds should not come back in reciprocated favors or returns of any kind, not even in thanks, yet verily he has not lost his reward. How pleasant to think that amidst the abundant sorrows of our Lord Jesus when upon our sin cursed-earth, this must have been one of His great joys—that He had such power of doing good! We delight to picture Him proclaiming the acceptable year of the Lord, healing the broken-hearted, preaching deliverance to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, setting at liberty them that were healed. We think of the joy He brought to others in healing the sick and giving sight to the blind and recalling the dead to their desolate homes. But let us think also of the joy He must have brought to Himself in thus walking in the path of kindness—"going about doing good."—Mid-Continent.

The Day Dawn in the Sun.

Morning begins with the swing of the earth into the first glimmering rays of light from the sun. Spiritual light begins with the first approaches of the soul to Jesus Christ. All true converts are alike in two respects; they were once in the darkness of depravity and unbelief; their day-dawn began with the penitent turning of the heart to the Saviour. The Holy Spirit drew them and they moved Christward. Conversions have been very numerous lately, but no two persons have had exactly the same experience. With one person the first step was into an inquiry room. With another person it was the re-opening of a long-neglected Bible, or a betaking himself to honest prayer. A third began with a resolution of total abstinence from the decanter, for Jesus Christ cannot dwell in a soul that is drowned in drink. With thousands the first step is the banishment of some besetting sin; and as the sin went out the light broke in. No seeker after salvation ever finds peace until he has renounced his favorite sins, and done it in order to obey Christ. Obedience to Jesus Christ is the test of conversion.

Some people are consciously converted suddenly. They can fix the hour and the place and all the attendant circumstances of their new birth. They can point to the very arrow of truth that pierced the heart, and to the precise sermon, or prayer, or conscientious act that brought the healing balm. With the majority of Christians I feel quite confident that their experience in conversion is literally like the daybreak. A faint gleam of thoughtfulness grew into earnestness, grew into penitence, and enlarged into a fuller, deeper sense of the soul's need of Christ; then as the soul came on towards Jesus, the ruddier hues of hope appeared, and some flushes of joy kindled up; and the soul discovers that the night of unbelief has ended and the day-dawn has begun. "I have come to the conclusion," said a very intelligent Christian lady to her pastor, "that it is best for me that I have never yet been able to fix the exact time of my conversion; I am afraid that I should trust too much to it if I could. Now I trust to nothing but to continued faith and to living in happy fellowship with my Saviour."

Too many new converts are apt to think that the dawn is enough, that they have reached a certain desired point and need only to remain there. As well might our globe pause in its motion when a faint streak of morning light is reached instead of rolling on into the perfect day. Conversion is not the point of termination; it is the point of departure. It is a start. No one has a right to say, 'Now I trust that I am converted; the work is done; I am saved, and I need only join the church and ride on towards heaven.' This wretched mistake has dwarfed many a church member for life. They never outgrow their babyhood. Infancy is very beautiful in its place; but it must not last too long. I am charmed with the bright prattle of our little two-year-old grandson, who is playing with his toys and 'choo-choo railroad cars' in yonder nursery; but that same lively prattle ten years hence would not be so pleasant. 'When I was a child, I spoke as a child,' said the great apostle, 'but now I have put away childish things.' The first timid, brief, and rather incoherent prayer of a new convert in a social meeting is very delightful. It is music to a pastor's ears, and perhaps to the ears of angels likewise. Yet we should not be satisfied to hear the same prayer from him after ten years of sound Christian experience. Even Paul, a quarter of a century after his new birth into Christ, declares that he was still reaching forth unto the things that were before, and pressing towards the goal. The path of the Christian is like unto a shining light 'that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.'

Progress is the law of true piety. The 'convert' who never grows an inch in grace may well doubt whether he was ever really converted. And let the genuine convert never forget that as the germ of his spiritual life came from Christ, so his advance into godly, useful living will depend on his drawing closer and closer unto Christ. No amount of gas-light or electric burners can create a morning in this city; we must swing on towards the sun.

So it is in the nearer approach to and closer conformity unto the Divine Saviour that a convert advances into a robust Christian. We only shine, at best, by reflected light. All brightness and beauty come from our Sun of Righteousness; the plants of grace thrive only under His warmth. My young brother or sister, remember that Christ's love to you was an orb that beamed and burned before you ever beheld it. Christ's love turned your darkness into dawn. Christ's love to you is the unfailing shaft of light that shall stream into the valley of death-shade when you are passing over that river that hath no bridge. At evening-time it shall be light.

A rough old fisherman, who stammered in his speech, used to pray often in the weekly meeting, and one expression was always introduced into homely, fervent prayers—'Oh, Lord—lead us—more and more—into the love of Jesus—for never was love like that.' The nearer the old fisherman drew towards it the brighter and warmer it became; and now he stands—with certain other fishermen from Galilee—in the noonday glory of his everlasting King!

'Love here is but a faint desire,
But there the spark's a flaming fire;
Joys here are drops that passing flee;
But there an overflowing sea.

'Here shadows often cloud my day,
But there the shadows flee away.
My Lord will break the dimming glass,
And show His glory face to face.

—Rev. Dr. Cuyler.

How to Kill a Good Work.

In the first place, prevent its being proposed. Diffuse such an atmosphere of indifference and hostility that no one will venture to suggest such a thing. It is very necessary (from your point of view) not to do anything in particular. Inertia is one of the great properties of matter.

2. If, in spite of your indifference, some incautious soul proposes to do something, put on the extinguisher at once. Remark that the present is a very inopportune time for such work. It is just the season for spring house cleaning, or else having and harvesting has just begun, or the fall work is pressing too hard, or the weather is too cold to undertake anything. Or, if none of these objections are seasonable, remark that most every one has company now. Be sure to say that there is enough to be done at home without outside work.

3. If this fails to take effect, say that the work proposed is all well enough, but it ought to be done in a different way. This is a very powerful objection. Of course, it is better a good work should not be done at all than be done in any way but the right one. (As to which is the right way, any way suggested is the wrong way, and any way especially difficult or impossible is the only right one). If any one asks what you consider to be the right way, don't condescend to inform him. Wisdom is always more impressive when it is an unknown quantity; besides, you can't be expected to provide brains for the community.

4. If, in spite of this, the matter makes headway, impugn the motives of the workers. Nothing is easier, especially if they be zealous and devoted. Say that Mrs. A——"just enjoys anything of that sort." Of course to enjoy any form of Church work is monstrous. Say that Mrs. B——"just loves to take the lead in anything." (Everybody likes her to take it, but you need not mention that.) You might add that Mr. C—— loves to hear himself talk, Mr. D—— likes anything that will bring him into prominence and that Mr. E—wants to advertise his business. Ask, with emphasis, how much of this work would be done withdrawn from the public gaze. Add that you really believe these people think they are going to receive some sort of reward in another world, and that their good deeds will all be set down to their account! That ought to shame them out of it, if anything will, and you can be assured, if good works be a sin, you will never have to answer for any yourself.

5. If, by this time, any good work is not killed it must have a firm hold on life. But, if it still continue, you can hinder it considerably by always alluding to it with a sneer; by mortifying the workers as much as possible, and by giving out the impression that, if your exalted station and personal dignity did not forbid you noticing anything so insignificant, you could show all concerned how to do the thing as it ought to be done. You might, also, get up something yourself of a directly opposite nature, to draw off the attention of the community.

After having faithfully tried all these plans, you may rest assured that you have done all in your power, and, if the good work succeeds, your skirts are clear of all participation in the matter.—A. S. in Presbyterian.

A WORD.

FROM THE ASSEMBLY'S OFFICE OF HOME MISSIONS, ATLANTA, GA.

In 1893 the total membership of our Church was 188,546. In 1894 it is 199,167, an increase of five and a half per cent. To those who have invested their money in Home Missionary work it will be an item of interest to know that much the largest percentage of increase was in the west; the increase in the Synod of Arkansas, being a little over 10 per cent., and in the Synod of Texas nearly 12 per cent.

The church at large through the Assembly's treasury is now helping to support seventy odd missionaries in Arkansas, Florida, Texas, Indian Territory, and New Mexico. The work is carried on a cash basis. The Central Committee makes no promises beyond its receipts. All salaries for the first and second quarters of '94 were paid promptly and in full. There is a small amount of cash now in the treasury and by the first of October, the committee hopes to receive enough to meet the third quarter's payments in full.

The Central Committee has purchased and paid for a suitable school-property in Durant, Choctaw nation, and hopes to open there September 1st, a thoroughly Christian school of high grade which if sustained will be an untold blessing, a mighty power for our Lord in all that region. Other Christian schools taught by consecrated ladies are also expected to accomplish immeasurable good. The necessity for these schools arises from such facts as these, viz: All signs indicate that the tribal government of the Indian Territory will soon be changed to U. S. territorial government; then within another twenty-five years perhaps or less, a thickly populated State will there exist. In view of these things large numbers of poor white people are now going there and for the education of their children, no provision whatever is made. Those children in coming years will be the leading citizens of the State. This, therefore, is our opportunity. The next collection for Assembly's Home Missions will be taken in September, and something preparatory to that will, God willing, appear in these columns in due time.

Secretary.

A Message From A Star.

An Incident in a Missionary's Life.

BY THE REV. FREDERIC E. J. LLOYD.

I had been spending some days with an old couple, their two sons and a daughter, in one of the most distant and inaccessible of my numerous mission stations on the northern coast of Newfoundland. They were very ignorant indeed, and "God" and "Christ" seemed to them words without meaning, except as oaths. During my stay with them I had to put up with the hardest of fare in every possible way, and the weather had been very stormy.

I had finished my work for that time, and was ready to depart for my headquarters. The snow and ice had not come, and my only way of getting home was by means of boat. There was no boat large enough at this place, so I had to look out for a passing boat, and try to secure a passage. Day after day I scanned the waters of the Strait of Belle Isle. By and by a boat appeared. I hailed her, and was promised a passage down the strait. It was a rough and tempestuous sea upon which we embarked, but with the blessing of God upon us we got along very well.

Towards evening a thick fog came down, and this increased our peril. In the boat were two experienced fishermen and myself. We had a few crusts of bread for food, and some stale water. By reason of the fog, which was very dense, we avoided the coast as much as possible, lest we should be dashed upon the rocks. And there we were drifting about at the mercy of the elements for some hours. The sea was washing over us continually, until we were all completely drenched. It was cold and miserable in the extreme.

About ten at night the wind veered and blew off the land. The fog disappeared, and we felt there was a chance us reaching a harbor after all, but none of us being able to get a warm bed to lie on. One of our crew of two was an old man with one imperfect eye. The expression of this defective eye was at times so odd, especially when the old man was puzzled, that, in the midst of my misery, I was kept in a state of inward laughter.

With the change of the wind we put our boat about, as the sailors say, and made for a harbor a few miles to the eastward of where we were. In a brief space afterwards we shot into the harbor with great gladness and thankfulness of heart. Then we prepared to get some rest. But there was but one place on which this was at all possible, I should rather say in which it was possible to lie down, and that was on the ballast of the boat, which consisted of flat stones. This was the best bedroom, and, being the guest of the occasion, this was assigned to me by the crew. I stole away on all-fours (it was impossible to stand), and soon found my quarters for the rest of the night. My bed was hard, and my bed was cold, and my only covering was an old tarpaulin; that is, a tarred sail. This quilt possessed no heating qualities. On this bed I tossed and tossed for a long time in a good deal of misery.

At length so great a feeling of loneliness and sadness came over me that I felt as if my life was being wasted in my lonely mission, and that even God hap foraken me. This was, no doubt, due to my inability to get any rest, and to my great fatigue. I had said my usual prayers, and committed myself, as usual, to him who never slumbers nor sleeps; but still I felt miserable.

I finally turned, and lay on my back with my eyes looking towards the under side of the deck. A bright and glowing light gleamed above me, and I was lost in wonder and delight. It was so glorious. "What can it be?" I thought. It was only the light of the planet Venus shining in upon me through a hole in the deck. But it drove away my misery. That beauteous star was, for me, that night, the eye of God, and a heavenly benison indeed. It was not, I think, a mere accident, that this beacon light should have shined upon me at that time when my soul needed just a little of heaven's light to shine within it, and drive away the darkness of fear and gloom and distrust.

In such ways, I truly believe, does Christ help his children in their toils and labors for his dear sake. The brightness of the star helped and cheered me many a time afterwards, and even to-day does it help me.

In all our ways God will direct us, and his eye will rest on us at all times and in all places.—Sunday School Times.

My Joy.

Read the fifteenth chapter of John s Gospel, and when you come to the eleventh verse stop and think. Who is it that says, "These things have I spoken unto you that my joy might be in you"? Is the speaker a monarch on his throne—a warrior celebrating a victory that he has won—a popular orator or author whom multitudes admire and applaud? No; he is poor, homeless, hated, hunted by relentless foes, and on the morrow he will be hanging on the cross. He knows this. He sees with omniscient eyes that even while he is speaking, Judas is betraying him. He sees the soldiers rallying with swords and torches. He sees that in an hour or two he will be agonizing in Gethsemane, and yet he cries, "My joy." And his desire, in behalf of his disciples, is that they may be as happy, as exultant, as he is. How can we understand this? A good man in such circumstances might talk about resignation, he might be willing to suffer in a just and holy cause, but rejoicing seems unnatural and impossible. How, then, I ask again, shall we explain these words of our Saviour? The explanation is in the preceding verse. "I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love." He was conscious of a union with God, who is love, which nothing could disturb. And "perfect love casteth out fear"—it is the headspring from which must flow increasing streams of gladness.

Dr. Bessor says: "Christ's heart is a joyful heart, even in the deepest suffering; for he abides in his Father's love, and that is the source and essence of all joy. This joy of Jesus Christ should become our joy. In him it is full, in us it becomes full. It grows with our growing faith until it reaches its fullness, when he will satisfy us with the joys of his countenance in heaven." And Bishop Hunting says: "Abiding in Christ's love, what can the brave, true Christian need more? His tranquility will be like that of the sea when the storm has been subdued; not a dead or stagnant calm, but the rippling calm that laughs because it moves and makes music and catches all the light o heaven"

This statement about the connection of love and joy follows the parable of the vine and its branches. The vine is Christ rooted by faith in the soil of truth, in the covenant of redemption between him and the Father. The vital sap that circulates in the vine is love, and the foliage is joy—a holy joy that no burning heat can blight, and that quivers with rapture in every breeze that blows—joy equally in what men call prosperity and what they call adversity, because we believe that all things work together for good to them who love God."

Lange says: "The holy joyfulness of Christ, the untrammeled, glad upsoaring of his soul in the midst of his tribulations, shall, through the Spirit, by means of the communication and awakening of love, devolve upon the disciples themselves."

The whole world is crying, Who will show us any good? There are a thousand answers, but all save one are mocking and delusive. The great Physician brings us the only panacea. He offers us the joy that lifted his own spirit up into celestial sunlight, even in the darkest hour; the joy that was as untroubled as the depths of the ocean are when the tempest agitates its surface. That joy comes into the heart by the faith "which worketh by love." Christ says: "Abide in my love. Let my words abide in you." Love me. Love one another as I have loved you. Let the sap of the heavenly vine penetrate all your thoughts and your affections, then you shall have, not peace merely, but joy—such conscious blessedness as I experienced even on the night of my betrayal. We are to be Christ-like, not only in meekness, patience and fidelity, but in the joy which led him to endure the cross, despising the shame.—Herald and Presbyter.

The Flower of Culloden.

They tell us that in Scotland is a battlefield on which the natives of the soil and their Saxon neighbors once met in a terrible conflict. No monument marks the scene of the bloody fight. All over the field grows the beautiful Scotch heather—except in one spot. There a little blue flower grows abundantly. No flowers like them are to be found for many a league around. Why are they there? The reason is this: Just in the spot where they grow, the bodies of the slain were buried, and the earth was saturated with the blood and the remains of the unhappy victims. The seeds of these flowers were there before. As soon as the blood touched them, they sprung up. They developed. And every blue flower on Culloden's field, as it bends to the breeze, is a memorial of the brave warriors who dyed that heathery sod with their crimson gore.

So it is with character. The seeds of action lie deep beneath the surface—seeds of heroism and the seeds of crime. The seeds of lofty deeds yet unperformed—or of sensualities, frauds and treacheries yet unperpetrated. These principles, or germs of action, lie dormant. They may remain latent for years—may, in fact, never be developed in this lower world. The seeds of the blue flowers at Culloden would, probably, have lain there undetected to this day, but for the trickling about them of human blood. That called them forth.—Rev. Theodore Cuyler, D. D.

A good Christian cannot be other than eager for the extension of our Lord's kingdom among men, not only from his sense of what is due to the Lord who bought him, but also from his natural sense of justice, his persuasion that he has no right to withhold from others those privileges and prospects which are the joy of his inmost life.—Canon Liddon.

Wilmington:—Services were held all last week at Immanuel chapel, Dr. Hoge and Rev. G. H. Cornelson, Jr., preaching. On Sunday night when the communion was administered nineteen persons who had been received by the session made public profession of their faith and one was received on certificate. Three others have been received into the First church since the last communion on profession of their faith and one on certificate—twenty-four in all. Mr. Cornelson has been doing excellent work at the chapel since June 1st, and it was never in so flourishing a condition.

Mecklenburg Presbytery:—On Thursday of last week the Presbytery met in the Second Presbyterian church, of Charlotte and dissolved the pastoral relation between Rev. T. A. Wharton and Steele Creek.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Williams Memorial Church:—We have just closed another communion season at Williams Memorial church, in which the pastor, Rev. Jonas Barclay, was assisted by Rev. F. D. Hunt, whose preaching was greatly enjoyed by our people. There were eleven or twelve additions—a result especially encouraging as we received fourteen members at our last communion season in April. This makes over fifty received by the two churches of this charge in the last few months. To God be the praise and the glory forever. Amen!

Oxford:—At a congregational meeting of the Presbyterian church in Oxford, of which Rev. J. E. Thacker is pastor, there was organized, on August 12th, three new and additional societies, which we trust, will do much toward strengthening and up building the Church spiritually, and aiding the missionary work at home and abroad.

One was a general missionary society, whose object is, to aid in all kinds of missionary work. Another was a "Ladies' Local Christian Endeavor Society," which is apart from the Ladies' Union and Aid Societies; and the third was a "Men's Local Christian Endeavor Society." These societies will meet, alternately, on Sunday morning at 10.30, just before the regular service. Nearly every member present united with them, and it will be their earnest effort to make themselves more useful in the Church, and more worshipful in the service of our Saviour, and we feel that this will, truly, awaken our people to more activity and usefulness.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Fifth Creek Church:—We closed a very interesting meeting at Fifth Creek, August 16th. Rev. C. A. Munroe, of Lenoir was with us, and did all the preaching. The meeting continued for seven days, during which time Bro. Munroe preached the Word with earnestness, plainness and power. The results of the meeting are; fourteen have already united with the church on examination, two or three more will probably join soon. God's people have been encouraged and edified, and some who had backslidden have renewed their vows. For all this we thank God and take courage.

Oakland, Johnston County:—Rev. A. M. Hassell has lately assisted Rev. John A. McMurray in a meeting at Oakland, Johnston county. His preaching was good, the effect good and far-reaching. But for hard and protracted rains which hindered the work, I am satisfied, I could now report a large number of converts. At times, the great majority of the congregation was moved to tears. Four or five, we hope were persuaded to accept Christ and others, whose attitude was uncertain, took side with Jesus. The church was persuaded to fuller consecration, and more than a score of the unsaved were brought to consider and, we hope will turn and live.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Presbytery of Albemarle:—The Presbytery of Albemarle has just closed a delightful meeting at Nutbush church. The Rev. Eugene Daniel delivered the opening sermon on Christian Unity. The Rev. F. D. Thomas was elected moderator and Ruling Elder R. C. Brown, temporary clerk. Licentiate R. C. Hines was ordained to the full work of the gospel ministry. Public meetings were held in the interest of Home and Foreign Missions. The Rev. T. U. Faucette, was received as a member from Orange Presbytery. The Presbytery unanimously declined to approve the constitutional changes recommended by the Assembly, touching Licensure and Ordination. The NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN was warmly commended and pastors directed to bring its claims before their congregations from their pulpits. The next meeting is to be at New Berne.

Presbytery of Pee Dee:—At a called meeting of the Presbytery of Pee Dee, held at Florence, August 8th, the pastoral relation existing between Rev. John G. Law and the Darlington church was dissolved to take effect October 1st, and a letter of dismission was granted to Suwanee Presbytery. Mr. Law takes charge of the church of Ocala, Fla. Rev. A. H. WHEREAS, The pastoral relation existing between Rev. J. G. Law and the Darlington church has been dissolved and a letter of dismission granted him.

2. That the best wishes and prayers of the Presbytery followed him to his new field of labor.

3rd. That he be heartily commended to the love and fellowship of Suwanee Presbytery.

FAYETTEVILLE INSTITUTE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Saturday Morning, Aug. 11th.

While many, of both speakers and hearers are returning home, others of both classes are coming in, and the indications are that the crowd to-day will be larger than any succeeding day.

Prayer and praise service were conducted by Col. E. F. McRae. The book of Job was discussed by Dr. J. B. Shearer, proving by the Bible itself that Job was a living man in his day; one of the best and most pious examples of men to be found. He also quoted Satan's answer to the question where He came from, and applied it to the saying of the boy or young men of to-day, who so readily quote Satan when asked where they were to-day or last night, "Just walking about." He also showed that every lie was a slander of somebody or something. Even the common snake or fish stories are a slander of these things. Upon the whole it was an interesting discourse.

We did not state in the proper place that protracted meetings for church members was discussed by Rev. Jas. Evans and perhaps others.

The Evangelist, his Authority, his Functions and his Field was discussed by Dr. Hill and Rev. D. W. Fox, showing the need of evangelists, especially in destitute fields, and showing the advantages of evangelists being subject to their own Church courts, and controlled by their several denominations. Faith in Jesus Christ was ably presented in a sermon by Rev. A. D. McClure. After which Rev. D. W. Fox led in prayer.

Afternoon: Prayer and praise service was conducted by Mr. L. Shaw. Rev. J. W. Johnston then followed in a sermon. His theme being "Believing a Lie." It is easy to believe what we want to believe; and hard to believe what we do not relish. The word of God is the only infallible guide. The book of Daniel was unfolded by Dr. Shearer in a lecture which was rich in religious and political history. We state for the information of those who are loath to believe that Nebuchadnezar was saved that if we are to believe his own profession in the God of Daniel, for about a year before his death, he was saved. That all history repeats itself is a fact worthy of serious consideration.

After Recess: The Question Box was opened and several perplexing Bible questions were intelligently answered. Mr. J. W. McLauchlin giving the elaborate and explicit answer to the question, propounded for him to answer, viz: Should not a bishop be the husband of one (a) wife? This answer by one of our best eminent elders was well presented and was well received.

The committee announced that they thought it best to have no service to-night, in order that the people may rest.

Sunday Morning, Aug. 12th.

A pleasant rain last night laid the dust and cooled the atmosphere, and at 10 o'clock the tabernacle is nearly filled to its seating capacity of several thousand persons. Mr. McClure is doing some good spiritual work in songs of prayer and praise, having the audience join him in several old familiar pieces. Occasionally he gives a touching solo, his melodious voice giving expression of feeling. Capt. S. C. Rankin conducted the prayer and praise service. Dr. J. B. Shearer then lectured on the book of Ecclesiastes. He showed the greatness of Solomon in wisdom and possession, and wherein he was enabled to say, "All is vanity and vexation of spirit." Hear the conclusion of the whole matter: "Fear God, and keep His commandments. For this is the whole duty of man." Thus the nail is fastened and clinched, for all shall be brought into judgment O! the judgment, the judgment, for the sinner, and we all are sinners. But blessed be God, we have an advocate with the Father Jesus Christ the Righteous.

After Recess: One of the most beautiful anthems was rendered by some select members of the choir, and was highly enjoyed by three thousand or more people. As a manifestation of the spiritual interest taken in the proceedings of the Institute, Dr. H. G. Hill then preached one of the greatest sermons of the occasion, taking for text 11th and 12th verses of the first chapter of John. His theme was the designs of the coming to the world of Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world, and the treatment that He received by his own, being rejected of them. And so is it to-day: Some reject Him in this enlightened age without investigation of Him as revealed in the Bible. And some reject Him after investigation; an awful, wicked position to take and an awful condition to be in. But all did not reject Him, some did receive Him. So it is to-day, some, not all. Will you not receive Him to-day? He is here now as then, and is presented to you. Will you receive Him now and become the sons of God? or will you reject Him and go to hell? The power of the gospel does not and is not intended to only deliver us from Hell, but it gives us power to become the sons of God, which is far better. Surely many souls will be benefitted this day by this soul-stirring sermon. If only one, as Dr. Hill said, is saved then our coming to this tabernacle of God will not be in vain.

After Recess: Much good singing was done by the choir, and Mr. McClure preached a forcible sermon; his theme being the Daily Fellowship and Communion of Christ, or the want of it in the Modern Church. They are not willing to do the work of the Church. We have lost much of the sweetness of our religion being at ease, and are not willing to do His bidding in lowly service. Let us not be comforted at ease, but up and doing. Text Songs of Solomon fifth chapter and third verse.

Afternon: Children's service was entered into. Addresses were made by Mr. J. W. McLauchlin, Rev. D. W. Fox, Prof. Dinwiddie and Mr. J. M. McIver. A little distant thunder at this late hour of the day caused a little commotion in the large audience that had sat so attentively all day—as many had come from a distance and wished to return before night, services were announced for to-night and the congregation dismissed.

At night. After many songs by the still large audience, and an anthem by the Red Springs choir, prayer by Rev. J. M. Clark, of Tennessee. Dr. J. B. Shearer, preached from the 5th verse of the Psalm. The text containing a sweet invitation and a dreadful warning. Mr. McClure led in prayer and the service was closed by singing and the benediction as usual.

Monday Morning, August 13th.

The crowd gathered more slowly this morning but still they come. As has been the case frequently the main speaker mentioned on the program is not present. But this Presbytery is not lacking in material to handle any Biblical subject, and too, Mr. McClure has been on hand all the time and ever ready to respond by song or speech and inform people and preacher.

The Four Gospels were discussed by Dr. Hill and Messrs. McClure and Fox, showing that while they may seem at a glance to differ in some points, yet when they are studied there is perfect harmony between them.

The opening prayer and praise service this morning as should have been stated were conducted by Major McLauchlin, of Cheraw, South Carolina.

AFTER RECESS:

Church Discipline was discussed by Capt. S. C. Rankin, Dr. Shearer and Dr. Hill. The trouble lies not in the Book of "Church Discipline" but in the ignorance of church officers; they do not understand the Book. There is a disputed line which is claimed alike by the world and the Church, and they too often meet on this disputed ground, and take part in the so claimed innocent pleasures together. The line must be drawn by the Church, is the solution, and discipline used against great offences; this will check the small ones.

Afternoon: Prayer and praise service were conducted by John McLean. Then the discussion on Church Societies was opened up by Rev. S. M. Rankin—Dr. Hill, S. C. Rankin, Rev. J. M. Clark, following him in interesting speeches. The Book of Acts was then unfolded in a lecture by Dr. Hill.

At night: After service of song and prayer by Rev. L. M. Kestler (Baptist), Dr. Shearer preached the closing sermon from Romans 6: 23, The sinner earns his wages and is paid for his service just as any other hireling. But life everlasting is the gift of God. The greatest offer made to man, a gift not to be earned, but accepted. A fearful warning to sinners; a hopeful sermon to Christians. At close of the sermon Rev. J. M. Clark led in prayer. Then an anthem by the choir. Resolutions of thanks that had been passed by the Committee, tendering thanks to the Railroad authorities, hotel proprietors, and all other persons who had so liberally assisted in having the tabernacle erected, and in making this meeting of the Institute a success, were read before the audience. "Blest be the tie that binds" was sung. Dr. Shearer pronounced the benediction.

Thus closed another successful meeting of the Elders' and Deacons' Institute at Red Springs, and we trust that many happy church-going people returned to their homes better fitted for service in life. Miss Mary McKinnon, the very efficient pianist who has so faithfully served the Institute at each meeting has the confidence of this Presbytery in piety, punctuality, and as a leader in gospel music. No more worthy person could be selected. Miss Russel, also was very acceptable, in assisting in the music, as were other ladies. But perhaps Mr. W. F. Blount was the chief one in the instrumental music after all, in that he furnished the two excellent Kimball pianoes just from the factory, for which he is the successful agent.

Sunday the crowd was larger than any other day. We never saw so many horses and riding vehicles before. People came from town and village, from far and near, but every day was a good day, The speakers did their part well. But how about the hearers. God alone can know. In our skeleton report, we have only sketched a sentence here and there of what was said and done.

The hand of Providence is seen in this Institute for Bible study. The greatest of success attended the first one held here, and the second gave encouragement enough to cause the erection of the very large pavilion under which thousands delightfully worshiped during the last seven days. The cost of this tabernacle was no small amount, and the committee felt it a big undertaking, but the people responded liberally and everything went on smoothly. Now as it is an established thing, we want to suggest that the end in view, must be watched that something amiss may not creep in unaware, and the Institute degenerate into something not so good, such as socialisms or other isms. There were several ministers, elders and deacons present from other Presbyteries.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D.C., Aug. 15 th, 1894.

The great interest in the passing of the Senate tariff bill by the House and the sending of that measure to President Cleveland, either to receive his approval, be vetoed, or be allowed to become a law without his approval, has resulted in causing the action of the Senate, in ratifying the Chinese treaty by a vote of 47 to 20, to fail to receive the public attention that its importance deserves. The treaty was ratified just as it was negotiated by Secretary Gresham. It is for a period of ten years only, but will be renewed for a second period of ten years, unless notice of abrogation be given either government within six months of its expiration. The portion of the treaty in which church folk are most interested is Article V, wherein" the government of the United States agrees that within twelve months from the date of the exchange of the ratification of this convention, and annually thereafter, it will furnish to the government of China registers or reports showing the full names, age, occupation and number or place of residence of all citizens of the United States, including missionaries, residing both within and without the treaty ports of China, not including, however, diplomatic and other officers of the United States residing or traveling in China upon official business, together with their body and household servants." The claim is made that the ratification of this treaty, which is on the whole considered favorable to China—very much so when the Geary law, before its modification is considered—comes very opportunely, in that it will result in making the Chinese authorities much more solicitous for the safety of American missionaries in China than they would otherwise have been. It seems certain from private information received here that the American missionaries in China will need protection if the war between China and Japan be prolonged.

The plans of the new Congressional Library building, now nearing completion, provide for the erection in the main reading room of sixteen marble statues of eminent men in eight branches of literature, and Librarian Spofford, to whom the selection was left, has named the following: Poetry—Homer and Shakespeare; Art and Music—Angelo and Beethoven; Science—Newton and Henry; History—Herodotus and Gibbon; Philosophy—Plato and Bacon; Commerce—Columbus and Fulton; Law—Solon and Blackstone; Religion—Moses and St. Paul. On the outer walls are niches for nine busts, and Mr. Spofford has selected: Franklin, Demosthenes, Dante, Irving, Macaulay, Sir Walter Scott, Emerson, Hawthorne, and Goethe, to fill them.

Naturally the most absorbing topic of conversation here this week is the tariff bill, which has been sent to the President as amended by the Senate, and the separate bills passed by the House, putting iron ore coal, barbed wire and sugar on the free list. As to the last there seems little probability that any of them will be passed by the Senate, although there is little doubt that if a vote were taken in a full Senate on the bill placing sugar on the free list it would pass by a substantial majority, but there isn't a full Senate and isn't likely to be again this session. It is difficult, and daily growing more so, to get a quorum in the Senate and that reason, if there were no others, would prevent any further tariff legislation, as in the absence of a quorum nothing can be done except by unanimous consent, and unanimous consent is never given to tariff legislation of any kind. It is the bill in Mr. Cleveland' hands that everybody is interested in. He expressed his adverse opinion of that bill so strongly in his memorable letter to Chairman Wilson, of the House Ways and Means Committee, that few people believe he will sign it, but the general impression appears to be that he will, in deference to the general demand of the business men of the country to have the matter definitely settled, allow it to become a law without his signature, and on account of that impression Congress will remain in session for at least ten days longer, unless Mr. Cleveland shall before that take action on the tariff bill, but there is little probability that any important legislation will be taken up in either House or Senate.

Tramp organizations are at an end as far as the District of Columbia is concerned. The last of the so called "industrial armies" were started to their homes at the expense of the District of Columbia last night, and formal notice was issued that all tramps hereafter coming into the District, whether singly or organized, would be arrested and imprisoned under the vagrancy laws. Had this action been taken months ago much necessary suffering would have been saved the men who allowed themselves to be persuaded into coming here.

Third Quarter.—Lesson X.

Sept. 2.—Jesus Cleansing the Temple.

John ii 13-25. Commit vss. 13-16.

Golden Text. Make not my Father's house a place of merchandise.—John ii. 16.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. A brief visit to Capernaum, "with his mother and his brethren and his disciples" followed the visit to Cana. At this time he may have made His arrangements for making it His permanent abode. The frequent allusions to "his disciples" in John's account of the Judean ministry (iv. 2, 8, 31-38) would look as if the final call of the four fishermen had taken place at this visit; but the reference to the healing of the nobleman's son as the "second miracle" in Galilee, would indicate that the miraculous draught of fishes which accompanied that call had not yet taken place. We must, therefore, suppose that they went up with Jesus to the Passover and remained with Him—as they had previously remained with John—without yet recognizing that they had permanently left their regular employment. While at Capernaum Jesus was probably the guest of Peter whose house was there (Mark i. 21, 29), though he was a native of Bethsaida across the Lake (John i. 44).

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson. Jesus coming to His temple, vss. 13, 14; and purifying His Father's house, vss. 14-16; the disciples applying prophecy, vs. 11; the rulers questioning His authority, vs. 18; His answer, their misunderstanding and his meaning, vss. 19-21; the effect on His disciples after the resurrection, vs. 22; untrustworthy disciples, vss. 23, 24; His insight, vss. 24, 25.

Third Step. Study with your helps points needing explanation:

Vs. 13. The Jews' Passover. The form of the expression indicates that John was writing for Gentile Christians. This Passover was the first of our Lord's public ministry, and was in the year 780 A. U. C. or 27 A. D. This which we have previously determined is confirmed by vs. 20. The Temple was not finished until long after (A. D. 63) so the 46 years indicates the time it had been building when they spoke. It was begun in the 18th year of Herod's reign, A. U. C. 734, and forty-six years would bring us to 780.

Vs 14. Found in the Temple, that is within the courts (see previous explanation). The court of the Gentiles was the scene of this traffic which had originally been intended for the convenience of those who came to sacrifice and to pay the Temple tax, or half-shekel, but had now become a monopoly and a source of revenue to the family of Annas.

Vs. 15. The genial guest is now the avenging Judge. Gentle as a woman to the suffering, and considerate to the embarassed, His wrath blazes out against hypocrisy and oppression, and He formally assumes the authority and mission of the Messiah.

A scourge of small cords. More as an emblem of authority than as a weapon for actual use. As the latter it would have been useless against such numbers. It was the moral force of His indignation that swept them out like leaves before the wind

Vs. 16 Said unto them that sold doves. A fine touch! The oxen and sheep could be driven out without injury; for the money of the exchangers who sold the Jewish half-shekel for an exorbitant profit he cared nothing, but for the doves—helpless in their imprisonment—he gave command to "take them hence."

Make not, etc. An appeal to the fitness of things When three years later He finds them more firmly intrenched than ever, He quotes the Scriptures; what His Father's House ought to be—a place of prayer; and what they had made it—a den of thieves.

Vs. 18. What sign. The exercise of such authority implied a Divine commission which He must show, or they would regard Him as an intruder, and impostor. Yet when He replies with a sign that cannot be at present tested or understood, they take no action against Him. In their hearts they knew that He was right, and righteousness needs no sign to vindicate it; its Divine power is in itself.

Vs. 21. But He spake. The emphasis is upon He. The fate of the Temple was sealed when they rejected their Messiah. The Temple only looked forward to Him, and embodied the propheeies and promises concerning Him. When His body was slain the vail of the Temple was rent in twain, its sanctity was destroyed and the final catastrophe was only delayed a few years. But long before that catastrophe He had reared on the fact of His resurrection, the spiritual Temple of which the old material Temple was but a type.

Vs. 24. But Jesus did not commit Himself; better, "did not trust Himself." Their faith was only superficial, based upon miracles. They believed He was the Messiah, but they had no spiritual apprehension of the Messiah—no knowledge of what He was, no personal experience of His saving power. He knew they would fall away, so He did not trust Himself unreservedly to them. He avoided them as He afterwards did those Galileans that would take Him by force to make Him a king.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson involving, as far as possible, the points of explanation brought out.

Fifth Step. Study the topics of the lesson in the light of God's Word.

1. The Lord coming to His Temple.
   a. Foretold, Mal. iii. 1-3.
      Note (1.) A messenger to prepare the way. (2.) The Lord who comes is the Angel of the Covenant, who was the delight and glory of Israel (compare Is. lxiii. 8.) (3.) He comes suddenly. (4.) To His own Temple. (5.) He finds it polluted by its appointed ministers. (6.) He cleanses it by the fire of His righteous wrath before which none can stand.
   b. Declaration of the "messenger," Matt. iii. 7-11. Note, (1.) Wrath impending against false ministers—axe lying at the root of the tree, vss. 7, 10; (2.) The one coming mightier then he, vs. 11; (3.) Cleanses not with the superficial cleansing of water, but with the thorough cleansing of fire, vs. 11; (4.) It is His own floor to which He comes and which He will thoroughly purge, destroying the chaff, gathering in the wheat.
   c. The fulfilment, John ii. 13.
      (1) The Lord comes, vs. 13; (2) Finds the Temple corrupted, (3) Indignation aroused, vs 17; (4) assumes the symbol of authority, vs. 15; (5) casts out the defilers, vs. 15; (6) publicly claims authority over His Father's House, vs. 16.
   d. Relation to His subsequent work.

(1) A public declaration of His Messiahship (see above).

(2) A challenge and rebuke to the existing religious administration, compare Matt. xxiii. 2, 3, etc.

(3) As the first miracle emphasizes the good will of the kingdom, so this act declares its righteousness.

(4) A fore-shadowing of the final consummation (Rev xxi. 27; 2 Pet. iii. 13).

Sixth Step. Let us lay to heart the solemn inquiry of Mal. iii. 2. "But who may abide the day of His coming?" We must judge ourselves if we would not be judged. Only those who are "in Him" can escape from Him when He comes to judgment. Only those who are clean (cleansed by His blood) can stand before Him.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Bring out the story especially in relation to Malachi's prophecy and John's ministry, that your scholars may understand its relation to the Jews of that day. Then seek to impress upon them its relation to themselves; the necessity of having everything in their life fit for Jesus' inspection at any time. Thou God seest me.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF AUG. 2.

86. a. The manna and quails in the wilderness, Ex. xvi. 12-16.
    b. Elijah fed by ravens, 1 Kings xvii. 6.
    c. The barrel of meal that wasted not, vs. 16, or Elijah under the juniper tree, 1 Kings xix. 5-7, or Elisha's feeding 100 men, 2 Kings iv. 42-44.
    (Some seem to have read this question wrong and give instances in Christ's life.)

87. a. In O. T., Daniel, Dan. vi. 22.
    b. In N. T., Peter, Acts 4.
    (Other instances in the O. T. are: Lot from Sodom (Gen. xix. 15); Shadrach and his companions, though Dan. ii. 7 would indicate that here the deliver was Christ, the Angel of the covenant. This is the general view, though it is doubtful whether in the mouth of a heathen king the words would mean more than an angel. The destruction of Sennacherib and of the firstborn of Egypt, hardly meet the terms of the question, but indirectly effected the deliverance of Israel (and so are accepted.)

On July 21st, 1894, at her home, near Antioch, N. C., Miss MARY E. SMITH, in the 80th year of her age. She was received into the full communion of Antioch church in 1833, the same year the church was organized, and was a good, active, earnest worker in the church until she became too feeble to attend. For more than two years she had been a patient sufferer waiting for the coming of her Master

In Oxford, N. C., Aug. 3d, 1894, Mr. DANIEL S. OSBORN, aged 77 years. He was a sincere, active and earnest Christian, and one of our most useful and devoted elders. His simple, earnest piety, his godly walk and conversation, his great benevolence and charity, his most tender, loving, and sympathetic heart, drew all men to him, and to know him was to love him. His place of usefulness will be hard to fill, and his death cast a shadow over our whole community. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord," and so blessed is our brother who has fallen asleep. J. E. T.

At a called meeting of the Woman's Missionary and Aid Society of the Presbyterian church of Burlington the undersigned were appointed a committee in behalf of the society to express our sorrow at the death of the Rev. JAMES L. CURRIE, our pastor, who so frequently visited us during our meetings.

WHEREAS, Our beloved pastor is no more, but his spirit has fled to God who gave it.

Resolved, 1st., That the memory of his many virtues as pastor, friend and neighbor, and his visits to our monthly meetings shall never be forgotten, but that we will cherish it as a priceless jewel.

2d. That we shall miss his welcome face from our meetings; that we will sadly miss his kind and genial face from our pulpit. That we will miss him in our social life

3d. That we sorrow with the widow and orphans in their deep trouble, and can only say that our loss is his gain.

MRS. CICERO MOORE,
MRS. JAMES BASON.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT ADOPTED BY BETHESDA SUNDAY SCHOOL, AUGUST 12, 1894.

WHEREAS, It has pleased God in his inscrutable wisdom to remove by death Mr. N. A. A. McKEITHEN, one of the most valuable and consistent members of our Sabbath-school, therefore be it

Resolved 1st. That while we bow in submission to the Divine will, we realize that in his death the Sabbath school, the church and the community have sustained a loss well nigh irreparable.

2d. That while we grieve at the loss of this noble example of young manhood, we take comfort in believing that our loss is his eternal gain.

3d. That we strive to emulate the sterling virtues which characterized his daily walk.

4th. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, to the Aberdeen Telegram and N. C. PRESBYTERIAN with a request to publish.

Aberdeen, N. C., Aug. 13, 1894.

On August 3d, 1894, little WALTER McNEIL, infant son of Mr. W. L. and Mrs. E. E. Powell, of Laurens county, Ga., aged 2 months and 3 days.

On Sabbath morning, surrounded by parents and loving friends, the remains were tenderly laid to rest in Bonaventure cemetery in the sacred spot hallowed by the dust of loved ones gone before. There the bodies of the old and young will rest quietly until the resurrection morn, and the last trumpet sound shall awake them to the glories of immortality. Never were more loving tender parents called upon to return to the great Giver, a more precious, lovely gift. But although their hearts are sore, with the eye of faith they can look through their tears and see the star that has set upon their earthly home, now risen in glory and shining in purer skies.

"It is well! nor would we our babe recall,
And soothing and sweet are the tears that fall;
But a few brief pangs on his mother's breast,
And we laid him down in his holy rest;
Ere the world its snares around him threw,
Or its sins and its cares he ever knew.

"It is well! since the Saviour's word is given,
That of such as our child is the host of heaven;
No struggle for him, no doubts or fears,
His young cheek spared repentant tears.
It is well! and we "bear" and adore "the rod,"
For the willing hand was the hand of God."

"Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." W.

At his home near Pleasant Grove, N. C., on Saturday morning 11th, Mr. WM. P. BARNWELL, in the 64th year of his age, for a long time a member and highly esteemed officer, in Cross Roads church.

A loss keenly felt not alone by the sorrowing family, but by church and community. A hearty and kindly nature marked Mr. Barnwell as a man, and a decided piety as a Christian. For months before his death he suffered much, but with patience and cheerfulness. The comforts of a Christian's hope were his support, and he passed away in peace. To him the words were true and real: "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." Deut. 33:27. PASTOR.

FOR THE FAMILY.

MY MENDING BASKET.

It is made of the stoutest of willow;
It is deep and spacious and wide;
Yet the gulf stream that flows through its borders
Seems always to stand at flood tide!

And the garments lie heaped on each other;
I look at them often and sigh.
Shall I ever be able to grapple
With a pile that has grown two feet high?

There's a top layer, always, of stockings;
These arrive and depart every day;
And the things that are playing "button-button"
Also leave without any delay.

But ah, underneath there are strata
Buried deep as the earth's eocene!
Things put there the first of the autumn,
Still there when the trees have grown green!

There are things to be ripped and made over;
There are things that gave out in their prime;
There are intricate tasks—all awaiting
One magical hour of "spare time."

Will it come? Shall I ever possess it?
I start with fresh hope every day.
Like a will-o'-the wisp it allures me;
Like a will-o'-the-wisp, fades away.

For the basket has never been empty,
During all of its burdened career,
But once, for a few fleeting moments,
When the baby upset it, last year.

—Bessie Chandler, in "Harper's Bazaar."

Items for Lady Readers.

There are few women who will be more greatly missed in Philadelphia than Mrs Alice Lippincott who died a short time since. In speaking of her the public Ledger says: "Amiable to a degree that would have exhausted most women; consenting to be patroness' for many a struggling enterprise; sought out by Philadelphia's leading men to bear the weight of entertaining in hottest weather a visiting company of British scientists, or whatever may have been the visiting lions of the year; expected to do duty on many Boards of Directors—and constant to these duties—life would have been a most fatiguing round were it not for the animating sense of responsibility with which she entered into each new organization, knowing well the influence of her presence therein and its attractiveness to many of the unthinking devotees of fashion. She was no butterfly, but one of the busiest of bees, and the ornamental functions of her social life were rated by her at their face value, no more. Alice Lippincott realized that her position in Philadelphia compelled the fostering of every enterprise that would assist women. Whether it was to introduce a timid young singer in her own drawing-room, or to take a busy part in consolidating an older society with the Women's Exchange, or in lending her name to feeble charities, no woman ever lived more closely to her sense of duty."—Banner

Miss Rebecca F. Kelly, whose death at the age of 79 years, occurred in Philadelphia, on Saturday, July 28th, was a daughter of the late Judge Israel Webster Kelly, of NewHampshire, a brother-in-law and intimate friend of Daniel Webster. Her mother was a daughter of the Rev. Elijah Fletcher of Hopkinton, N. H., and elder sister of Miss Grace Fletcher, the first wife of Daniel Webster. It was in the Kelly mansion, Miss Kelly's home in Salisbury, N. H., where young Webster was introduced to her aunt Grace, and married there June 11th, 1808.

During the twenty years of Mrs. Webster's life Mr. Webster made it a rule to spend the summer season with his wife and children at the Kelly mansion, where he was heartily welcomed. Before his death he told the daughter of Judge Kelly that those seasons were the happiest of his life.

Miss Kelly, the deceased, was very fond of relating domestic incidents of the great statesman. His gentle, happy ways, interested the children and other members of the family.

Miss Kelly was a highly educated and intellectual woman, and her Christian spirit lent a peculiar charm to her life.

The funeral services were held in the Congregational church, East Concord, N. H., July 31st. Rev. Albert L. Kelly (1331 Tioga street), at whose house her death occurred, was a nephew, and was also brought up in the Kelly mansion, where he often met his distinguished relative, Daniel Webster.—The Evangelist.

Things Useful.

Serving Tomatoes.—Browned tomatoes will be found very appetizing. Take large round tomatoes and halve them; place them, the skin side down, in a frying pan in which a very small quantity of butter and lard have been previously melted, sprinkle them with salt and pepper and dredged well with flour. Place the pan on the hot part of the fire and let them brown thoroughly; then stir and brown again, and so on until they are quite done. They lose their acidity and their flavor is superior to stewed tomatoes. A delicious tomato salad is made by dipping rather small evensized tomatoes in scalding water, removing the outer skin immediately and placing them whole on ice. Then make a mayonnaise, and when the tomatoes are perfectly cold, place each one in a little bed of crisp lettuce leaves and serve.

Crab Fritters. For a one-pound can use two eggs, well beaten; a good half teacup of milk, a lump of butter size of an egg (melted), a pinch of cayenne pepper and four tablespoonfuls of powdered cracker. Mix with the crab meat and fry in butter. This makes seven good sized fritters.

Orange and Lemon Ices.—The rind of three oranges grated and steeped a few moments in a little more than a pint of water; strain one pint of this on a pound of sugar and then add one pint of orange or lemon juice; pour in a freezer, and when half frozen add the whites of four eggs beaten to a stiff froth.

Chowchow.—One half pound of English mustard, one-half ounce of tumeric, two tablespoonfuls of mustard seed, one quart string beans, one-half gallon of vinegar, one cup of sugar, one gill of salad-oil, one head of cauliflower, one quart of tiny cucumbers, one quart of butter onions. Boil the cauliflower. beans and onions separately until tender. Cover the cucumbers with strong salt water and soak twenty-four hours. Then mix all together. Put the vinegar in a porcelain-lined kettle. Mix the mustard and tumeric together, and moisten them with a little cold vinegar, then stir them into the hot vinegar, and stir continuously until it begins to thicken; then add the sugar, mustard seed, and oil; stir again and pour this, while hot, over the vegetables. Put away in glass or stone jars.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A PLAIN LITTLE GIRL.

Once I knew a little girl,
Very plain;
You might try her hair to curl,
All in vain;
On her cheek no tint of rose
Paled and blushed, or sought repose!
She was plain.

But the thoughts that through her brain
Came and went,
As a recompense for pain
Angels sent;
So full many a beauteous thing,
In the young soul blossoming,
Gave content.

Every thought was full of grace,
Pure and true;
And in time the homely face
Lovelier grew,
With a heavenly radiance bright
From the soul's reflected light
Shining through.

Shall I tell you, little child,
Plain or poor,
If your thoughts are undefiled,
You are sure
Of the loveliness of worth;
And this beauty, not of earth,
Will endure.

Gracie's Guests.

BY LAURA E. HUTCHINSON.

Gracie was going to have a birthday party.

Yes, she would be six years old the tenth of August, and she had coaxed her mamma for a birthday party, and now, as she went about her play, she was very happy thinking of it.

Gracie was a sweet little girl, but at times she was inclined to be selfish, and her mamma was afraid that when her guests came she would not willingly let them play with her toys and playthings, as she was an only child and always had her playthings all to herself.

Before the children arrived she took Gracie on her knee and kissing her, said.

"Now my dear little girl must not be selfish to-day. She must remember that these little girls are her guests, and must let them play with her playthings."

"But, mamma," interrupted Gracie, "what will I have to play with, then?"

"Why, deary, you have enough dolls so that each can have one. But you must not think of your own pleasure, Gracie, but just try to make the others happy; and so if any little girl prefers the doll you are playing with to the one that she has, you must exchange with her very pleasantly, for she is your guest, you know."

"Yes, mamma."

"I would not like my little girl to be naughty on her birthday, of all days," said mamma. "Now you will be good, won't you, deary?"

Gracie put her arms around her mamma's neck and said:

"Oh, yes, mamma, I'll be good. But is it 'most time for them to come now?"

"Yes, it is quite time. And there is the bell ringing. Remember, Gracie, they are your little guests, and you must not be selfish."

The children all soon arrived, and Gracie for a time proved as unselfish as even her mamma could wish. But it was new for her to see her playthings in the hands of others, and at last, forgetting her promise to her mother, she rushed to the little girl that was holding her largest doll, and snatching it away, said:

"I want that dollie myself. It's mine."

And she did not even give her the one she had in exchange.

Grace kept on in this selfish way till she had her arms full of dolls, and some of the little guests were crying, when mamma appeared on the scene.

"What does this mean, children?"

Gracie hung her head, but hugged her treasures close and did not speak. One little girl, braver than the rest, said:

"Gracie won't let us play with her things, and I think she ought to when she invited us here, don't you?"

"Yes, of course she had. I am sorry she is so naughty."

Then taking the dolls and giving them to the children, she said to Gracie. "You remember what you promised." And leading her from the room, she talked lovingly about the sin of being so selfish.

After a time the two returned to the parlor. For a while Gracie did not join in the play, but watched the others as they handled her toys and dolls.

It was very soon evident that her mamma had succeeded in impressing on Gracie's mind the fact the children were her guests, for as she watched them, one little girl took a toy out of the hands of another, and immediately Gracie rushed to her saying:

"Nellie Frost, don't you know these are my little guests, and you mustn't take the things from them?"

She could see the fault in another, and did not admire it in the least.

That is the way with a great many childen, and even grown people. They can see a fault in another much quicker than in themselves, when it ought to be just the reverse.

Grace is older now, and I am glad to be able to tell you that she is outgrowing that selfish disposition. She is much more lovable—for who can love a selfish child?—Weekly Welcome.

The Chimney-Swallows' Home-Coming.

"Look, Frances," mamma exclaimed, "see the chimney-swallows coming home to go to bed."

Frances looked up and saw in the gathering twilight, a great number of little birds flying over the top of a near house.

"Watch them, dear, and, see how they fly around. See that one drop into the chimney; that chimney is their home."

Frances watched these soot-colored little birds until nearly all had gone into their chimney home.

The swallows flew around in a circle as fast as the eye could follow them. A part of the circle was above the mouth of the chimney. Into it the little birds could now and then be seen to fall.

By and by the circle spread out. It seemed as though the birds had lost the chimney. Soon, however, it would be seen, and making a turn the birds would come over it again and down into it would go a few more.

The birds grew tired going around the same way. So off they flew to a distance. Making a turn, they came back and flew around the chimney the other way. Many more birds this time dropped into the chimney.

Frances thinking the chimney could not hold all the birds in it, said:

"Oh! mamma, the garret must be full by this time." The flying circle, however, seemed as large and dark with birds as at any time.

Again the birds became confused. The circle slowly went higher and higher, when they would try to drop into the chimney, they would miss it.

The birds certainly agreed now that something must be done so they could get into their home. So away they flew from the house to turn themselves again, so that they could fly around the chimney in the direction they had first done.

There were no other houses near the one the birds were flying over. In returning the birds came back and flew downwards, then upwards, so as to make a slanting circle. One side was low, the other much higher in the air. The lowest portion of the circle was over the mouth of the chimney.

This proved a splendid plan for the little birds. They coasted down the sloping side of the circle on their wings, just as a boy would slide down a hill on his sled, and tumbled into the chimney by dozens. In less than two minutes nearly every bird had ridden down this slanting circle into the chimney and jumped into their beds. Not more than ten stragglers remained out.

As the little girl turned away, mamma said:

"What a chirping and chattering there will be in that chimney before the birds drop off to sleep. They will tell each other what they have been doing to-day, and what nice fat beetles and bugs they had to eat.—Wm. Arch. McClean, in Our Little Men and Women.

DURHAM, N. C., Mar. 27, 1894.
MR. W. J. RODDEY, Rock Hill, S. C.
Dear Sir:—When the settlement of my policy for $50,000 in the Equitable was first made, I expressed some dissatisfaction at the outcome, but since I have had more time to look into the matter, I am persuaded that I have had cheap insurance. I have always regarded the Equitable as one of the strongest insurance companies in this country, and am carrying at present a policy for $25,000 on my wife and one for $50,000 on my own life, and have had these policies in force for more than 10 years.
Yours, very truly,
J. S. CARR.

Say Soes.

Half the failures in gardening result from things put in loosely. They cannot succeed unless the soil is made moderately firm about the roots.

Seed corn for next year's planting should be thoroughly dried and kept in a dry place till planting time. It should be gathered before the frosts are severe enough to injure the germ—the earlier the better.

"Beware the pine tree's withered branch, Beware the awful avalanche!"

was the peasant's warning to the aspiring Alpine youth. Dangers greater than these lurk in the pathway of the young man or young woman of the present as they journey up the rugged sidehill of Time. But they may all be met and overcome by a judicious and timely use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the celebrated cure for colds, coughs, catarrh, and consumption. Better than hypophosphites or cod liver oil: unrivalled and unapproachable in all diseases arising from a scrofulous or enfeebled condition of the system.

The "Discovery" is guaranteed to cure in all cases of diseases for which it is recommended, or money paid for it will be refunded.

In Arabia is a plant which has all the properties of laughing gas. It has bright yellow flowers, and seeds like black beans. These last are dried and crushed to powder, and when swallowed in small doses, cause the person taking them to laugh and dance, and behave in the most ridiculous manner, until exhaustion and sleep supervene. The plant is known locally as "the laughing plant."

Affliction is the Christian's school. Here he is made to know himself and his God, his duty and his destiny. Here he learns the vanity of things temporal and the value of things eternal.

A Texas judge severely reprimanded a jury in a case tried at Hempstead because they agreed on a verdict of acquittal on the first poll, eight minutes after they entered the jury room. The claim of the judge was that a trial that required two days demanded discussion in the jury room before coming to a conclusion. No undue bias seems to have been charged upon the jury. He removed another trial for the same offence beyond the county.

WANTED—A GOOD PERMANENT LOCATION FOR A SCHOOL OR COLLEGE.

A Presbyterian minister (wife and one child) thirty-seven years of age, with several years' experience in the school room, desires a good location (prosperous and healthful) for a school, or college, either male, or female, or for both sexes. Would undertake the school on his own responsibility, or under a Board of Trustees. The school building would have to be rent free, a good local patronage would be very desirable; and there would have to be the proper facilities for boarding pupils.

The school ought to open in September, or October.

The minister would prefer a location where he could serve a church, or churches.

RESTING.

Real rest is change of work, we are often told. If we should say change of occupation it would be more to my mind because rest and work are mutually exclusive in our thinking. This will give a place for sleep and may justify the habit of some preachers in getting rid of blue Mondays by reading some light literature. There is great need of resting in many parts of our land. There ought to be a revival of resting on the Sabbath day. Resting among friends recalls one April night twelve years ago and preaching in a small frame chapel in a suburb of Louisville, Ky., to six persons. The suburb was then attracting attention and a Sabbath-school was doing a good work. At the end of a week a church was organized with twenty-two members and two more agreeing to unite if the preacher would accept the call to be their first pastor. It was done and a pastorate of six years was greatly blessed where now, after six years more in the pastorate of two other churches that preacher finds a beautiful brick church and manse for a church of 325 members. Much of the growth and success of this church is due to the labors of the beloved pastor of our church in Winston. The first pastor spent a delightful day with this people last Sabbath, resting in their love and kindness.

The Presbyterian churches of this city of Louisville in connection with our Assembly, are all ably manned with good pastors. They all have buildings ample and comfortable and most of the pastors are helpers in the work of our new Theological Seminary of the Synods of Kentucky and Missouri. This seminary expects full fifty students in coming session and have arranged a course of lectures by Dr. DABNEY, of Texas. This will make the older students of Union, Virginia, almost wish they could hear his voice as when he taught them and live over again the times of his impressive instructions. It will make this seminary even more attractive than its able professors and desirable location have already done. It is gratifying to all of us in the harness that our students can have this advantage and we rejoice that the health and strength of our great teacher warrant his acceptance of the invitation to undertake the labor necessary.

The calls and talks with the proprietors of the Christian Observer were pleasant and cordial, personally and added confirmation to our opinion that the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN has been fortunate in arranging with Dr. RAWLINGS to become editor. They assure you of his cordial welcome to the fraternity. The policy of the PRESBYTERIAN to refrain from personalities and personal criticisms was justly recognized and greetings of good will were emphasized. The building and presses of the Observer were greatly injured by fire in an adjoining building two weeks ago, but the paper was promptly printed near by. The editors of the Observer do a great deal of preaching in mission fields and for churches while seeking pastors. They will be found resting from work of every day by preaching somewhere almost every Sabbath. They, and particularly one of them, have saved to us weaker churches and helped stronger ones in that way.

Here is the little chair of childhood and over there is the lawn where we played, while the dear mother is really resting from the long years of her prayers and tears, resting with children and grandchildren about her, and the dear father is resting in his grave till the resurrection. This resting in recounting the experiences of childhood and youth until maturer years have sent each one apart to the responsibilities of life has a charm for the children and helps us all to feel young again. Here is resting to take our children to the places where we played when at their age and to watch their eager-eared and open-mouthed interest in the "hair-breadth 'scape" and exploits we recall, and at morning and evening worship and recurring meals to to remember the thanksgiving and prayers of a sainted father and seek reverently the blessing of our heavenly FATHER—our own words and rejoice in the wise counsel, and tender teachings of the best of mothers.

Resting in the past we ease the pang of its griefs and the bitterness of its woes and trials and all its hallowed joys abide to cheer us toward future duties. In the shade of a favorite tree where the grass sward was thick and green, we recall the quiet Sabbath afternoon and the row of children of the family and the servants of the household, and the questions about the long line of Scripture saints and historic worthies, and the sermonettes of father and mother. The text of the morning and the sermon are recalled and applied. There is a careful instruction on pure lives and good character and timely teaching to keep GOD's day holy. It was not allowed to critisize the preacher or his message, but he was to be respected for the sake of his office and his message to be received as from GOD. Resting in the memory of such times, we do not see evil, but good in the slavery of such households, and we are persuaded that integrity and intrepidity of strong character were given support and strength. It awakens the question how far we are gainers in multiplying services and activities on the Sabbath day and whether we ought not to have more time given by parents to the moral and spiritual training of themselves and their children. When so much is done in dressing and manners to fit children for modern society, will it be better than the good old way of preparing for duties and trials? Resting in the past and comparing results at this meridian of life, so far as methods and principles are known to us, the balance is weightily on the side of the dear old-fashioned way of family religion, parental, personal instruction—filial obedience and Sabbath observance, with a solemn sense of GOD's approval on the public services and His sanction of the home care and culture. The lives of our companions of childhood, referred to their standard, are side-lights on the subject, making us surer that our parents were right. Resting there we point to dangers ahead for the children of parents who are unwilling to have their children restrained by such methods and put upon such wholesome diet.

Resting is not rusting. That is what this working world needs to know. According to that view wearing out rapidly is resting. We enter our protest. Especially do we protest against the modern society and business way of taking the night, which was given to us for resting, and wearing out body, mind and soul by dissipation of any sort in its blessed shade. The way of the fathers was best in requiring more of the time of the young people to be spent at home and to see that the occupation was more for moral training and mental culture and spiritual strength, than anything we see common nowadays. Resting here in the sweetness of a blessed childhood and youth, we commend the old way of real resting at night and on the Sabbath day. It savors of heaven to our souls.

HERE AND THERE.

MONSIGNOR SATOLLI'S FAMOUS PROCLAMATION—temperance so-called—had been whittled down by explanations until little was left, when the somewhat famous Dr. MCGLYNN was asked for his understanding of the matter. He gave it to a vast audience and it clears away what little of the savour of temperance was left to Mgr. SATOLLI'S pronouncement:

Father McGlynn said there was a danger of magnifying Monsignor Satolli's letter beyond the intention of the writer and beyond its effect. It was not a decree. Monsignor Satolli hardly meant and Bishop Watterson hardly meant that it was a sin to drink intoxicating liquors or to sell them. They have not gone so far as that. In effect the letter meant that Catholics should look to it that their churches, families and business should be so conducted as to be no occasion of sin or scandal.

The liquor traffic is not hurt much by that.

OUR READERS WILL BE DELIGHTED to hear again from "W. S. L."

THE CONVENTION OF THE SIXTH CONGRESSIONAL District was held last week in Lumberton. There were five candidates in contest for the nomination and great enthusiasm for each was evoked. The voting continued through an entire night and until after sunrise next morning. The following from a correspondent of the Charlotte Observer is very significant and carries a moral with it: "The crowd was full of fun nearly all the time, and as this is a dry town, there was not the slightest ill-feeling or rowdyism. Everybody was extremely thirsty, but went no further than the well.

WE DISLIKE EXCEEDINGLY TO REFER to a matter that concerns us very seriously, but we venture the question: Is your subscription paid?

REV. DR. J. HENRY SMITH, PASTOR of the First church, Greensboro, with his sons Rev. Dr. SAMUEL M. SMITH, of Columbia and Drs. HENRY LOUIS SMITH, of Davidson College, and C. ALPHONSO SMITH, of the University of Louisiana, have been having a most enjoyable outing at the Hammocks near Wilmington. In trolling for blue fish they easily took the palm. Dr. J. H. SMITH, on last Sabbath at Island Beach hotel preached a sermon hard indeed; to surpass in its heart-searching directness and in its applicability to every-day life.

LETTER FROM W. S. L.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

"Life is like a summer day" is a line of an old hymn. And so it seemed, full of chequered shade and sheen, smiles and tears, as illustrated in that sweet day when I started off from my home by the tide for a rest among the rugged mountains. The stars were shining bright overhead when we took the "Atlanta Special" from Portsmouth, and ensconced in a luxurious Pullman sleeper, notwithstand the remonstrance of a certain Mr. Debs, we sped swiftly and literally in dreams southward. Brief delays at Weldon, Henderson, Raleigh, brought some slight interruption to slumber, and some slight recognition of familiar scenes even in the dusk of night. The gray dawn greeted us before reaching Sanford, the sun smiled on us there, and after the difficult task of dressing on a swiftly moving train behind an obstreperous curtain, and with such limited quarters that my head (and I am of Zacchaeus like altitude) was constantly in collision with floor of the bunk above (or the ceiling of my own), we got ready for breakfast before we reached Hamlet. To our dismay the morning was advancing in drenched garments. Heavy clouds and an exceedingly wet rain made the day that seemed to begin so fair a day of gloom and discomfort. It commenced (the rain that is) before reaching Keyser, and lasted nearly to Monroe, holding up kindly until we transferred from the gay and giddy flying special to the sedate train on the Carolina Central for Rutherfordton. All through the territory of Fayetteville Presbytery I was familiar with the stations, (and noted with pleasure marked improvements during the six years absence) and with the country roads leading to Cypress, Union, Buffalo, Euphronia, Carthage, White Hill, Bethesda, Jackson Spring, Sharon, Rockingham, Laurel Hill, Pee Dee, and other churches, where in years gone by I had so often preached, and of every one of which I had such fragrant and precious memories. As we journeyed on beyond Monroe the stations were not so well known. But the crops, the rolling lands decked with cotton and corn, the glimpses of blue mountains as gradually the mists rolled away, gave us ample scope for meditation. And from Shelby on to the end of the railway ride we had ample opportunity. I cannot tell how often (and why) we stopped, or why we travelled with such deliberation. But at that part of the road we were on a "mixed train," and had abundant time for observation, and observations, and had no difficulty in counting the telegraph posts

We reached Rutherfordton at 3, an hour late, and after a comforting dinner and rest at the "Iso-thermal," "took up our carriages" and were taken by our carriage to our destination, Chimney Rock. Excepting the new and attractive hotel, and some new and pleasant residences in the upper part of the town, Rutherfordton looks much as it did something over thirty-five years ago as I passed through in a carriage from Asheville to Davidson College, with the Rev. Daniel A. Penick (senior) Rev. E. D. Junkin, and my father—so merry and happy a company—now all but myself entered into and enjoying their well-earned rest. I recognized the old hotel and the room where I stayed over night (in that day people called such hostelries taverns) and it seemed to me I recognized the same crowd of men and boys playing marbles. I could not help but recall my dear friend, so long the loved and useful pastor, Rev. W. M. McGilvary, whose name I heard repeatedly and tenderly mentioned during my stay in Rutherford, and whose ashes rest in the graveyard of dear old Buffalo.

It was nearly five o'clock when we began our stage of eighteen miles to the Blue Ridge. The day had been again transformed into marvellous beauty. The sky was sapphire, the clouds were burnished silver, the sun was gold. The horizon was broken by mountains in the distance of deep amethyst. Our horses travelled well, considering how constant the ascent, and the first ten miles of ride was thoroughly enjoyed. The distant views gradually grew nearer, and the mountains grew larger and grander. We began to know their outlines and their names. But night set in on us before we reached the finest views, and journeying along and crossing repeatedly a mountain stream, the "Rocky Broad," (by the way they call all their little rivers up here Broad) we were glad to reach our stopping place somewhat after nine. The "silver shining moon" gave its light—but not enough to dispel the dark and ominous shadows, and huge rocks and clumps of fir and rhododendron seemed like dread ogres and spectres. So our home was welcomed. In the dark it appeared to be an ordinary farm-house without "modern improvements" and for that matter it looked the same way in the day time. But the rooms though small and scantily furnished were scrupuously clean. So too I may say of the table, plain country fare plainly served, but always neat and clean, and we always had an appetite and answered the bell promptly. The water was clear cold, mountain spring water, soft and pure. I want to say something more about the place. The house is kept by the widow of the late Judge Logan aided by her sister, and her sons. There are four of these "Logan boys," one engaged in merchandize, the other three giving themselves without stint to the comfort and happpiness of their guests—and the heartiness of their welcome, thoughtfulness of attention, and constant but not annoying assiduity of kindness of these young men, constitute the attraction" of the hotel. They were our companions and friends, our philosophers, entertainers and guides, gentlemen whose names and considerate services will be remembered by every guest. But the thing that charmed me most about these young gentlemen was their deference to their mother and ready aid to her in the duties of the house.

The thing that makes "Chimney Rock" famous is the Chimney Rock. Our home is at the base of the Blue-Ridge. I do not know the exact elevation above sea level. On every side lofty and rugged mountains stand moveless, silent, sublime. In front is the scarred side of "Quaking Bald" with "Harris's View" at the highest point, an elevation more than 4,000 feet above tide-water. Then to the left and nearer is "Round Top." Beyond is Stone Mountain. To the left of the valley is Chimney Rock Mountain, and Chimney Rock itself, while still further left and almost behind us is Sugar Loaf a smooth (looking) rounded peak that merits its name the highest in this cluster of giants. These mountains range from 3,500 to 4,500 feet in height, and with every changing position give new combinations and charming mountain views, and the eye never wearies in looking on these massive monuments of nature. On the bald stone surface of the "Quaking Bald" the eye readily traces the "Old Man's Face" and "Esmeralda's Cabin" outlined and delineated by crags and clefts and masses of fir or lichen—and once described always afterwards seen when the western sun brings to view the contrasts and shadows.

Chimney Rock stands about two miles above the Logan House. It takes its name from a fancied resemblance to a chimney—which eye and mind at once concede. But never son of Anak or Og of Bashan had such massive stone dwelling place or such enduring towering chimney. The great mountain may be likened to some vast castellated structure, by which this Rock rises as its chimney. From some points of view the Rock seems a part of the mountain but it is soon seen to stand on its own base, and rise in stately grandeur by the side of its mighty neighbour. The ascent is not very difficult or perilous. We had the best of guides, the owner of the mountain himself (himself refers to the owner not the mountain) who kindly told us that he would have sent his younger brother, but was told that there was an old gentleman (the imputation was promptly and unanimously resented by the whole party) who wanted to climb the Rock, and our friends at our lodging place had desired his special services. He was certainly kind, thoughtful, attentive, patient. He told us all the points of interest; gave us repeated rests, brought cool—no, cold water for our refreshment—guided over perilous crags and cliffs—along the stair-way constructed from the mountain side to the Rock over a dizzy chasm—till we reached the majestic dome itself. Oh, what a wonder of beauty and glory! The "Rocky Broad" looks like a line of silver through the valley, into which we might leap. The mountains near and far rear their shaggy sides—their solemn stony summits. I might call them sphinx-like but that with ever-changing sun-light and glory—they speak of Him who planted them on their eternal base. The tower on which we stand rises sheer from the valley below 1,100 feet and the precipice on the side next to the mountain is 267 feet, the attitude above sea level being 3,900 feet. The capstone is seventy-five feet in diameter. Here we pause to view the extended panorama, and wonder at the power of the Creator.

But I have taken too much of your time and space, and must reserve some other things I would like to tell you of.

MAN AND NATURE.

The mountains and the forests, and the seas,
Oldest of mourners with pathetic tone,
Have each a natural music, all their own,
Set in accord with human destinies,
Sad, tender, manifold. What is more sweet
Than woodland melodies at noon? More mild
Than the dimpled ocean, like a laughing child
That lisps, and rolls a jewel to our feet,
Breathlessly calm? And then, with an hour,
Behold that self-same ocean on the shore
Lashes; the forest quakes; with deafening power
The rocks are rent. Then, oh! amid that roar
Awe-struck we sink, we fall upon our knees,
Ye mountains, and ye forests, and the seas!

The mountains, and the forests, and the seas,
Have each their music, with our mortal lot
In sympathy, to soothe, exalt, appease;
And man, too, has his music; has a note
Of world-wide sweetness; tender reveries,
Dirges of buried blisses unforgot,
Rejoicing paeans, glorious symphonies;
But all of them lack something; they have not
The voice once heard in Eden; and the ear,
Pleased with rich sound, is as when some one sings
In a great court before a king of kings;
He closes; and of rapture born, a cheer
Shakes the high roof; but when the Lord of all Speaks, there is awe and silence in the hall.

Are Our Descendants to be Criminals?

The public were made familiar with the startling increase of drunkenness in Switzerland, two years ago, in consequence of the admission and sale of cheap alcoholic liquors. All public interests, the existence of the republic, even, were affected by the general besotment. The Fortnightly Review for September contains an article on "The Origins of Crime," in which the writer treats of epilepsy, insanity, drunkenness and similar affections. It is in statistics of drunkenness that the most serious facts are brought out. A curious fact is that in the year 1890, in Great Britain, 1,544 infants were killed by overlying—drunken mothers rolling upon their infants while in alcoholic stupor. The Registrar General attributes as many more which are reported as dying from other causes, to this cause, over 3,000 infants overlaid and killed by drunken mothers in one year. Since that time the increase of infantile death from this cause has steadily increased. The killings occur for the most part Saturday and Sunday nights, after the week's wages have been paid.

The increase of this peculiar death rate is pari passu with the increase in the consumption of alcoholic liquors, which increase now is running at about $5,000,000, a year.

In France the increase in the consumption of drinks has increased even more rapidly than in Great Britain—thus: The amount consumed per capita in 1850 was one and one-half litres; in 1869 two and one-half, and in 1892 four and one-half litres.

A specially rapid increase has been observed since 1888, and wines which were at one time the prevailing drink have been replaced by brandy, gin, and absinthe. Thus during the past forty years the consumption of intoxicants in France has augmented threefold. The writer finds that drunkenness prevails more largely in the mining and maritime localities than in the agricultural regions—which is the case in this country, and everywhere. But he now comes to a part of his investigations which should fix the most serious attention, as it bears upon the future of the race. He shows that the moderate drink habit is the predisposing cause of insanity and crime. We quote:

"Alcohol plays a far less important role in the evolution of simple forms of insanity than it does in the production of the degenerate criminal, and the exceptional explosive or impulsive forms of insanity. The degeneration in type of nerve-tissue, and in particular of the delicate structure of the brain, entailed by the excessive indulgence in alcohol is a fact open to the observation of every pathological inquirer. That a highly important connection exists between this structural degradation induced by alcohol and the prevalence of epilepsy in the offspring of drunkards has been conclusively shown. Thus, to quote figures given by Dr. Henry Clarke, who investigated the subject with great care, it was found that, whilst for all criminals alike excessive drinking was traced in the father in 43.5 per cent. of the cases, it was found to exist in 49.5 per cent. of all epileptic criminals, and in a further percentage of 18.2 recorded as "doubtful," but almost certainly intemperate. This association of alcoholism, epilepsy, and criminality is a fact of vital importance; and it becomes all the more suggestive when contrasted with results obtained amongst the non-criminal community, more especially those who, being insane, must be regarded as subjects of morbid nervous instability.

"The writer investigated the direct alcoholic heredity in 4,125 of the insane admissions into West Riding Asylum during a period of ten years, and found excessive drinking amongst the antecedents in but 6.6 per cent.; but (limiting the inquiry to males), for 2,311 men the percentage rose to 9.39; whilst again, for those patients in whom personal intemperance played part as a factor of their insanity, the parents and grand-parents were drunkards in 11.2 per cent. and a further percentage of 6.0 showed drunkenness in the collateral line of uncles, aunts, and brothers.

"One obvious conclusion derived from these figures is this—that the alcoholic inheritance of the insane is by no means so important a factor in the evolution of their insanity as is the alcoholism of the antecedents of the criminal a possible factor in the evolution of a criminal type of degenerates. In the former, ancestral intemperance is probably only one of many predisposing forces which tend to favor insanity in the offspring; but, in the latter, ancestral drink would appear to be an all-important, if not most important element in inducing the moral degradation so associated with crime.

"Yet, though ancestral drunkenness is not so marked a factor in the evolution of simple insanity, as before stated, it makes itself felt in the development of epileptic offspring amongst the non-criminal community, in the moral obtuseness and degradation of such subjects, in the frequency of imbecile or idiot offspring, and peculiar epileptoid states of mind. In asserting that the epileptic state of mind is peculiarly prevalent amongst the criminal classes I must shield myself against a possible misinterpretation. The popular notion of epilepsy is naturally based on the more common and obtrusive symptoms of that disease—the sudden loss of consciousness, the wild cry, distorted features, foaming mouth and general convulsions, and the Scripture picture of the demonomaniac forms to most of the non-professional their type of epilepsy. The scientific connotation of the term is, however, far wider, embracing as it does a large proportion of cases where purely sensory or psychical disturbances occur, and wherein motorial or convulsive phenomena are rarely or never seen. Thus it is that epileptics have been broadly distinguished into two groups—such as show a predominance of convulsive phenomena, and such as are characterized by the prevailing feature of mental or sensory derangements. The essential element, however, in all cases of epilepsy alike is an extraordinary degree of instability of nervous tissue, preeminently that of the brain, an instability which can only be denominated explosive, in view of the suddenness, severity, and transient nature of the resulting phenomenon or "fit," an instability which can only indicate such a morbid constitution of nervous tissue that the slightest disturbing agency may become effective in producing the explosion. In fact, it is in this paroxysmal explosiveness and sudden loss of consciousness that epilepsy is mainly distinguishable from like affections. Most epileptics throughout the whole period of their lives (as well as those who are convulsed as those who suffer from no so-called convulsive fits) exhibit certain mental peculiarities which form a group of symptoms so characteristic of this disease that they may well be designated epileptoid indications. How far does the criminal community present us with such features as may thus be regarded as of epileptic origin? There is beyond doubt, I believe, a certain not insignificant section of criminals who show, with or without neurotic indications, these obvious epileptoid signs. There is the querulous discontent, and a morbid irritability from no obvious cause, often leading on any trifling excitement to wild, passionate outbursts wholly out of proportion to the exciting cause; there is the morbid subjectivity expressing itself in hypochondriacal or fanciful ailments, leading by a natural sequence to ideas of restricted rights—of injustice at the hands of their fellows, or of pretty persecution—all features common to the class of epileptics and criminals to which we allude. There is the tendency to an intense egoism rendering them preeminently unsympathetic and callous—narrowing the circle of their interests, and giving the death-blow to all altruistic sentiments which are antagonistic to the criminal instincts, and which leads so readily to an utter disregard of truth, and even a shameless deception, often incongruously conjoined with a demonstrative religiosity. There are the occasional illusions and hallucinations, in particular those of hearing, and which, again we find are so prone to occur as the result of solitary confinement in the case of certain neurotic criminals; there are the amnesic attacks—sudden forgetfulness, lapses of consciousness—so slight as to be lost upon the ordinary observer, and yet revealed subsequently by, perhaps, slight incoherence of speech, unmeaning gesture, motiveless conduct, revealing really an automatic state of mind to which he is momentarilly reduced, and which are again frequently succeeded by passionate out breaks with an uncalculating violence of conduct. In exceptional cases we witness results of emotional waves—voluminous emotional states, sudden in origin, mysterious and unaccountable to the subject himself, undefined in nature, rapid in transformation from one phase to another—now of sorrow, now of joy, and again of causeless terror, which lifts the epileptic subject into sudden transports of unmeaning ecstasy, or plunges him into profound grief; and which in later stages may drompt to those bizarre delusions so frequently connected with supernatural agency—of divine or malign influence, of demoniacal possession or, again, of a double conflicting personality. These latter conditions are certainly characteristic of many so-called criminal paranoics, who distinguish themselves by plotting especially against personages of exalted rank.

"The moral decadence due to the blunting of finer sensibilities is a notable feature in the epileptic as in the criminal. The deceit, treachery, mendacity, low cunning of the former are proverbial amongst asylum communities; with, of course, exceptions, the majority display a hypocritical disposition associated with a cowardly and often impulsive recklessness. Then again there is the peculiar brutality in the violent conduct of epileptics and criminals—the purposeless, unnecessary violence, explicable only on the supposition that the act was the outcome of blind automatism following an epileptic crisis—an excessive violence long since insisted upon by Trousseau, Maudsley, and others as an important indication of epileptic criminal acts. Nor must we omit to mention the notable tendency towards malingering displayed by epileptics, a feature common to them and the criminal community at large."

The conclusion of these investigations is that alcoholism, largely on the increase, is storing up for the future that kind of mental disease, "epileptoid" which manifests itself in crime. The acts of criminality which come as immediate effects of alcoholic stimulation are far from being so deplorable as the setting up of pathological conditions, in the future generations, which lead to established criminal character.—Interior.

Christ Knoweth His Own.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

Jesus knoweth them that are his. "I am the Good Shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine. He can call every one of the flock by name. The officers of a Church may be deceived in many cases of those who apply for admission to membership; but no putting on "sheep's clothing" can mislead the omniscient Shepherd. There is a widespread religious interest in the land, and among the many thousands that profess conversion, it is not possible that Christ himself can be deceived as to a solitary case. Not only does he read every heart to the bottom; it is by the operation of his divine Spirit that every soul is regenerated. Not every one who enters an inquiry-room, finds Christ; and not every one who attends a "meeting of converts" is genuinely converted. Those who begin to lead a new life have got the new heart; those who follow the Shepherd have entered into the flock. There is a solemn warning in this fact. There is a precious comfort in it, too; for the Saviour knows perfectly well whom he is saving.

Not only does Jesus Christ know exactly who have come into his true flock, but he knows all about every one of them—their strong points and their weak points, their besetting sins and their new experiences of grace just beginning to sprout in their hearts. When we are sick we send for the old family physician; he is best acquainted with our constitutions. It is half the battle in family government for the parent to understand thoroughly the qualities of a child. Here is one gentle boy who can be led by a cotton thread; and there is another who snaps the cords of restraint as Samson broke the seven green withs. Some parents pay dearly for their ignorance or wilful blindness to the real character of their children. That was a wise as well as a loving mother who said, "I don't find it so hard to bring children up, as I do to take them down when they need it."

Our blessed Master, in his family discipline, commits no mistakes. When he takes an immortal soul under his loving care and into his training-school, he understands the character of all his pupils. Scott's "Jeanie Deans" put it very well when she said, 'There is ane wha kens better what is for our gude than we ken oursells." Christ detects and exposes the self-seeking ambition of certain disciples by setting a little child in the midst of them to teach them humility and unselfishness. In his raw inexperience Simon Peter bragged loudly of his loyalty; but the Master takes him down by the startling announcement, "Before the cock crows, thou shalt deny me thrice!" Jesus discovered the splendid natural qualities in Saul of Tarsus which converting grace could mould into a leadership of the churches; and what a tremendous schooling he gave him before he graduated! The same Great Shepherd has a place of usefulness in his flock for humble Tryphena and Tryphosa, for Tertius with his pen and for Dorcas with her needle. Jesus knows what is in every one of us, and just how much can be got out of us. This makes him, not a hard, exacting Master, but the most forbearing and considerate of employers and guardians. He never lays on weak shoulders the loads which only stalwarts can carry. All the while, too, how sweetly come the encouraging words, "I am with you always; my grace is sufficient for you; as thy day, thy strength shall be." He calls us not slaves; he calls us friends.

How perfectly acquainted he is, too, with all our weaknesses! He knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are but dust. Here is great encouragement for penitent sinners. Those poor fellows who drift from their dram dens into the Jerry McAuley Mission House, find there a pitying Shepherd who welcomes the most wretched outcast who has been bedraggled in the mire. Up at the other end of the scale, Christ is equally conscious of the intellectual doubts and difficulties with which some Christians of skeptical temperaments have to contend. He quenches no smoking flax; he breaks no bruised reeds. The secret sorrow which I dare not breathe to the most intimate friend, I can freely unbosom to my Saviour. Ah, how well he knows every thorn that pricks my foot, and every wound that trickles its silent drops from the bleeding soul! This is a wondrous encouragement to prayer. For my Physician never will administer the wrong medicine, and I am sure that he never will refuse to hear my pull at "the night-bell" in the hour of sudden distress.

The fact of Christ's perfect knowledge of all our needs and requirements, throws great light on some dark providences. It explains some mysteries—why one of us is put up and another is put down; why one is prospered and another is impoverished; why one seems to run before the breeze and another is buffeted with contrary winds. Dear, loving Master! He knoweth what is for our good. Let him probe to the bottom if the wound requires it. He knoweth what is in me; yes, and what ought to come out of me, if I would attain to full health and robustness of spirit. Far better the probe and the pruning-knife than to be cast out, as incurable cumberers of his fold. If it is a joy to know whom we have believed, it is equally a joy that "He knoweth them that are his." There is a bond of reciprocal knowledge and affection between the Redeemer and his redeemed ones. Christ even compares it to the unity between the everlasting Father and Son; for as the Father knoweth the Son, so doth the Shepherd know his flock! This is an overwhelming thought; and it points onward to an intimacy of everlasting love in heaven.—New York Evangelist.

A True Wife.

I know nothing so Christian as to love a lost and hateful thing for the reason that it is lost and hateful; to cling with unalterable affection to a dishonored man. Names and dates can be furnished of sundry instances. This one is authentic: A lovely young woman, respected, happy, discovers that her husband is a defaulter, just ready to abscond with his felonious gains. In a moment her arms are around him. "Do not flee," she says, "reassert your manhood, and accept the consequences of your error. I will stand by you and share your lot to the bitter end." Aye, and she never flinched. Within a month her hair was gray. Consideration for others made her deny herself to friends who would be compromised by familiarity with a felon's wife. All thought of happiness was finally surrendered. "My business in life," she argued, "is not to be happy, but to rescue my fallen husband!"

O ye shining ones, who shall be sent to convey her to her rest, how gently will ye lift her from the dust of her voluntary humiliation! How soft the touch of your angel palms! How will ye say to one another of this chastened, suffering soul, it is by every token and lineament a true counterpart of Him who left the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and with bleeding hands extricated the lost sheep from the thorns of its own folly wherein it seemed hopelessly entangled.—Bishop Lay.

Losing the Temper.

Losing the temper takes all the sweet, pure feeling out of life. You may get up in the morning with a clean heart, full of song, and start out as happy as a bird, and the moment you are crossed and you give way to your temper, the clean feeling vanishes and a load as heavy as lead is rolled upon the heart, and you go through the rest of the day feeling like a culprit. And anyone who has experienced this feeling knows that it cannot be shaken off, but must be prayed off.

MY DESIRE.

If there be some weaker one,
Give me strength to help him on;
If a blinder soul there be,
Let me guide him nearer Thee;
Make my mortal dreams come true
With the work I fain would do;
Clothe with life the weak intent,
Let me be the thing I meant;
Let me find in Thy employ
Peace that dearer is than joy;
Out of self to love be led,
And to heaven acclimated,
Until all things sweet and good
Seem my natural habitude.

Buried With Christ in Baptism.

The apostles, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, used forcible language, and striking figures of speech, to express the truths of spiritual life and experience. One of the most striking figures used to express conversion and the converted life is that of death. The Christian is said to be dead. "Ye are dead." He is not only dead, but is buried. Just as a dead person is committed to the grave by burial, and is shut off from any participation in the life left behind, so the soul, by conversion to Christ, and entrance upon the Christian life, is entirely separated from any part or lot in the old life of sin and guilt and condemnation.

Death is a great change to the physical being, as complete and overwhelming a change as we can conceive. The mother is cut off in the midst of her loving ministrations, and separated from the ones for whom she cares; the business men is seen no more in the marts of trade; the statesman no longer administers the affairs of the government; the artisan touches no more his implements, and the artist comes no more into his studio; the invalid quits the weary couch of pain, and the babe passes away in the very morning of existence. And when burial takes place, and the remains are committed irrevocably to their silent resting place in the grave, it is impressed most forcibly upon all survivors that there is no coming back into the old scenes of earthly life.

So, with the one who becomes a Christian, there is a death to sin. The old excitements and delights have ceased to stir the heart. The old temptations and allurements have no longer the old-time fascination. Old things have passed away. Ye are dead. All things are become new. Ye are in a new world. Everything seems new. The word of God is now a living message from the heavenly Father Prayer is a living communion with God. Christ is a real presence. Ye are alive to the things of God. Ye are no longer of the world, worldly. Ye are in the world, and yet not of the world. The old world is around about, but God's children are dead to it, and are alive in the spiritual life and realm, with new affections, desires, enjoyments and relations.

The power that has wrought this new and wonderful change is God's Holy Spirit. He has come in his blessed processes. He has been welcomed. He has breathed upon the one who lived the worldling's life. He has breathed upon his brow and heart and inmost life, and he has become, in the new creation, a living soul. He has entered the kingdom of God, the spiritual realm, and has passed out of, and died to, the kingdom of Satan and sin. By God's Spirit he has died and been buried, and is no more to live and walk in the old ways of sin.

It is a wonderful transformation. The converted one is alive to God. He walks in newness of life. His life is hid with Christ in God. He confesses Christ before his fellowmen. He is joined to the body of God's believing people. He receive the seal of baptism, in the water sprinkled on his brow, in token of the cleansing life brought down into the heart by the Holy Spirit. In this act he becomes so completely identified with the new life, and so completely separated from the old life that the sacrament of baptism becomes a separating act, and men realize that this one, so thoroughly committed to Christ, will come back no more into the old ways of sinfulness and worldliness.

Christian life is something real. It is a new experience and in new relationships. God help us to accept it as an actual turning away from sin and the world, and a life in the kingdom of God. Each sacramental service is to us, and to those about us, a reminder that we are dead to the world, and that we are alive to Christ. For every true Christian is it true that he is dead, and yet that he is alive. He lives, and yet not he, but Christ in him, and the life that he lives he lives, not of himself, but by faith in him who died for him and rose again. In this faith he himself lives the life of the risen, seeking the things that are above. For he is dead, and his life is hid with Christ in God.—Herald and Presbyter.

Filling Out God's Pattern.

BY THE REV. W. H. ILSLEY.

While at the World's Fair, last summer, I stood for a while by the side of one of those wonderful wood-carving machines, and watched, with deep interest, while the operator carved a reproduction of that beautiful piece of statuary, the diver. At first I saw nothing to guide the eye and hand of the carver, and wondered as he drew out the finer lines of the completed figure. Finally, I asked him how it was done, for he did not appear an artist, in fact he was a stolid Dutchman, seemingly too devoid of artistic sentiment to appreciate the beauty of the figure he was producing. He replied gruffly, "dond you see dot battern, any more?" Looking up I did see a figure, just like the one he was carving, and, resting upon it was a guide, so that all that was left for him to do was to hold the chisel to the wood. The machine, with more apparent intelligence than its operator, "did the rest."

There was suggested to me the thought that God has a pattern for every life. The motto of Prince Albert was "find out the plan of God in your generation, and then beware lest you cross it or fail to find your place in it." And some one else has said, "There is a heavenly pattern for earthly service." Nor is it probable God would withhold the plan from His child, when carrying it out means so much to him. But if this be true, why so many defective lives?

Picking up almost any daily paper, one's eye will be attracted by advertisements of "misfit parlors," where all sorts of misfits are to be found. I wonder if there will be any misfit parlors in heaven. There certainly appear to be many misfit lives. So many angular people crowd themselves into round holes, and, to make matters worse, they get stuck there and seem unable to get out. Such a life mars God's plan, both for itself and for the world. There is sure to be conflict if the architect and the builder have different building plans? But the conflict is the smallest part of it. There will be defective building. And no less will it be true if the plan of life which God has made and that by which the man lives differ.

The one important question for every life is that of Paul, "What wilt thou have me to do?" Every true life does God's work and submits to His direction. He who lives according to God's pattern has already begun to practice heavenly living. "It is a good thing to know how they do things in heaven." And there is no better way to learn this than by living according to the divine rule which is the same for heaven and earth. Christ said, "I do the will of Him that sent me." He knew the pattern, and was filling out its every line.

If one asks Paul's question seriously, and watches for the answer, he will find it as God unfolds His will through the operation of the Holy Spirit on the heart, mind and inclinations, and the unfoldings of divine providences in the every day affairs of his life, and both made clearer by a careful study of his pattern as shown in the written word.

The result of an attempt to fill out God's pattern will be a higher type of manhood, a truer womanhood. But, while many desire just this, some are discouraged because they realize their ideal so slowly. They are discontented because they do not come at once "unto the fullness of the stature." Here they make mistake. Be content to watch and wait. Be prompt to act as God reveals the plan, even in small parts. Be content with apparent failure, for your failure may mean the truest success of the divine plan. Be careful of the seemingly little things that make up the whole of life. It is not the broad sweeps of the brush that make the beautiful picture, but the fine lines, some of them so light as to be unseen alone, which combine to produce the most charming results.

Susan Coolidge has aptly represented the value of filling out God's pattern in these words:

One small life in God's great plan,
How futile it seems as the ages roll,
Do what it may, or strive how it can,
To alter the sweep of the infinite whole!
A single stitch in an endless web;
A drop in the ocean's flow and ebb;
But the pattern is rent where the stitch is lost,
Or marred where the tangled threads are crossed.
And each life that fails of the true intent.
Mars the perfect plan that its Master meant.

Church Discipline.

Church discipline is not a pleasant duty to pastors, sessions and other Church courts. Nor is the trial, conviction and punishment of offenders against the civil laws an agreeable task, but it is necessary to the preservation of good order and to the protection of property and life. Equally necessary is the discipline of members of the Church who have violated their vows and brought reproach upon the cause of Christ, after private admonition has proved ineffective. This was provided for in both the Old and New Testament Churches. It is intended for the good of the offender and also of the Church—in short to be a means of grace. To this end it is to be performed in the spirit of Christ and according to the teachings of the Word of God.

As a matter of course no one ought to be brought before a Church court for the gratification of prejudice or personal dislike; nor upon merely floating rumors, the truth of which has not been investigated; nor upon what amounts to nothing more than suspicions. The alleged facts should be carefully examined, and the preliminary steps enjoined in Scripture should always be taken. "If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him first his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear thee, tell it unto the Chureh; but if he neglect to hear the Church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican." Even when the offences are flagrant it is always best to approach the guilty one concerning them before beginning formal proceedings.

The Church cannot safely neglect discipline in the present imperfect conditions of life. The family that lays aside parental restraint and authority, and the State that neglects to arrest and punish those guilty of crimes, will alike come to grief. And the Church that takes no account of members who in life are violating its laws and the laws of God, bringing shame upon themselves and grief upon the devout followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, will sooner or later bring upon itself spiritual weakness and leanness. It is unfaithful to the trust committed to it—unfaithful to its great Head. The reproach likely to be heaped upon the pastor, session or private individual, no doubt deters many from initiating process, even in cases where the Church is suffering from the worldliness and misdoings of some of its members.

The Divine law was given by Paul to Timothy in these words; "Them that sin rebuke before all, that others may fear. I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things, without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality." Our book of discipline declares: "Discipline is the exercise of that authority, and the application of that system of laws, which the Lord Jesus Christ has appointed in His Church; embracing the care and control maintained by the Church over its members, officers and judicatories." And the Book of Discipline of the Southern Presbyterian Church truly says that discipline "acts the part of a tender mother correcting her children for their good. that every one of them may be presented faultless in the day of the Lord Jesus."—Banner.

Dear Sir:—After using the Electropoise only a few months I sent you a testimonal which those that did uot know me doubted, and those that knew all about me said the half was not told. When I think of the good long rest I have enjoyed for nearly two years from excruciating pain and extreme nervousness, I find that language fails to express my appreciation for it, so I only say as I have said before that it truly is the most wonderful of God-given remedies to alleviate the suffering of all humanity. And I do believe it will help any one that will use it properly. I hope that others may be persuaded to try it as I did without faith and receive as much relief and that you may be spared to help thousands of poor despondent sufferers as you did me; I shall ever be grateful to you for your kindness and sympathy.

True Faith.

If we would translate saving faith, such faith as is illustrated in the Epistle to the Hebrews, into a modern equivalent, we might call it faith in the victory of the good, in the victory of holy love and of self-surrender to the blessed purpose of God in Christ.

What a change would be produced in our ordinary lives if even in this sense we were men of faith! Take it in the simple sense of faith in the possibilities of life for ourselves, if we only embrace the promises of goodness and of God. Most of us accept a poor idea of what is possible for us to be or do. We live by conventional standards, and do not realize how rich and helpful life can be made through love, hope, and faith in God. Such a want of faith paralyzes effort. "It was easy enough for Abraham," we say, "to whom God gave a distinct command, to rise up and go forth from Mesopotamia." But what do we know of the nature of that voice which spoke to him? Are we sure that it was more distinct or more authoritative and personal than the voices which speak to ourselves every day—the voices of purity or of kindness and self-sacrifice which whisper to us of the right path, the right act, the right thought, the right word? It should be ours to embrace the Divine promises that come to us in these ordinary ways, and to live by self-surrender to them. It is thus we can be true children of Abraham, and inheritors of his faith and blessing.

Life brings untold possibilities of good to each of us, but what we need is faith in these, especially when we are immersed in the petty details, the drudgeries, the coarser passions, and trials which daily come to us. We need this faith in a Divine calling and in the promise of God, when the world and the flesh and the devil appeal to our sloth or to our self-indulgence, and we are tempted to take the low standard of the world, and to be, as they say, "no better than others." It is then we need faith in Christ, and, at whatever cost, to surrender ourselves to the vision which he vouchsafes of what is right and true and good. It may be hard just then to obey, to take this particular cross, to lay aside the indulgence that fascinates, and to turn at once from the tempter to the Saviour; but in so doing lies the way of faith and victory. It is more difficult to act under the highest principle when life brings little stimulus to heroism, and when its interests are monotonous or petty, than when we are aroused by the trumpet voice of great events or startling dangers. Salvation in the most real sense will come by such daily faith that shrinks not from the demands which a true embracing of the promises always brings.—Sunday Magazine.

1. A Course Preparing the Student to Practise Law;
2. A Business Law Course for Business Men and Women.

The tuition fee is small, the course complete, the result perfect. Nicely printed catalogues explain both courses. They can be had for the asking. Address

Dan River:—Dan River church, where so many regard our dear Bro. Black as their spiritual father, had the pleasure of having him with for a few days, beginning July 29th. We had a delightful meeting of a week, large congregations, about twenty confessions, seven additions to the church

Asbury:—A meeting closed at Asbury on Monday, Aug. 13th, 1894, which was a glorious work of grace. We had with us Rev. A.S. Caldwell, of Sanford, Fla., and Mr. L. A. Coulter, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. for North Carolina, forty-six confessed Christ, twenty-nine united with the Presbyterian church, nearly all adults.

Bro. R. W. George, who was with us during the meeting made a proposition to double the subscription of every person who would subscribe for a church building. Nearly $300 was subscribed, which gives us with Bro. George's half $600. Arrangements were immediately begun on land given by Bro. George, and by winter we hope to have a house of worship. On the first Sunday of September we expect to organize Asbury church if the way be clear. To God be the praise.

Shelby:—Following our last communion season, the Shelby church enjoyed a delightful "week of service." Rev. John A Preston, D. D., of the First church, Charlotte, came to us on Tuesday, July 24th, and preached seven sermons, returning to his flock on Saturday, and Rev. John H. Boyd, D. D., of the Second church, Charlotte, preached for me on Sabbath. It is needless to say that our people were greatly profited by the rich, suggestive, spiritual and impressive preaching of these two brethren. Believers were greatly comforted and stimulated, and the unconverted were profoundly impressed. Our people are greatly encouraged by the present outlook for Presbyterianism in this community. Since April we have received ten accessions, making twenty-eight within the past twelve months. A number have been dismissed to other churches, but the net gain is still very gratifying and is manifested by greatly increased congregations. P.

Ramah Church, in Mecklenburg Presbytery:—Rev. Wm. Black began a meeting at Ramah on Aug. 12th, continued through the 19th. His preaching was with moving earnestness and power. The Lord blessed his labors and here as elsewhere he granted fruit to his work. Christians were strengthened and built up in the faith; many backsliders were reclaimed; many professions of faith were made, and of these, twenty-three have already joined our congregation—making thirty-five additions since our spring communion, for which we devoutly thank God and take courage.

Bethlehem Church:—I have just closed a week's meeting at Bethlehem Presbyterian church, five miles from Fayetteville; was assisted one day by Licentiate C. M. Richards who is supplying the church in Fayetteville in the absence of Rev. A. J. McKelway. The congregations were large day and night, and the interest increased from day to day. Some attended and sought Christ who had not been to church in five years. Eight were received on profession of their faith in Christ, and as many more professed conversion. Bethlehem is an old church, but has never been ceiled until this year. With the building renovated, and the membership revived, we hope for a brighter future for this church.

Christian Endeavor in Greensboro:—After a life of active church work and seeing the church in many stages of coldness, and likewise of revivals in these years, this writer desires, for the encouragement of all Christian workers and churches to emphasize the great benefit he has observed in the efforts put forth and carried out by the Christian Endeavor Societies of the First church, Greensboro. What I see I know, and when I mention one fact of the many, this will be sufficient for the time, viz: That it has brought out some fifteen or twenty in the last six months who offer public prayer, whose voices had not before been heard in a public assemblage. Then the silent work that is going on daily, by the six or eight committees, and the stirring monthly reports of the same is enough to stimulate to even far greater exertions that will tell for a time, yes, and for all eternity. Burgaw:—We have just closed a meeting of ten days in our church here resulting in the revival of God's people and bringing them into a closer union with Christ and each other with a promise of a more faithful life in His service.

We have received fifty-seven applications for membership into the various churches on profession of faith as follows: Presbyterian 39, Baptist 13, Methodist 5. The preaching was done by Rev. W. H. Evans, of Salisbury, Tenn., a Methodist brother, formerly of Memphis Conference, but who for some years past has been located that he might do evangelistic work. Bro. Evans preaches a pure gospel, with power, with courage, and with boldness, and God blesses the labors of His faithful servant. Eternity alone can reveal the great blessings of his visit to us. Bro. Evans is now holding a meeting in Whiteville and the prayers of our good people follow him. To God be all the praise.

DOMESTIC.

Dr. James Strong died in August, at Round Lake, where he was delivering a series of lectures before the Summer School on the "Revelations." Dr. Strong was born in New York in 1822; graduated from the Wesleyan University in 1844; removed to Flushing, L. I., where he projected and built the Flushing Railroad. He was reputed to be the most eminent Biblical and Hebraic scholar in the United States. He held the degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology, but he was not a clergyman. He was Professor of Exegetical Theology in Drew Seminary for twenty-five years, and was a member of the Anglo-American Commission to revise the English version of the Bible in 1881.

Among other bequests the late Mrs. Elizabeth Pleasonton, widow of the late General Pleasonton, directed, upon the death of her great niece, Elizabeth Hoge Pleasonton, the distribution of a trust fund of $20,000 equally between the Presbyterian Home for Widows and Single Women, the Presbyterian Orphanage, the Home for Incurables and the Presbyterian Hospital. She also made the following absolute bequests: The Bethel church for Seamen, $300; the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Domestic Missions, $3,000; the Presbyterian General Assembly, $5,000, in trust for the Ministerial Relief Fund; the Trustees of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Princeton, $6,000, for the endowment of one or more scholarships in the name of her parents Thomas and Elizabeth Hoge; the Presbyterian Board of Education, $3,000; the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, $3,000; the Presbyterian Home for Widows and Single Women, $3,000, as a memorial foundation in the name of "Elizabeth Pleasonton;" the Philadelphia Home for Incurables, $10,000, to endow two free beds in perpetuity in the name of her brother, Thomas H. Hoge; the Franklin Reformatory for Inebriates, $5,000, to endow a free bed in the name of "Elizabeth Pleasonton;" the Presbyterian Hospital, $25,000, to endow a separate ward, to be known as the Rev. Thomas Hoge Ward, to be assigned to such class of cases as the Trustees of the hospital may designate; the Presbyterian Orphanage, $5,000, to endow a cottage, to be known as "The Elizabeth Hoge Pleasonton Cottage, and the further sum of $2,000 to furnish and equip it.

ELDERS' AND DEACONS' INSTITUTE.

After three days of enthusiastic and successful work, the Elders' and Deacons' Institute of Mecklenburg Presbytery came to a close on Thursday afternoon at Steel Creek church. There were twenty-six ministers, fifty-six elders and thirty-five deacons in attendance; and to so great an extent was the large audience room taxed that additional benches were brought in to accommodate the crowd.

On Tuesday addresses were delivered by Revs. Roger Martin, S. W. Newell, F. D. Hunt, Jonas Barclay, and Elders Col. Jno. E. Brown and Jno. B. Ross.

The address of Rev. Roger Martin on "Pan Presbyterianism," was notably able and elaborate.

On Wednesday came the multitude—men, women and children. And it was well they did, for it proved a day of great interest. Among the principal speakers were Revs. Jno. H. Boyd, D. D., T. P. Barclay, G. A. Hough, J. W. Siler, Chalmers Moore, Roger Martin, S. W. Newell, R. A. Miller, and Elders H. K. Reid, Prof. Dinwiddie and W. B. Newell.

Among the forcible addresses of the day were those of Rev. T. P. Barclay, of Wytheville, Va., on "The Gift of the Holy Spirit for Service," and the remarks of Professor Dinwiddie on "Defects in the Ministry." The paper of Dr. Boyd on the "Bible Idea of a Deacon" produced a remarkably fine impression. It was pronounced a gem.

But Thursday was "the great day of the feast" after all. Among the speakers were Revs. L. H. Baldwin, T. H. Pritchard, E. A. Sample, T. P. Barclay, J. W. Siler, A. L. Phillips, E. L. Siler, Chalmers Moore and Elder J. K. Rankin, Dr. F. O. Hawley and Deacon John E. Oates.

For about an hour Rev. A. L. Phillips, the Assembly's Secretary for colored work spoke on "Our Brother in Black," compelling tears and laughter as he told in eloquent words of personal experiences, crying needs and future outlook. It was a most powerful and helpful effort.

It was remarked that the paper by Jno. E. Oates, of Charlotte, on "Methods of Church Finance," should find a place in print, so clear, business like and practical was his treatment of this most important subject.

Undoubtedly much of the enthusiasm and interest of the sessions, was due to the rousing music of the large choir, under the efficient leadership of Prof. R. C. Freeman, who leads sometimes with voice, sometimes with cornet, assisted by his brother, John Freeman, with the bass horn. Mr. McCann presided at the organ.

Another contributing cause of the sustained success of the institute was the faithful attendance of the ministers, elders and deacons themselves to the very end. So that as that touchiug hymn of parting, "Blest be the tie that binds," was sung, the delegates present with clasped hands, stood in a circle extending down one aisle, across the rear of the church, up the other aisle till the circle was completed in the chairman behind the pulpit.

The proverbial hospitality of the Steel Creek people was most graciously extended and as heartily appreciated and "the oldest inhabitant" says "it was the greatest thing ever seen at old Steel Creek."

THE FIRST CHURCH IN HUNAN.

(A private letter from Rev. W. H. Lingle, of the Northern Presbyterian Church, missionary at Sam Kong, China.)

June 28th, 1894.

I came back from Hunan day before yesterday, and before things crowd themselves too much upon me, I want to write you about the organization of the first Christian church in that province. A committee of three was appointed at the last meeting of Presbytery, and I was made chairman, with two of the native preachers, as the other two members, to organize the church if the committee thought best. We were of the unanimous opinion that the time was ripe for such an organization.

An Yung Sin Shang, one of the committee, went in advance a few days, and informed the people that Rev. Kwan Loi and I would be there in a short time to organize the church. Application was made to the official to prepare a place to receive me. He said he would have to send a deputation to a temple ten miles distant to consult the gods to see if I would be permitted to enter the city. The populace in the meantime heard of my coming, and said they would not allow the official to receive me, neither would they allow me to enter the city. Two of the native helpers wrote to me beseeching me not to come, but if I did come, I must go to the Lien Chow official, and get him to send a company of soldiers to accompany me on the way. Several of the native Christians tried to persuade me not to go, and if I would go, I must have soldiers to protect me. I would not yield, but remained obstinate and determined to go without any protection from the Chinese government. I do not believe in propagating our faith in that manner, which was characteristic of Mohammed. One day I walked about thirty-five miles and had for food three ears of corn, one egg and some peaches. Mrs. Mackle (wife of the physician at Sam Kong) sent food for me with the cook, but he never overtook me till the next day, when I willingly waited for him and the native minister. Rev. Kwan Loi and I thought we would ride one day, and so called sedan chairs and coolies. The coolies would not carry us either up hill or down hill, as they were poor, weak, miserable opium-smokers. So we walked the balance of the way going, and reached our destination at about 9 o'clock at night, soaked with rain and foot-sore. I would not go to homes (if they could be called such) of the Christians, but went to a regular Chinese inn which is incapable of description. I got a room, the only private one they had, and such a room. The odors were more offensive than a hog pen, and the filth just about as bad. I could not walk on the floor bare-footed. When I bathed I had to get up on the boards they brought me for bed boards. I took my hammock with me and slept in it. The five days I spent in Lam Mo I spent in that hole, excepting the time I spent at the meetings at another place. I do not think you can imagine me in such a place; you need not try. I ate but very little while there, but am making up for lost time now. I got into the city at night and no one saw me, but it was soon noised abroad next morning and many came to see me. I took a number of books with me and spent the first day in selling books in my room. The next morning some very vile placards were posted all over the city, calling upon the people to rise up against me, saying what they were going to do. I was to be caught, bound, and dragged through the streets and then flayed alive if I was not yet dead. The man who might be called chief of police came to me and said he would protect me if I would send in my passport to the official and employ him to guard me; otherwise, if I had any trouble he would not do anything. I told him I did not have the least fear of any trouble and did not need anybody to guard me, and if anybody undertook to flay me alive, it would be the toughest skinning they ever did. All he wanted was money, and I knew it. The soldiers who guarded Dr. Mackle and myself on a previous tour wanted the same job again, but I would not employ them.

Well, to make a long story short, we had two meetings a day for four days, organized a church with forty members and baptized thirteen new converts, and observed the Lord's Supper. We could secure no wine, and so used the common drink of China—tea, which to my mind satisfies every demand in the sacred service. When there is no bread or wine used by the Chinese, why import them? The Lord used what was left over from the common meal, and so I think we may use rice and tea as in one place, the cocoanut and its milk are used.

In returning I walked two days, then got a boat for a day's journey down to Len Chow. I suffered no injury anywhere and still have all my skin. A stone was thrown at me in Lam Mo but it missed me. At Sing Sy, where I took the boat coming back, I was standing on the bow of the boat talking to a crowd when something was hurled at my head, and missing me hit a Chinaman in the eye, hurting him considerably.

If the Lord be for us, who can be against us?

THE WALDENSES.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

An appeal for aid to assist our Waldensian brethren in building a church and an academy at their new settlement of Waldasia, near Morganton, N. C., appeared in the columns of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN in January last, but I am persuaded that it has not met with the response it deserves.

The Presbyterian Sunday-school of Monroe, N. C., recently contributed $20 to this cause, and it seems to the writer, that if the matter was properly explained and our churches and Sunday-schools given an opportunity to contribute, there would be no difficulty in raising all the money necessary.

Now the Monroe church and Sunday-school are fully alive to their responsibilities and never do things by halves, but the method employed by them was simple, viz: the superintendent and pastor explained the matter to the school on one Sabbath and the children brought their contributions the next, with the handsome result above. Will not all our churches help in this grand work? Who can read the history of the Waldenses and not be thrilled at their recorded devotion to God and to the Bible and now that they are among us, let us cordially receive and help them with our means and prayers.

Send contributions to Capt. G. P. Erwin, Morganton, N. C. B.

COMMITTEE SYNODICAL MISSIONS, SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

DEAR BRETHREN:—Please read this letter to your churches and urge its claims. The Lord has greatly blessed our mission work in the Synod of North Carolina and is still blessing us; new churches are being organized, new church buildings are being erected, new schools established, new school houses built, old churches are being greatly revived and hundreds of members are being added to our church, and now we have almost all over the State, the finest crops ever known.

September is the month set apart for contributions to Synodical Mission work; will not all our churches, and every member in them make a special thank-offering to God, through this work, right now, while we are in the midst of these blessings.

Yours fraternally,

WM. BLACK,
Superintendent.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D.C., Aug. 22 th, 1894.

One of the greatest drawbacks to the anti-saloon workers of Washington has been, for many years, the apparent ease with which the liquor interest controlled the official acts of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, so far as they related to the liquor traffic. It may be imagined then that all those who oppose the domination of the saloon in municipal matters are gratified to know that the present board of Commissioners have asserted their independence of the rum power. The declaration of independence was publicly made a few days ago, when ten policemen were summarily discharged because of their peculiar relations with retail liquor dealers in their precincts, and their dismissal was accompanied by a warning to all the rest of the policemen calling their attention to the fact, that some of them have either overlooked or ignored for a long time, that it is their sworn duty to compel the saloon keepers to conduct their business in accordance with law, and not to aid them in breaking the laws, as the dismissed policemen did. The action of the Commissioners was made the subject of a sermon by Rev. Adolos Allen, in which, after expressing the gratitude and appreciation of the people, he said: "It is manifest by what has occurred that while the church has been laboring to lift up the community, officers of the law have been doing what they could to help keepers of saloons, which are a curse to any city, do what has a tendency to thwart one-half, if not three-quarters of our effort. It is widely hoped that now the Commissioners have commenced they will carry on their investigation to the end, and so get this community to a higher plane of respect for law and order than it has stood upon in the past." And every good citizen echoes the amen with which a large congregation greeted Mr. Allen's remarks.

There is so much talk and so many claims made, pro and con, about the success or failure of State regulation of the liquor traffic that the opinion of Mr. A. R. Burdette, of Georgia, at present visiting Washington, is of more than passing interest. He says: "Georgia is practically a prohibition State. Outside of the large cities the law forbids the retailing of intoxicating liquors within three miles of a church or schoolhouse. Now there are very few communities in the State that are not within that distance of a school or place of worship, and the result is that the saloon is almost a defunct institution in Georgia. Liquor can still be had in the small towns and villages, but only by the quart, and a heavy penalty attaches to drinking it on the premises where it is purchased. I think our system beats the State dispensary law of Gov. Tillman in that it is practicable and has public sentiment behind it. We have tried it for a number of years and it works so well that nobody would go back to the old way. In the outset I was very much opposed to the change, and voted and worked against it, but the test of experience has converted me. Though far from being a fanatic on the subject I am satisfied that any community is better off where the retailing of alcoholic drinks is interdicted."

The Epworth Leaguers of the District of Columbia held a mass meeting last night at Washington Grove Camp grounds, in Montgomery county, Md. A special train carried the Washington visitors and the affair was a great success from every point of view.

Notwithstanding the anxiety of the administration to get the bill providing for the deportation of alien anarchists on the statute books in time to head off the 500 European anarchists known to be headed towards the United States, it is feared that the bill will not be acted upon by the House of Representatives at this session—it has been passed by the Senate. The present trouble is lack of a quorum in the House and a disposition on the part of several members to object to the bill being passed without a quorum. The reason these gentlemen give for objecting is that the bill gives the U. S. Commissioner of Immigration power to determine who may be classed as alien anarchists and to deport them without any reference to courts of any kind. In view of recent occurrences in this country and in Europe, these objections would seem to come properly under the head of unnecessary hair-splitting. Even granting that the bill gives too much authority to one man, it seems to me that it would be much better that one man should have too much authority than that the United States should be overrun with the dangerous anarchists who are being driven from numerous European countries. It will be too late for regrets when their presence in the United States shall have caused the loss of valuable lives and property. This is the time to act, by shutting them out. T.

Third Quarter.—Lesson XI.

Sept. 9.—Jesus and Nicodemus.
John iii 1-16. Commit vss. 14-16

Golden Text. God so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John iii. 16.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. The connection with the preceding lesson consists in its taking place during the same visit to Jerusalem. But its deeper, or logical connection consists in its being the first unfolding of the kingdom by our Lord in discourse.. Hitherto He had shown by miracle and act what the kingdom was to be. His choice of an audience is significant; not to a crowd but to one man, as the kingdom is not to come with observation—or ostentation; not to the common people but to a ruler; not to one of the unscrupulous rulers who cared for religion only as an instrument of place and power, but to a sincere seeker after righteousness. If there were any hope of winning Israel through the example of its leaders, it was through such men as Nicodemus. He gives him the opportunity, but the result is such that He henceforth seeks the reformation of Israel not from the top but from the bottom.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: Nicodemus, his office and sect, vs. 1; the nocturnal visit and the secret confession, vs. 2; the law of the kingdom stated and expounded, vss. 3-8; Israel's lack of spiritual preparation for receiving the kingdom, vss. 9-13; the way of life revealed, vss. 14-16

Third Step. Study with your helps points needing explanation.

Vs. 1. A man of the Pharisees. Consult Bible Dictionaries, Doctrinally orthodox, Acts xxiii. 8; politically opposed to the Roman power—hence the significance of their coming with the friends of the Roman power to propose to Him a political question, Mark xii. 13, 14. The mass of them corrupt, Matt. xxiii; though containing morally earnest men like Gamaliel, Acts v. 34, 38, 39; Saul, Phil. iii. 5, 6; and others, Rom. x. 2.

Nicodemus, appears again as a hesitating defender of Jesus, John vii. 50, 51; and an acknowledged follower at His death, xix. 39.

A ruler of the Jews. An indefinite expression, but here denoting a member of the Sanhedrim, vii. 32, 50.

Vs. 2. By night. Both for prudence, it being a hazardous thing for one in His position to commit Himself publicly, and for privacy, that He might have an uninterrupted interview. Jesus was doubtless lodging in Jerusalem, probably in an "upper room," which was reached by an outside stair. John, probably, and other disciples, perhaps, were present.

A teacher sent from God, etc. He confesses Jesus as a Divine Teacher as proved by His miracles. What these miracles were we are not told, but they are spoken of in ii. 23. The "we know" probably indicated the opinion that honest men in Nicodemus' circle had agreed upon. They have no idea that this plain man was the Messiah, but recognize Him as a Divinely commissioned prophet. Nicodemus comes with this rather patronizing confession, either for further inquiries, or for concerting plans—or, as some think, to give advice—as to the best way of effecting the reformation of Israel. He may have thought Jesus too hasty in His cleansing of the Temple, and have come to advise more cautious methods.

Vs. 3. Jesus cuts all this short by the astonishing declaration of this verse. It is not mere teaching that Israel wants, it is new life. Men must be born again.

Vs. 5. This was no new doctrine, as shown by Jesus' question in vs. 10. If it was baptismal regeneration or anything of the kind, no one—not even a "teacher of Israel"—could be expected to know it. In Ezek. xxxvi. 25-28 it is clearly set forth that it was by a new heart, symbolized by the ceremonial cleansings of the law, that Israel was to dwell in the land and become God's people. This ceremonial sprinkling implied confession of sins as had been so recently taught by John the Baptist. So these words are equivalent to this: the condition of entrance into the kingdom is a new heart, wrought by the Spirit and symbolized in Baptism. That the passage in Ezekiel was in our Lord's mind is further evident from the fact that He goes on to compare the birth of the Spirit to the work of the mind, reflecting the following passage in Ezekiel, xxxvii. 9, 14.

Vs. 11. We speak that we do know. The plural is used because all the children of the kingdom can say the same. The new birth is a matter of experience, Rom. viii. 16, but those without the kingdom will not receive the witness:

Vs. 12. If I have told you earthly things. This was indeed, "the teacher come from God," and He had come to reveal God; but they would not accept the A B C of this revelation, how could He reveal to them its mysteries. The doctrine that like produces like—matter producing matter, corrupt nature producing corrupt nature, and spirit producing spirit, was a doctrine of common law and of human experience.

Vs. 14-16. Jesus no longer seeks to explain new birth to him, but proceeds to show him the way of life. It was necessary to humble him by showing him that he knew more than teaching. But a man is unable to see by a treatise on optics. When we see that he is blind, what he needs is remedy: So Jesus uses as an illustration the remedy used for the smitten Israelites, Num. xxi. 6-9. The Son of man was come to be more than a teacher. A teacher could not convert, He was to condemn, but He had come to save. Israel needed a Saviour, and so the Son of man must be lifted up and He who believed on Him in faith should live.

      A spiritual quickening, Eph. ii. 5; 1 Pet i. 3.
      Englightenment, Eph. i. 18; Acts xxvi. 18.
      Cleansing, Ps. li. 10; Tit. iii. 5; John iii. 5,
      Renewing, Ps. li. 10; Tit. iii. 5; 2 Cor. v. 17.

      A wicked world, John v. 19.
      A lost world, Luke xix. 10.
      A guilty (or condemned) world, Rom. iii. 19; 1 Cor. xi. 32.
      A world ignorant of God, 1 Cor. i. 21.

      Justified from sin, Acts xiii. 39; Rom. iii. 24.
      Made "new creatures," 2 Cor. v. 17. (See Bible Reading No. 1).

      Believing is just receiving, John i. 12.
      Without money and without price, Is. lv. 1; Rev. xxii. 17.

Sixth Step. The greatest question we can ask ourselves is, "Are we born again?" If we are, we are looking in faith to Jesus Christ as He is lifted up. If we are not, let us look to Him, praying the prayer of Mark ix. 24.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

This lesson is so rich that the only embarrassment is its riches. The last two lessons prepare for this view of the kingdom; the miracle of Cana and the cleansing of the Temple both declare, "Behold I make all things new." After drawing out the story and the substance of Christ's teaching, impress the need of the new birth, and the fact that we experience it only by looking to a crucified Saviour. Both Bible Readings are important for the private study of teachers and older scholars. Teachers should glean from these texts according to the age and capacity of their scholars.

Prize Questions.

(Note. Simeon, Luke iii. 30 and Simeon Rev. vii. 7 are not N. T. characters, but where they are named we allow the value to offset any loss, Simeon of Acts xv. 14 is Simon Peter.)

91. (1.) Simon, called Peter, Matt. x. 2.
(2.) John and James, called Boanerges, Mark iii 17.
(3.) Bartholomew, Matt, x. 3, called Nathaniel, John i. 45.

(5.) Matthew, called also Levi, compare Matt. ix. 9, 10 and Luke v. 27, 29.
(6.) Lebbaeus, called Thaddeus, Matt. x. 3, and Judas, Luke vi. 16.
(7.) Simon, the Canaanite, Matt. x. 4, called Zelotes, Luke vi. 15.
(8.) Judas, called Iscariot, Matt.

(Note. Bar jona in Matt. xvi. 16 is not a surname, but simply "son of Jonas," compare John xxi. 15. James, the less, is hardly a surname, only a term of distinction. John Mark was not an apostle.

Correct answers have been received as follows:

N. E. Monroe, 90 (10), 91 (6).

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

A correspondent writes from Greensboro; By a diligent inquiry of a great many farmers coming up from all parts of the country up to date (26th), former reports are fully confirmed that in the history of the oldest, there has hardly ever been such a prospect for yield in corn as we have now. This even before the rain of yesterday, which will about make all the later corn be a big yield also. We have much to be thankful for.

Raleigh Visitor: President Winston, of the University, says over 500 students will be in attendance next term, and that he has received thrice as many applications for admission as ever before.

Charlotte Observer: Some samples of the mineral, monozite, are on exhibition at the rooms of the Manufacturers Club. It is said that more than $30,000 worth of it has been shipped from Cleveland county, and the business of mining it has become an important one in Cleveland, Rutherford and several other counties. Very little seems to be known about the uses to which it is put.

Durham Sun: Near Bethel church, in Sycamore township, S.C., lives Charles Brant. He is 83 years old. He has never bought a pound of corn, bacon or fertilizers. He has never borrowed mony. Only once in his life did he call a physician. He was wounded or injured in some way and a doctor dressed the wound. He never took any medicine. —— The neighborhood of Cole's Mill is very much stirred up on the subject of wild hogs. They have been seen around in the small mountains out there for some time and it was supposed that they belonged to some of the farmers, but now they are adjudged wild. They come out at night and play havoc with the corn. In the daytime they flee again to the hills and rest until the next night, when they begin their depredations.

Scotland Neck Democrat: Mr. J. H. Hopkins gives the following of one stalk of cotton: Walking through his crop he found an unusually tall stalk. He measured it and found it 6 feet high and 6 feet across. He counted the bolls and forms and found 82 bolls and 262 new forms, making in bolls and forms 344. The seed was planted 10th of May, came up first week in June and was chopped out between 10th and 15th of June.

Greensboro Record: A gentleman in the city to-day from Chatham county tells of a fatal accident there on last Thursday. John J. Mann, a well-to do farmer and good citizen, was driving along the road during a storm, when a large tree was blown on him, killing him and his mule almost instantly. His little son, who was with him, was badly injured internally and it is thought will die.

Smithfield Herald: Mr. H. B. Bagwell, of Garner, Wake county, seems to be the champion raiser of watermelons. He planted thirty-five acres this year, and had sold and shipped over seven thousand up to 15th August. He raised several to weigh more than seventy pounds. The weight of his largest one was seventy-eight.

Charlotte News: The neighborhood in and aroung Crofts is infested with a peculiar kind of malaria. A number of the best citizens of that section are now very sick with the disease, and several death have occurred in the past few days.

Goldsboro Argus: Our farmers tell us that cotton is shedding very badly on account of the weather: They also say that is is opening rapidly.

Kinston Free Press: Last Thursday Mrs. James Gladstone, of Kinston, made a pot of soap in the house. While she was out of the house the pot of soap turned over and the two year-old son happened to step in it and fell down. The child was so badly burned from the hips down, that it died Sunday morning.

WANTED—A GOOD PERMANENT LOCATION FOR A SCHOOL OR COLLEGE.

A Presbyterian minister (wife and one child) thirty-seven years of age, with several years' experience in the school room, desires a good location (prosperous and healthful) for a school, or college, either male, or female, or for both sexes. Would undertake the school on his own responsibility, or under a Board of Trustees. The school building would have to be rent free, a good local patronage would be very desirable; and there would have to be the proper facilities for boarding pupils.

The school ought to open in September, or October.

The minister would prefer a location where he could serve a church, or churches.

FOR THE FAMILY.

TEACH ME, O, FATHER.

Up to me sweet childhood looketh,
Heart and mind and soul awake;
Teach me of Thy ways, O Father!
For sweet childhood's sake.

In their young hearts, soft and tender,
Guide my hand good seed to sow,
That its blossoming may praise Thee
Wheresoe'er they go.

Give to me a cheerful spirit,
That my little flock may see
It is good and pleasant service
To be taught of Thee.

Father, order all my footsteps;
So direct my daily way,
That in following me, the children
May not go astray.

Let Thy holy counsel lead me,
Let Thy light before me shine,
That they may not stumble over
Word or deed of mine.

Draw us hand in hand to Jesus,
For his Word's sake, unforgot—
"Let the little ones come to me,
And forbid them not."

The Legend of the Orange Blossom.—As the orange blossom is such a favorite flower at weddings the world over, and as Louisiana is the home of the beautiful tropical flower, the following pretty legend current among the Spanish-Creole residents of the city will be read with interest. An African prince once presented a Spanish king with a magnificent orange tree, whose creamy, waxen blossoms and wonderful fragrance excited the admiration of the whole court. In vain did courtiers plead for a branch of the plant, and a foreign ambassador, in particular, was tormented by the desire to introduce so great a curiosity into his native land. He had used every possible means, fair and foul, to accomplish his purpose, but all his efforts coming to naught, he gave up in despair. The fair daughter of the court gardener was loved by a young artisan, but lacked the dot which the family considered necessary in a bride. One day, chancing to break off a spray of the orange blossoms, the gardener thoughtlessly gave it to his daughter. Seeing the coveted prize in the girl's hair, the wily ambassador promptly gave her a sum sufficient for the desired dowry, provided she gave him the branch and said nothing about it. Her marriage was soon celebrated, and on the way to the altar, in grateful remembrance of the source of all her happiness, the girl secretly broke off another bit of the lucky tree to adorn her hair. Whether the poor court gardener lost his head in consequence of the daughter's treachery, the legend does not state, but the beautiful tree is now known in many lands, and ever since that wedding day orange blossoms have been considered a fitting adorment for a bride.

Designing book covers is a new vocation at which lots of women are beginning to make money. Two women, Miss Alice Armstrong and Miss Alice Morse, a graduate of Cooper's Union, have already won distinction in the work by designing for such well known pubishers as Harper's and Scribner's. A good example of Miss Armstrong's style is found on the cover of Julian Ralph's "On the Canadian Frontier." In this field, as in every other, the woman is the most successful, who makes herself proficent in every detail of the work. The designing of books, however, is only one branch of industrial designing, women now furnishing designs for carpet factories, rugs, draperies, etc., and it is an encouraging fact that every year the demand for good designs is increasing and women are furnishing them, and that home patterns bring the best prices.—N. O. Picayune.

Things Useful.

Pickled Pearls.—Allow seven pounds of pears after they are peeled, prepare four and a half pounds of sugar, one pint of vinegar, one teaspoonful ground cloves, three teaspoonfuls of cinnamon. Have the syrup boiling hot, leave the fruit whole, cook slowly, lift with a skimmer, when done, into a jar and pour the syrup over it. When cool, tie up closely, putting in an inverted plate which is small enough to fit inside the jar.

Lemon Pudding.—For the lemon pudding in to-day's dinner take a small loaf of bread and pour over it enough boiling water to make it quite soft; drain off nearly all the water and add the grated peel and the juice of three lemons, the yolks of four eggs (reserving the whites for the icing), one tablespoon of butter, and enough sugar to sweeten; put into a baking dish, and bake a light brown. Froth the white of the eggs, and put a heaping tablespoonful of powdered sugar to each egg and a few drops of vanilla; pile this on the baked pudding and let it dry for a few minutes in the oven. It can be served either hot or cold.

Kerosene emulsion or Paris green—one pound to 250 gallons of water—is a remedy for green or white worms on rose-bushes. Green lice can be destroyed with kerosene emulsion or pyrethrum.

Stuffed Tomatoes.—Remove a small circular piece from the top of each tomato, having selected good, firm, large sized fruit. Remove the seeds with your finger, so as not to spoil the shape of the tomato. Fill the cavities with the following: For every six tomatoes allow one cup of finely chopped chicken, twelve chopped mushrooms, two heaping tablespoonfuls of bread crumbs, one tablespoonful of chopped parsely and one tablespoonful of melted butter. Mix all the ingredients together; fill the tomatoes, and place in a baking dish. Bake thirty minutes in a moderate oven, basting with melted butter. Serve with cream sauce.

WHAT GRANDMOTHER SAYS.

Perhaps you'll hardly believe it all—
But every one must know
That when my grandmother says a thing,
Of course it's exactly so.

She says, in all the great, great world,
She never has seen a place
Where things so sweet and so lovely grow,
As on a wee little face,

She says there's never a diamond
Under the shining skies,
That sparkles half so bright as those
She sees in bright little eyes.

She never has seen, in all her life,
Such white little dainty pearls
As peep from out the rosy lips
Of dear little laughing girls.

She says she has never, never found,
In a garden full of flowers,
A rose so rosy, and sweet, and fresh,
As these little cheeks of ours.

But then, she says, these diamonds,
And roses, and pearls, will grow
Ugly, and dull, and dim (O, dear!
How dreadful to see them so!),

Unless with loving words and smiles
We keep them shining bright—
I think we'd better remember this,
For grandmother's always right.

—Golden Days.

Two Girls.

There is a girl, and I love to think of her and talk of her, who never comes in late when there is company, who wears a pretty little air of mingled responsibility and anxiety with her youth, whom the others seemed to depend upon for many comforts. She is the girl who helps mother.

In her own home she is a blessed little saint and comforter. She takes unfinished tasks from the tired stiff fingers that falter at their work, her strong young figure is a staff upon which the gray-haired, white-faced mother leans and is rested. She helps mother with the spring sewing, with the week's mending, with a cheerful conversation and congenial companionship that some girls do not think worth while wasting on "only mother." And when there comes a day when she must bend over the old worn-out body of mother lying unheeded in her coffin, the rough hands folded, her long disquiet merged in rest, something very sweet will be mingled with her loss, and the girl who helped mother will find a benediction of peace upon her heart.

The girl who works—God bless her—is another girl whom I know. She is brave and active. She is not too proud to earn her own living, or ashamed to be caught at her daily task. She is studious and painstaking and patient. She smiles to you from behind counter or desk. There is a memory of her sewn into each silken gown. She is like a beautiful mountaineer already far up the hill, and the sight of her should be a fine inspiration for us all. It is an honor to know this girl—to be worth of her regard. Her hand may be stained by factory grease or printer's ink. But it is an honest hand and a helping hand. Its stays misfortune from many a home; it is one shield that protects many a forlorn little family from the almshouse and the asylum.—St. Louis Advocate.

Uncle Giles' Paint Brush.

It was a rainy day in summer. A chilly wind swept about the house and bent the branches of the trees, and reminded every one who encountered it that autumn, with its gales, would return as promptly as ever.

A bright fire was blazing in the sitting-room, and near it were Mrs. Strong with her two little girls, and also Aunt Martha Bates, whom they were visiting. Rufus Strong, aged fourteen, stood by a closed window, listlessly drumming on a pane.

He was tired of reading, and tired of watching the ladies sew, and tired of building toy houses for his sisters.

"I guess I'll go out to the barn and find Uncle Giles," said he, at length.

Mrs. Strong, who had found the music on the windowpane rather monotonous, quickly responded in favor of the plan.

"Just the one I want to see!" exclaimed Uncle Giles, as Rufus made his appearance at the barn-door. "I'm getting my tools in order, and now you can turn the grindstone while I sharpen this scythe."

Rufus cheerfully agreed to this proposal, and performed his part with a hearty good will.

"Do you always put your tools in order on rainy days?" he asked.

"Well, yes; I always look over them and see if they need attention. Then when I want them they are ready for use Now, since this job is done suppose you undertake another. Wouldn't this be a good time to paint those boxes for Aunt Martha's flowers? You know you promised to paint them for her, and if you do it now, they'll be good and dry when she wants to pot her plants in September."

"I think you believe in preparing for work beforehand, don't you, Uncle Giles?"

"Yes, indeed, that I do. It saves ever so much time when you have any work to do to have things all ready. What's the matter, can't you find the paint brush?"

"No, Uncle, and I'm sure that I saw it in its place not very long ago."

This reminded Uncle Giles that neighbor Jones had borrowed the brush a few days previous, and had not yet returned it.

Rufus started off on the errand, and soon returned carrying the brush in a small tin pail, half-full of water.

"Mr. Jones is much obliged to you for the use of it," he said to his uncle, "and he's sorry that he hasn't had time to wash out the brush."

Mr. Bates looked rather annoyed. Accustomed to perfect order himself, he was often irritated by the slovenly ways of his neighbor.

"Then there's nothing for you to do but repair damages as well as you can. What color of paint is in the brush?"

"Red sir."

"And you want to use green. You'll have to go to the house and get some warm soap-suds and give the brush a thorough washing."

Rufus found that he had plenty of occupation for some time after that. The brush was soaked up to the handle in the bright red paint, and it was a work of patience to give it the necessary cleaning. Indeed, dinner time found him just ready to begin the task which might have been easily accomplished in the morning had it not been for that long delay.

After dinner he and Uncle Giles again repaired to the barn, where the elder cleaned harness, while the younger painted

"I think I begin to realize," said Rufus, "that your plan of having tools ready is a good one."

"Yes, its good, no matter what sort of work you're going to do. I believe you wish to be a minister one of these days, don't you, Rufus?"

"Yes, I think so now, Uncle."

"Then you are getting some of your tools ready when you are studying Latin and history, and other things in school. And you are getting others ready when you read the Bible and when you study your Sunday-school lesson, and when you listen to the preaching of your minister. You need to take pains to remember what you learn in these ways, for the good things in your memory will be the tools that you will have constant use for.

I know a young man who is now studying for the ministry. I think he will succeed, for he is very much in earnest, and he has natural ability, too. Yet he finds his task rather difficult, because he had no opportunity to study when he was younger. He has not been trained to think or to remember, and the work he is doing now is something like your washing that paint brush this morning, It must all be done before he can go on to anything better, and he regrets that it was not done at the proper time."

"I suppose that the moral for me is to improve my privileges."

"Yes, that's just it. Improve your privileges by getting ready beforehand for the work of life. If the paint brush teaches you this lesson, you may be glad that you had to stop to get it clean."—Mary Joanna Porter, in Intelligencer.

Say Soes.

Pure, fresh, cold water is one of the most valuable of disinfectants, inasmuch as it is a powerful absorbent.

Ripe, fresh fruits eaten at the table with little or no sugar are conducive to good health, and make a dessert fit for a king.

A LAUGHABLE MISTAKE.

Two ladies entered a book-store recently and the younger asked the clerk for a book called "Favorite Prescription." The puzzled attendant was unable to comply with her request and she left the store disappointed. Inquiry elicited the fact that she had overheard a conversation between two literary ladies in which "Favorite Prescription" was mentioned with extravagant praise, and had jumped to the conclusion that it was a book. She now knows that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a sovereign cure for the ills and "weaknesses" peculiar to women, for she has been cured by its use.

It is the only medicine of its class, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee that it will cure in all cases of disease for which it is recommended, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure permanently constipation, sick headache, biliousness, indigestion and kindred ailments.

A room properly swept and dusted will keep clean a long time. In dusting, also, there should be some method. Begin at one side of the room and take everything as you come to it, from the highest to the lowest, giving the duster frequent shakings out of a window; or you may first dust all the bric-a-brac, then the pictures, then the tables, &c. In all cases wash, rinse, and hang your duster to dry as soon as you are through, so that it will be clean for next time.

If you take a newspaper it should be one that not only you, but all your folks will find pleasure in reading.

THE SAVANNAH MORNING NEWS

is that kind of a journal.

It gives more real reading and news matter than any other paper in the South. It is not the organ of political cranks or personal favorites, but of pure democracy; of low tariff and sound currency, and of the economical administration of the State and federal governments.

It is independent in all things, and does not change its views through fear of losing a few subscribers by advocating what it knows to be right.

Daily, every day in the year (335 papers), $10; 6 months $5; 3 months $2.50; 1 month $1; 1 week 25 cents. Daily, without Sunday News, 1 year $9; 6 months, $4.50; 3 months, $2.25.

Beginning with the Fourth Quarter, the Presbyterian Committee of Publication are pleased to announce that their Sabbath-School Papers will be greatly enlarged, and so much improved that no publications of like character will be more helpful in themselves or handsome in appearance—their desire being to make them in all respects so superior that it will be to the advantage of all the Schools of the Southern Presbyterian Church to use them. They have added another Quarterly to their list of publications, and no doubt the Teachers of the Infant Class will welcome it—the

EXTRACT FROM MINUTES OF ALBEMARLE PRESBYTERY, AUG. 15th, Ult.,

Relative to its Action With Regard to The North Carolina Presbyterian.

"The [Presbyterial] Agent of the N.C. PRESBYTERIAN called attention to excellent work of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN and to its exceeding value as the Synod's organ of communication among the churches. With high appreciation of the past labors of its proprietor and its corresponding editors, the Presbytery looks forward with confidence to the enlargement of its influence and usefulness under the editorial guidance of Rev. Dr. J. M. RAWLINGS, who, upon the first of October, expects to assume this responsibility.

The Presbytery would enjoin upon all its ministers to call attention from the pulpit to this paper, and to its special relation to the Synod of North Carolina, urging upon our congregations the importance of sustaining it, in order that our people may be thoroughly informed as to all our Presbyterial and Synodical work.

RETROSPECTS.

Looking backward is pleasant when recalling joyous scenes and happy faces. It is more profitable when we deal honestly with ourselves in reviewing our lives to see if there is any sin which we have not honestly and humbly confessed and forsaken, if there is any wrong which we have not righted as far as within our power and duty, if there is any dishonesty which we have not made good, if there is any robbery or unjust gain for which we have not made restitution, that we may restore that which we have taken away and find forgiveness of every sin and seek to do right henceforth. What doth the LORD thy GOD require, but to do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with thy GOD? It is prudent and proper to learn from the past lessons for the future, that we may correct mistakes and avoid errors of conversation and conduct and get encouragement, warning and guidance. It may not be pleasant to be thorough in retrospect and revision, but our later future will be the better, ourselves the happier, and our lives the sunnier and the sweeter for confessing every sin and being forgiven and for reviewing every wrong to others and setting it right and for finding out every error and correcting and avoiding it.

What a blesssing faithful friends of that past have been! The wise man's proverb is verified: "Faithful are the wounds of a friend, but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful." They were wounds. They were skillfully, but tenderly inflicted. Still they were wounds and we shrank from them, sometimes smiting the hand that gave them. They appear very differently now as the hand may be still and the tongue silent, whose wounds we may have even resented. They are sacred in their silence and stillness now as we find faithful friendship so rare. We may well count and cling to any one who will be friend enough to tell us our faults. That is true friendship. It will also judiciously commend our struggles against sin, our efforts to do right and our desires to do well. But it will not flatter. Flattery is delusive and destructive. It is a weak mind's effort to please, and the poisoned solace of the weak. Give us rather real friendship, thoughtful when helped and wounding to make whole.

What we thought innocent pastimes do not all appear so in retrospect. They may not have been positively hurtful to us and we may not have gone astray in known sin while enjoying them. But what we called joy then we now find foolish frivolity or misleading sentiment or sensual excitement or sensuous satisfaction. It was not real joy. It did not unite all our powers in a restful restoration such as we now enjoy with JESUS in the midst. He was not in those things we now recall as dangerous or degrading. When men and women now make excuse for such in themselves or allowed to their children that they must have something to kill time, we wonder what they think of time that they dare to kill it, and what they think of themselves that in killing time they are slowly killing their souls. Besides, these things wherein we received no positive harm, we now see did us great indirect damage. We lost interest in higher things. Our spiritual sense was dulled. Our tone of piety was lowered. We did not enjoy our prayer and reading and neglected communion with CHRIST. Still more sad is this reflection, it may be, that we did innocently what others pleading our example have done almost to the wreck of their lives and the loss of their souls. We realize that the real question about what are called worldly amusements is not merely whether they harm us directly or not, but what effect do they have on our spirituality and our enjoyment and activity in religious callings and our influence and examples on others. What a pity that we do not take the advice of older friends and loved ones instead of stubbornly insisting on our learning by an experience which is not limited to our personal lives and deeds!

Thus older friends pass away and we must stand where they stood and fight where they fought and pray where they prayed. The ground is not just as they found it. They were earnest and faithful, in their places and made many material changes. The foundations are the same. The surface only is changed. "If the foundations be destroyed what can the righteous do?"

The surface is changed. The old houses stand, but modified and rearranged and with altered tints. Even the dear old shade and fruit trees are decayed and falling and the spreading beech whose tough bark was marked with names for the next generation are gone. The surface is changed—all save the foundations of the rocks. They are just where and as in childhood. The firm foundations still remind us and point our children to the lesson that "The LORD is our rock," He changeth not. The fashion—the form—of this world passeth away. The battles to be fought in these shifting scenes are ever the same. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through GOD to the pulling down of strongholds. The enemy is the same, our carnal hearts and corrupt natures and a personal SATAN with his legions of darkness. The arsenal is all-prayer. As the fathers prayed and conquered so must we, and so alone can we, with the sword burnished and bright, and the sword arm mighty we cannot fail.

The rocks remain and the waters flow as in childhood. The pure streams that feed the rivulets and rivers and make the seas, fatten the lands through which they flow and freshen all the verdure and fill all the grains, vegetables and fruits. So all this section is full of gardens and abounds in harvests of food for man and beast. There is much water for fertility and pure water for health. Without it there would be desert and despair. With it is plenty and prosperity. Why will men seek to rum that robs and degrades or to wine that enfeebles and enervates. Even if there is pleasure in them, it is a temptation and a snare and never necessary. That selfish delusion, that the water is bad and wine alone good in Europe and Egypt and Palestine is denied by our best men and has been disproven by experience. Besides water is nature's solvent of many medicines and helps and heals where wine destroys. It is the water of life alone that can cleanse and satisfy the soul. This symbol of Scripture should have separate study.

A. D. M.

HERE AND THERE.

WE AGREE WITH DR. VAUGHN THAT "IT will be a calamity if the Church fails to bring out the treasures he [Dr. THOMAS E. PECK] has left behind." So it is a matter of rejoicing that Dr. T. C. JOHNSON has undertaken the preparation for publication of the volumes which will contain Lectures, Sermons and Review Articles from Dr. PECK'S pen "On the Relation of the Gospel to the Poor; Christian Living; The Worship of the Church; Romanism; Revivals of Religion," etc. There will be three volumes, issued by the Presbyterian Committee of Publication. The first volume, with contents as above noted, will appear as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained.

THOSE WHO KNOW DR. PECK'S STYLE of writing and address need not be told that his treatment of subjects, often confused in even intelligent minds, is lucidity itself. He was rigidly orthodox, and in some of his views beyond, perhaps we ought to say above the ordinary mind of the Church, but he was never unsafe. The books will not only be very valuable for preachers, but for all who will secure them.

NOW WE READ OF TOWNS ON THE western prairies licked up by the flames, property destroyed by the thousands upon thousands, and hundreds of human lives going out in the agonies of death by fire. To us of the east, who from actual observation know not what prairies are, these things are appalling enough, but we fail to take in the horrors, even as those who have never seen the ocean waves in lashing fury cannot conceive what are the terrors of a storm at sea, and what is the agony of going into the great eternity through the fathomless waters. But in the very feeblest conception awful in contemplation are all such exits from this mortal life.

AMONG THE GOOD SERVICES PROFESSOR HOLMES, State Geologist, is rendering North Carolina—and we know of no other citizen who is rendering so many—we reckon among the greatest his efforts in behalf of good roads. Dr. HOLMES is right when he says: "We have in this great country of ours the poorest roads travelled by civilized man. They retard our material development, and their use costs us annually in North Carolina several million of dollars: they seriously interfere with the religious, educational and social life of a large portion of our people; they are an injustice to our women and children; they are a disgrace to our civilization."

And now, whether you agree or not, read Prof. HOLMES'S paper, on second page, on "Good Roads and Country Church Going."

LETTER FROM W. S. L.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The great stone-tower, known as Chimney Rock, is not the only charm connected with "Chimney Rock." There are other marvels and trophies of nature that afford additional attractions. Not far from the Rock is the "Appalachian Falls"—the approach to which was so perilous and fatiguing that we did not attempt it the same day we ascended Chimney Rock. In a comparatively slight depression in the massive range called Chimney Rock Mountain, over the bold stone side flows a mountain stream, I suppose fifteen feet broad; falling in almost perpendicular descent 969 feet. (I remember the figures by the age of our old friend Methusaleh). From the point of view where I saw it, it seemed like a thread of silver, or rather a moving band, or ribband, of living silver. Here it glittered and quivered, unceasing, constant, unexhausted, as when since the last convulsion of nature the little rivulet found this precipitate path. And as it shone in its shimmering beauty, I recalled the phrase of ancient title deeds that indicates perpetuity—"as long as grass grows and waters run."

It was a lovely day, when with the happiest of guides, (yes "Felix" was his name) we "did" the Bottomless Pools. A laughing turbulent mountain stream, leaping down cliffs and crags in merry cascade, has along its course three deep, clear pools. It hardly seems possible that the mere fall of water, (though according to the proverb it wears away the stone) should have hollowed out of the solid rock these silent fathomless deeps. Not fathomless really—for one is 80 feet deep, and another 100 feet, and a third has not yet been sounded with a line of 200 feet length. If there were not a flow of water from the pools equal that which falls into them, one might conjecture as in limestone regions, an underground outlet or sinking stream. Apart from the wonderful pools—the series of cascades, the bold and frothing current; the huge bowlders and rugged mountain sides, make this excursion one of the pleasantest and most charming afforded.

In front of our hostelry stretches the "Quaking Bald." Scientific students were greatly interested some decade or score of years back in accounting for great rumbling noises and decided tremors connected with the mountain. I believe it was the generally accepted theory that it was due to mechanical rather than volcanic action. It is supposed that in the uplift of these vast mountains (in the ages past) great caverns were formed whose stone roofs shaken and broken in nature's convulsions remained; until by the gradual action of water some of these vast stones may have been loosened, and so have fallen to lower levels. However science tells its rede, the unscientific eye sees grandeur, massiveness, majesty, in these immense mountains. There is a "cave," which must be visited. We have an extemporized guide, a visitor from Rutherfordton, most capable and pleasant, who forgives our giddiness (giddiness means dizziness there) and fears of "that which is high," who is patient, courteous, helpful, who leads us over almost impossible rocks, by the most romantic of springs with cold, cold water, to the rugged mouth of the cave. It is more wonderful and interesting than beautiful. There are no "bridal chambers," "picture galleries" and "stairway halls" as in other caves I have visited; none of the exquisite art of trickling water and subterranean chemistry. There are, however, great apartments, with walls of solid stone, and other halls where it seems some Cyclops had battered the columns and stone beams, for they are broken, and in every conceivable angle of relation. Now and then there are outlooks—windows in the mountain side, affording fresh outer air to those within, and most wide-sweeping and magnificent prospects to those whose temerity allowed them to step out on the ledge.

From Chimney Rock to Asheville is a drive of twenty-five miles (in round numbers). This drive for the first nine miles is up the mountain through the Hickory Nut Gap, and this part of the road is toilsome. The rest of the drive is delightful, the roads being in good condition, well surveyed and firm. I learn that in Buncombe county the roads are "worked" by taxation and convict labor, and it seemed to me it presented a happy solution of two difficult problems; how to have good roads, and what to do with convicts.

I do not know what to say about the scenery. I have used up my adjectives and my superlatives. The wealth of grandeur and rugged magnificence beggars description and bankrupts language. If one were not in love with rocks and mountains, majesty and strength, the softened shades of green in the manifold foliage of tree, shrub and flower would delight the taste. The dark masses of rhododendron, firs, pines were lightened with the faint green of delicate ferns of sprays and tints innumerable, while every where clambering vines, and graceful clematis adorned the wayside.

So much is written of Asheville, so much is known of its wondrous scenery, its charming homes, its superb inns and hotels, that I am not called on to say more. We took in of course the Vanderbilt mansion and grounds. I have never been abroad, and know nothing of the estates of dukes and earls, their castles and grounds. I never expect to see anything more lovely this side of heaven. All that art and taste and wealth can do to add to the glory of wide prospects, noble visions, of mountain, sky and stream, seems here in process of accomplishment—much of it already achieved in splendor. The building I am told is larger than any block in Northern cities—fronting 400 feet, and with far more than four times that lineal measure around. Already sixty miles of macadamized road are constructed—and a more magnificent drive than the "Approach road" one must go far to see and enjoy. The daintiest and most delicate conceits of taste are completely executed. And stone-arches overgrown with vines, pond-lily-lakes, bosky dells are seen on every side, all the fulfilled dreams of art, that so completely simulate nature you would think they had been there for ages, instead of being "created" last year.

Dr. Campbell was out of the city on his outing. But I shook the cordial hand and looked into the beaming kindly face of my old friend Rev. L. H. Baldwin. He made us go by Kenilworth Inn though shortened for time, and we were more than repaid.

We got back to Chimney Rock safely after a memorable trip—the next day to Rutherfordton and to Charlotte. I could say "lots" about Charlotte. But really you have indulged me enough. I heard Dr. Boyd at the Second church Sunday night speak most fearlessly and earnestly to a crowded church on the peril to society, country and church from the saloon. He was himself deeply in earnest, and carried his audience with him. It is delightful to see the beautiful fraternity and co-operation among the Presbyterian pastors. For Dr. Boyd is now repaying Dr. Preston's service in supplying both churches. Of them both their people speak in unstinted praise and devotion.

The dear old clay hills, long red lanes, and gullied roads of Chatham and Moore, with wealth of fennel and goldenrod in the fence corners, once again for a brief period of most refreshing rest. And back again to this charming city by the sea, already beginning to pick up the bustle of the fall renewal of business, and my wanderings are over.

THE PORCH OF LIFE.

Within the Porch of Life we sit
The access to the heavenly door,
The shadowy porch where cold rains pour,
And every bleak wind blows on it.
And those who crowd to stand thereon
Smiling with youth grow grave anon.

We sit among our fellows so,
Shivering a little in the wind,
And still our eyes reach out to find
The faint beam of an inward glow—
A home-like ray, which through the door
Steals, softly beckoning, evermore.

There in sure comfort, safe and warm,
They sit who have an entrance won.
Smiling and glad; each dearest one
Who once endured the bitter storm,
And shared our patience and our pain,
But come not forth to share again.

Dear door, which never is shut tight,
And knows no bolt and needs no bar,
But through all ages stands ajar
To bless the eyes which yearn for sight,
And keep the souls that wait without
From the slow desolate death of doubt!

The Porch of Life is hard and bare,
And long the waiting sometimes seems.
But while we catch the out-reaching beams,
Making the darkness subtly fair,
And know the door is open still,
We can endure it with goodwill.

POPULAR TALKS ON LAW.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE.

Stay of Execution.

A stay of execution is a suspension of the carrying of a judgment into effect. A stay may rise on agreement of the parties, as where a compromise is the consideration; or, it may be ordered by the court for some cause shown; or, it may be the legal effect of appeal or wit of error to a higher court. Courts having an inherent supervisory power over their process, may stay an execution whenever it is necessary to prevent or correct an abuse thereof, according to the justice and equity of each particular case, and in case of courts of a general jurisdiction, this power extends even to the granting of a perpetual stay. In many of the States there are special statutes or "stay laws" providing for the stay of execution during a certain period on the filing of a bond or the giving of other security, and in order to obtain a stay under such statutes, their provisions must be strictly complied with. The statutes of the various States differ widely on this subject. We will first determine from the statutes how long a judgment before a justice of the peace may be stayed, and, finally, how long judgments rendered in courts of record may be stayed.

In the following States no stay of execution is allowed on a judgment before a justice of the peace: Alabama, Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Utah and Vermont.

In Arkansas a stay of 6 months is granted. In Delaware 9 months. In Indian Territory, Kentucky and Texas, 3 months. In Tennessee, 8 months. In Viriginia, 30 or 60 or 90 days. In Wyoming, not more than 60 days. In the District of Columbia, one month, where the judgment is between $5 to $20 in amount, 2 months between $10 to $40, 4 months between $40 and $75, 6 months between $75 and $100. In Georgia, 40 days, where the judgment is under $30, 60 days where over that amount. In Indiana, 30 days, where the judgment does not exceed $6, 60 days where over $6 and under $12, 90 days where over $12 and under $20, 120 days where over $20 and under $40, 150 days where over $40 and under $75, 180 days where over $75. In Iowa, 3 months, when the judgment does not exceed $100, 6 months if over $100. In Michigan, 4 months from the commencement of the suit on judgments not over $50, 6 months where over. Judgments against corporations and for personal service cannot be stayed. In Minnesota, one month, where under $10, 2 months where from $10 to $25, 3 months from $25 to $50, 4 months where from $50 to $75, 6 months where more than $75. In Mississippi, 30 days where the judgment is $50 or less, otherwise, 60 days. In Nebraska, 60 days, where the judgment is $10 or less, 90 days from $10 to $50, 6 months from $50 to $100, 9 months from $100 to $200. In New Hampshire the stay is left to the discretion of the justice. In New Jersey, one month for $15 or less, 3 months from $15 to $60, 6 months when over $60. In North Carolina, one month, not exceeding $25, 3 months from $25 to $50, 4 months from $50 to $100, 6 months for over $100. In Ohio, 60 days, in amounts of $5 or less, 90 days from $5 to $20, 150 days from $20 to $50, 240 days for over $50. In Oklahoma, 30 days for judgments more than $6 and less than $12, 60 days for more than $12 and less than $20, 120 days for more than $20 and less than $40, 150 days for $40 to $100, 180 days for more than $100. In Pennsylvania, 3 months for $20 or under, 6 months from $20 to $60, 9 months for over $100. In Ohio no stay is allowed upon a judgment entered upon by confession or on a warrant of attorney after maturity. In West Virginia, 2 months on $50 or under, 4 months on $50 to $100, 6 months for more than $100. In Wisconsin, one month on $10 or under, 2 months from $10 to $30, 4 months on $30 to $50. Executions against corporations and on judgments of wages for labor cannot be stayed.

In the case of judgments rendered of courts of record no stay is allowed in the States of Alabama, Arizona, California, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Florida, Idaho, Illinois Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

In the following States, what is said under the head of stay of execution in a justice court applies with equal force to judgments rendered in courts of record: Arkansas, Indiana, Indian Territory, Iowa, Kentucky, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, Washington. In Colorado, a reasonable stay is allowed when the levy is on personal property. In Delaware, 9 months. In Georgia, 60 days. In Maryland, in the counties outside of Baltimore, executions cannot be issued until the ensuing term after the obtaining of judgment. This is true both in courts of record and in the case of judgments before magistrates. In the city of Baltimore, judgments rendered in courts of record may be superseded for 6 months by giving security. In Minnesota, 6 months is allowed. In Nebraska, 3 months for $50 or less, 6 months from $50 to $100, and in all other cases 9 months. In Pennsylvania, 6 months for $200 or less, 9 months from $200 to $500, one year for over $500. The same remark applies as in the matter of judgments by confession and warrants of attorney, as in the case of a judgment before a justice of the peace.

GOOD ROADS AND COUNTRY CHURCH GOING.

Paper Read Before the Road Conference in Raleigh, Aug. 23d, by Prof. J. A. Holmes, State Geologist.

Not long ago it was my good fortune to spend a bright Sabbath day with friends living in the hill country of northeastern New Jersey. And when after breakfast the question of church-going was brought up, it was decided that we go to a church in the country, ten miles distant. My natural love for the country made this prospect more than agreeable to me, but I raised two objections: that as much rain had fallen during the past few days, the roads would be quite muddy; and such being the case, it would be a long drive for the pony which was to pull our buggy. "We will see about that," replied my friend. "you are not in North Carolina to-day."

The road had been re-located, graded and macadamized three years before. Its surface was as smooth as the shell road at Wilmington or one of those beautiful highways of Europe; and our pony made the ten miles easily in an hour. There was no mud and no mud holes (although there had been a heavy rain the night before,) no jolting, no twisting of the buggy by cross ditches, and the road had been so carefully laid out that although we were travelling through a hilly country, there was hardly a place where it was necessary for the pony to slacken its speed. We met a number of conveyances drawn by single horses which trotted along with loads varying from one to five persons as though this were no load at all. Every vehicle and every horse looked as clean and fresh as the people who rode behind them with their Sunday clothes on. At the church, when we arrived, were a number of similar vehicles, which had come distances varying from one to ten miles, and there were a number of bicycles which had been ridden for even greater distances.

All the principal roads in that region had been macadamized during the past ten years; and when I asked the question whether any people in that neighborhood were ever kept away from church by bad roads, the answer was that "such was often the case in years gone by, but never now." Neither rains, nor winds, nor sunshine affect these roads; they are always the same—always good.

The average North Carolinians living in the country are already too familiar with conditions somewhat different from those just described. Any of them who may read these paragraphs, and who recall the winter time or even the summer time roads over which they must pass when they go to church in the country are ready to exclaim, "What a contrast!" But for the few of my readers who live in towns and cities and who walk short distances to church over stone or brick pavements, or ride to the door on an electric car, I may add a paragraph or two.

While out on one of my recent excursions through the hill country of North Carolina, Saturday night found me near the home of a minister who preached at four widely-separated country churches. I accepted his kind invitation to spend the Sabbath with him, and also to accompany him to one of his churches, a dozen miles away. It was in the early spring, and the roads were in the condition into which the rainy season of this time of year usually brings them—a condition which the spring usually inherits from the winter.

The minister's wife and daughter wisely decided that it would not be safe for them to try to go, and their near neighbors reached a similar conclusion. The minister and myself had gone but a short distance before we realized the wisdom of their choice, for notwithstanding the fact that we were driving a pair of strong horses to a strong buggy we we were several hours in making the journey. On the way we met but a lone horseman; we passed one broken and deserted wagon stuck in the mud, the occupants of which had started to church, but had now taken refuge in a home near by: and we overtook one buggy and one wagon, pulled slowly by strong, but tired mules. It was mudhole after mudhole, rock after rock, hill after hill, ditch after ditch. And when ar last, bespattered with mud, with weary horses and fretted souls, we reached the church we found there, out of a summer-time congregation of nearly two hundred, less than a score of faithfuls, nearly all men—all in the same condition as ourselves, greatly in need of, but in poor plight for religious duty. I said to a good brother who stood near the door as I approached: "Where is your congregation—the women and children?" "At home, sir" he replied, "they can't get to church when the roads are in the fix they are now, and they have been that way a good part of the winter. My wife and daughters haven't been able to come here half the time since the last of December; and we have had a small crowd here every preaching day." "Yes," said another man, standing near me, "we country people have a hard time of it in the winter season, especially the women and children. The roads are so bad that they can't half go to preaching and Sunday-school; they can't go visiting, the children can't half go to school, and we can't half do anything."

And the man was right. We have in this great country of ours the poorest roads travelled by civilized man. They retard our material development, and their use costs us annually in North Carolina several million of dollars; they seriously interfere with the religious, educational and social life of a large portion of our people; they are an injustice to our women and children; they are a disgrace to our civilization.

Why So Few Men.

A correspondent writes the Christian Intelligencer;

I would like to ask a question through your columns which has long puzzled me, and to which I have never found a satisfactory answer: Why do so few men accept Jesus as their Redeemer and Master and join His army? The women have always been a large factor in the Church of Christ, but were they ever before in such a large majority as to-day? We all know men who are honest in business, kind to their families, generous to the needy and to worthy causes—men who are sadly missed when they go into the "Great Beyond"—and yet they will have little or nothing te do personally with the Church. Perhaps they attend the services regularly, but as to uniting with Christ's professed followers they will not think of it. It may be they are following the Master by themselves, but do we not covet their strength of intellect and influence for the kingdom? Does it not make us terribly anxious because so many stand between the lines?

Henry W. Grady once said, in speaking of the growing skepticism in our country, "The strength of the Church is, after all, the high-minded consistency of its members, the warmth and earnestness of its evangelism, the purity and gentleness of its apostles."

In which of these things are we most lacking? Christ was a manly man, and attracted and won men to Himself. If His Church fails to do so to-day she is missing part of her work.

This article is not an attempt to answer the inquiry fully. It is indeed true that few men as compared with women become Christians. Many men are friendly to religion, have a reverent regard for religious things, and attend the services of the Church with praiseworthy regularity, who will not devote themselves to the Lord. Probably in almost every church there may be found those who give royally, and who faithfully serve in certain lines of Christian activity, but who refuse to take upon them the name of Christ. Thousands of men who could be extremely useful are content outside the pale of the Church. Thousands of men who are highly endowed, especially gifted, devoted to deeds of philanthropy, ready to serve in practical affairs, when called to consecrate themselves to Christ, manifest a positive unwillingness to respond, as they should, to that call, than which none can be more imperative, more important and more necessary to themselves, to their own well being, and to that of their fellow-men. The inquiry is eminently pertinent, Why is this so? Why is it that so many reputable, excellent men in every community occupy this strange attitude toward the claims of the religion of Christ, and resist the loving, earnest appeals of the people of God, and even of God Himself?

Among other reasons, these suggest themselves: Men in the prime of life, in the full vigor of manhood, have an ambition for worldly distinction, and this absorbs their time and attention and exertion. They have their numerous appointments, professional engagements, or business ventures, and they defer their religious obligations and service for the Lord, till it comes to be a confirmed habit with them. Once in this fatal groove of procrastination, they are apt to run on until the bitter end. An accurate examination into the periods of life in which those whose life of godliness gave evidence of true religion, furnishes a startling demonstration of the folly and danger of delay. The probability of conversion rapidly diminishes with each added year. In a congregation of 500 souls, nearly 300 were found to have been converted before they were 20 years of age; 120, between 20 and 30; and about 50 between 30 and 40; leaving only about 20 to be converted above the age of 40. With every decade the likelihood of a man's turning unto the Lord and obeying and serving Him, becomes fainter and fainter.

Preoccupation of mind deters men from serving the Lord. Their responsibilities and cares grow with the growth of years; and their minds become wholly absorbed in planning and providing for the necessities of themselves and their families. Every day brings its engagements, every hour its duties, and naturally they soon come to think that the exactions of business so crowd upon them, and so fully occupy them that they have no time left for the duties of religion.

Upon the mother devolves the care of the children; that is, the immediate, direct oversight and training of them in the home, especially during their young and tender years. Home is the mother's kingdom, where, as a queen by Divine right, she presides, and down to the minutest detail controls. But upon the father—mother, children, all, depend for counsel, guidance, protection and provision. He is the head of the household according to the Word of God. This is his position relatively to wife and offspring. And every upright, true man confesses the relation and recognizes the obligation, and diligently strives, as God gives him ability, to honor the relation and to discharge the obligation. Hence it comes to pass that men's thoughts are on business, the means whereby they provide a home, and, as the common everyday phrase is, make a living for their families. Their talk is about this and to this their energies are given. With most men it is hard work, constant grind six days in the week, and the seventh, or Lord's day, is used literally for rest, for rest of body, for rest of mind, for recuperation of reduced powers and wasted forces for recreation.

In this period of full vigor, with sinews knit in strength and nerves strung harmoniously, men also come to be self-centered and to feel sufficient. Honest, conscientious, industrious citizens, identified with not only the industrial enterprises of the place in which they live but perhaps, also, important factors in its benevolent and moral interests, they are tempted to take undue credit to themselves, may be to pose as great benefactors, and to accept the doctrine of the German rationalists, that a man has in the germ of goodness in him which will at last develop into everlasting life. But when the face is furrowed, when the wheel is broken at the cistern, sometimes then they may be seen dragging into the poor, withered, wornout faculties to God.

We sometimes meet men who have morbid sensibilities in regard to publicly confessing Christ. They exhibit a shamefacedness utterly unworthy of them, and of the noble act. Alas! this unsavory criticism; that the unfeeling sneer of the world and of the wicked should so far influence any as to keep them away from the pleading Son of God, patiently waiting to show how gracious He can be unto perishing men.

Heart Warmers.

BY MRS. SARA B. HOWLAND.

My neighbor has sent me the daintiest little tray, with a new kind of cake on her best handpainted plate, covered with a drawn work napkin. There is a bunch of rosebuds on the tray and tiny "cocked hat" note; and I shall eat the cake, and put the roses in my belt, and the note in my pocket, and have a warm feeling in my heart all day.

There is another neighbor who has prettier plates and napkins and makes delicious cake, but she never thinks to send me any. I suppose it is because she knows that I make good things myself, and she thinks I do not care. But I do. That "sunshine cake" tasted better than anything I know how to make, and the flowers seemed sweeter than any of those that grow in my own patio, and, though I knew she loved me, it made the happy tears come to have her "say it again."

I wonder why we don't oftener say that we love each other, we staid, middle-aged people I mean. Of course, we speak from the heart's depths in the great crises of life, when we first find that we love each other or when some sickness or sorrow comes, but these times are often very far apart, and everyday love is so sweet and satisfying.

There are plenty of friends to sympathize when you have a broken arm or a typhoid fever, but what an unspeakable comfort it is when the friend drops in at the close of a busy day who sees that you are all tired out and that your burned finger, that you haven't had time to tie up, is aching miserably and that the "world is a vale." You know she won't tell that you weren't "self-reliant" for a few minutes, and you do enjoy having her tuck you up on the lounge for a little rest while she smooths out the wrinkle with tender touch and ties up your finger and "kisses the place to make it well." Some people think that only babies like these things, but big ones often need them far more. Isn't it pathetic where Mrs. Whitney makes one of her strong, self-reliant people say that, when she gets to heaven, the thing she wants most is to be "babied" a little while, and does it not hint of a truth that we are too apt to forget in this matter-of-fact world?

What is the part of our friend's letter that we like best, that makes us like to carry it about in our pocket and give it a loving pat, now and then, as we are about our work? It is not where she tells about her visit to the fair, or the funny speeches of the children, or the new summer dresses, or the last book she has read, though you heartily enjoy her bright way of putting things. It is where she says, "I have been thinking all day how dear you are to me, and I want you to know that I love you with all my heart and that I thank my heavenly Father for such a sweet, true friend." Maybe she thinks you are better than you really are, you know that well enough, but it is you she loves and, if she thinks you are good, you will try not to disappoint her.

We know that many a letter signed only "yours truly" comes from a heart overflowing with repressed affection and that it is not always those who say most who feel most, but is it not true that if we would train our lips to say and our pen to write the loving words that come into our hearts, and that we crush back for fear of being gushing, it would make many another heart warm for days together?

I think we are often mistaken in our treatment of invalids in failing to express our real sympathy, under the mistaken idea that we are helping them to "bear up." All the sick people like to have Mrs. Lovewell come in when they are sick, and I have always wondered why, for she is not especially lively, yet she knows how to cheer up the gloomiest invalids in town. I asked her the other day how she does it, and she smiled and said: "The other day I went to see a dear friend, confined to the house for weeks with a torturing neuralgia Her mother and sisters are perfectly devoted to her and have racked their brains to relieve the pain, but they are so afraid she will 'lose control of herself.' As I went in her sister said: 'O, Alice has had such a hard night—never slept a moment! Do see if you can cheer her up, but don't say anything about her sickness or she will give way.' So I went in and another sister was there and told all the funny things she could think of, and still Alice turned her head wearily on the pillow and laughed without a particle of merriment. I was so glad when her sister was called out and left me free to run over to the bed and take her in my arms and say, "My darling, the pain is so hard to bear, isn't it? I know just how you are suffering and am so sorry.' Then I let her cry five minutes and kissed away the tears, and when her sister came back the cloud was gone and the pain was easier to bear, because somebody knew just how she felt."

We can't all do just like Mrs. Lovewell, for she has had such long practice in loving that it comes right from the heart when she does a thing like that. But we all have ways of showing our sympathy, if we would only let ourselves do it, and I do believe that many sick people are all worn out with being "cheerful" and "bearing up," and that it would be a real relief to let them have a good cry sometimes in the arms of somebody who understands.—The Congregationalist.

The Greatness of Faith.

We have been talking about the dignity and greatness of faith. But St. Paul says something else about it. It is the gift and inspiration of God. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." Not merely is it a great and noble thing to feel through all life the grasp and influence of Jesus, but this great and noble thing no man can do unless God and the Holy Ghost inspires and helps him to do. This statement of St. Paul seems to me to have at its heart the profoundest and most beautiful conception of the relation between God and man. Suppose that it were not true. Suppose faith in Christ being, as I have tried to show it, the crowning act of man, it were yet an act which man could do without any inspiration or help of God; suppose that in this, or any other of the greatest actions of his life, man could first conceive the wish to do it all by and of himself—have you not, in such a supposition broken the absoluteness, the essentialness, the permanency of the whole relation between our own life and God's? The true idea of that relationship involves the presence of God in every highest activity of man. It often seems to me as if men had got such a low and inadequate conception of all this! Men talk, very religious men, as if God was a sort of reserve force to be called in when he is needed—a sort of last resort when man's strength failed. And so I sometimes think that the whole Christian thought of man's being dependent upon God continually seems to a good many people like something cowardly, unmanly, a miserable calling up of the reserve when we ought to be fighting out the battle for ourselves. The thought of God which Christ came to reveal, the thought of God of which all Christ's own life was full, is something totally different from that. To Christ's thought God and man are part of one system—one structure, one working force. To separate them is not to simply deny man a power that he needs; it is to break a unity, and to set a part of the power to the attempt to do what the whole power ought to do as one. The strength, the force, which is appointed to lift your burden, to run your race, so find your truth, to hold the canopy of faithfulnes over your life, is not you. It is you and God. For you to try to do it alone is unnatural. It is almost as if the engine tried to run without its steam, or as if the chisel tried to carve without the artist. It is engine and steam that are to make the running power. It is artist and chisel that are to carve the statue. It is God and you that live your life. For you to try to live it alone is to try to do all the work with one part of the power. God is not a crutch coming in to help your lameness, unnecessary to you if you had all your strength. He is the breath of the lungs. The stronger you are, the more thoroughly are yourself, the more you need it, the more your need of him.—Phillips Brooks.

For Better or Worse.

It is a generally admitted principle that every person is being made better by the experiences and observations of life. With many it may appear doubtful on which side the scale preponderates, whether for their improvement or the opposite, but that it is a change going on for better or worse is doubtless true of all. Hence the outlook towards immortality presents a consideration of tremendous importance. Yet it is an idea often presented in varied forms in the Scriptures. We have the promise that all things shall work together for good to those who love and endeavor to follow Christ. We are told that the evil disposed shall wax worse and worse That those who suffered the judgments of God blasphemed him the more for their sufferings. In short whether treated with kindness or severity they grew worse.

Amid the ever-changing scenes of life's varied pathway every thoughtful person will often inquire of himself whether his occupation, his associations, his reading, the influences with which he is environed in his daily life is tending to elevate him in his character, his enjoyments and scale of being, or to carry him downward to a lower grade of living, thinking and feeling, and will desire and seek so far as he is able that use of his opportunities that will promote his highest well being.

As the business man feels that he cannot afford to live without his daily paper to keep himself informed about what is going on in the business world, and to keep himself in touch with the spirit of the age, to be successful in his line of pursuit, so the Christian man in every calling, who is looking forward to that kingdom which is righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, will feel that he cannot afford to be without his religious journals to keep himself informed about what is going on in relation to the kingdom of Christ on earth, and to keep his heart in touch of sympathy with those who are doing good, to grow in grace continually, striving for a nobler and better range of living, even the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.—Religious Herald.

Hindrances.

In a religious paper the statement was made that several persons had recently united with a certain Church, and then it closed with these words: "There are others who would be glad to follow, but there are hindrances at present." This remark is somewhat suggestive. It suggests the fact that a good many people meet with hindrances of one kind or another which prevent them from doing their duty presently. What then are they to do? If the hindrances be real, if they be insurmountable, then let the hindered one be patient, self-possesed, trustful, hopeful. Unfortunately some Christians, when unpreventably hindered from performing some duty, allow themselves to complain, to get vexed, to become discouraged and limp. Their wills have been crossed and they feel cross. Thus they lose power. They show a real unfitness for doing well the duty which they were kept from performing. And perhaps God has had a hand in their being hindered from doing the duty which they desired to do. He saw that they needed better discipline before going further. So he keeps them back and schools them and tests them. They need more of the submissive spirit, more tenderness and larger views of God and duty. But sometimes some things which seem to be hindrances are not so great, so real, so fixed as they seem to be. A little more faith, courage, zeal and perseverance would remove them. But somehow make your hindrances a positive help to you, whether you can remove them or not. Consult God about them and get his blessing.—C. H. Wetherbe, in Southern Presbyterian.

Two Types of Preaching.

A moderate acquaintance with the various existing types of church oratory will suffice to show the enormous differences in point of power and impressiveness which characterize them. If, looking above the line of palpable failure, we begin at the level of achievement which may be called respectable, we become aware of two types. One is that of the calm enunciation, usually from a manuscript, of moderately interesting and important matter, which, succeeding fairly in holding the attention during the half-hour it occupies, sends the hearers contentedly away to discuss the weather. The other, and, alas! far more rare, is that where the speaker, facing his audience, begins to develop a topic which, as it unfolds, kindles, by the attrition of thought and feeling, a light and heat within him which flash from the eye and put new tones into the voice, and which has the further effect of fusing the separate, individualities of the audience into one whole, until preacher and people, made one by mutual sympathy, find themselves moving together upon a stream of consciousness, in which the words used and the ideas presented are only the surface of the current which is bearing them along, the total contents of which, if analyzed, would be found to contain every highest quality of human spirit. Such utterance is a birth, preceded, it may be, by pangs of travail, but the result of which is something that lives. Religious speech of this kind not only irresistibly draws men, but conquers them and compels them.—London Christian World.

It was the ambitious young man and woman on the farm, behind the counter, in the mill, in the lawyer's office, in the bank—the man and woman without the opportunity of a college education, that made this method of teaching law a necessity. We offer two courses—

2. A Business Law Course for Business Men and Women.

Rev. A. J. Cheatham, from Hope, Ark., to Potosi, Mo.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Brunswick County:—The movement begun in Brunswick last summer supported by two gentlemen of the First church and St. Andrew's in Wilmington, was renewed this year under the same worker, Rev. L. W. Curtis. The work in the upper part of the county began to yield fruit last week when a meeting was held partly at Zion M. E. Church, and partly at a Sabbath-school organized in July at a point called New Hope. The faithful Presbyterian family in this neighborhood, cordially aided by a few Methodist families, have worked zealously in the Sabbath-school, and with the preaching and indefatigable pastoral labors of Mr. Curtis prepared the way for a blessing. Rev. G. H. Cornelson preached for a day and a half when the work was taken up by Dr. Hoge. At Zion there was no effort made except to confirm souls in the Christian life, but at New Hope, which is a community removed from religious privileges, the chief aim was soul-saving. As there was manifest need for a church in that neighborhood, and it was evident that a Presbyterian church would be welcomed not only by those who wished to unite with it, but by the whole community, opportunity was given to unite with the Presbyterian church and six were received, representing four families. Three of them were heads of families. They were temporarily assigned to membership in the First church of Wilmington, but application will be made to Presbytery for the organization of a church. Sufficient members, capable officers, and money and land for a building are all in sight.

New Hope Church:—In another column find good news from this church under head "The Old Country Churches."

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Bethphage in Concord Presbytery:—Had a delightful meeting at our last communion. Eleven persons were received on profession of faith. Rev. H. D. Lequeux was with us and preached with much power. Rev. W. M. Shaw is pator.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Bluff Church:—The Rev. D. D. McBryde assisted Rev. A. M. Hassell in a protracted meeting at Bluff church. This church was under the pastoral care of Bro. McBryde for over thirty-five years, and the congregations did greatly enjoy his presence among them again. Bro. McBryde preached the blessed gospel with great power. The church was revived and three were added on profession of faith in Christ.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Items from Mecklenburg Presbytery:—Lowell communion, first Sabbath of August, seven additions. Dr. E. E. Boyd, of A. R. P. gave us one sermon.

New Hope:—At communion, second Sabbath of August two additions. Bros. Lingle and McIlwain gave valuable help on work-days.

Belmont:—Third Sabbath in August, one added. Bro. J. K. Hall, being on a visit to his mother, gave us two good sermons. Twenty-five have been added to the pastorate this yea. R. A. M.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Bethel Church:—The pastor began a series of services, in this church, on Sabbath, 12th of August, 1894, which continued for nine days. With the exception of one sermon from a candidate for the ministry the pastor did all the preaching himself, and felt amply rewarded, in the good that was done, through him. The Lord's Supper was observed at the beginning of the meeting, and the interest began with that service. The Holy Ghost was poured out upon believer and unbeliever. The large house of worship was filled every day with an attentive congregation. God's people were greatly revived, and some eighteen or twenty young persons, the baptized children of the church, sought the Lord, and, it is hoped, found Him, in the salvation of their souls. They will be received into full membership, at a subsequent meeting of the session. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy name give glory, for Thy mercy, and for Thy truth's sake." PASTOR.

Banner Elk, Cranberry and Spruce Pine:—Rev. R. P. Pell, writes from Cranberry, Aug. 29th.: We have just had a fruitful meeting at Banner Elk. There were twenty-nine professions of faith and twenty-four additions to the church.

Bro. R. L. McNair, of Union Theological Seminary has rendered most valuable service in this part of our evangelistic field. Much of his time has been spent here during his vacation, and the people are very much distressed at the prospect of his leaving them to return to his studies.

Our school at this point, under the care of Misses Houpe and Stinson, has been largely attended and well conducted. These ladies have been especially helpful in our Sabbath-school and church work. We will also open a school at Cranberry in a few days to be taught by Mrs. E A. McRae, so well known in connection with the Ladies' Foreign Missionary Society movement in Fayetteville Presbytery. Our school at Spruce Pine will require three teachers and the one at Cove Creek will be managed by two good ladies. These four schools are under the control of Concord Presbytery.

VIRGINIA.

Amherst, C. H.:—Rev. D. Blain, pastor. Five persons received into communion—two on certificate and three by letter.

Roanoke Presbytery:—The free conversation was unusually interesting and encouraging. Revivals were reported and the vigorous pushing forward of work in other directions. The matter of licensure of candidates and that of ordination of evangelists—sent down from the assembly were deferred for spring meeting. Rev. G. W. Belk and Ruling Elder R. F. Hutcheson were chosen commissioners to the General Assembly. Mr. F. L. Harper was received as a candidate for the ministry.

GEORGIA.

Greensboro:—Rev. E. G. Smith writes the Southern Presbyterian: We have just closed a highly interesting meeting of eight days in the Greensboro church. Dr. J. B. Mack was with us and did most of the preaching. As a result there were five additions to the church.

ALBEMARLE PRESBYTERY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Met at Nut Bush church, Aug. 15th. Dr. Daniel's opening sermon was a fine one, goes without saying. Rev. F. D. Thomas was elected moderator. Capt. R. C. Bunn and Mr. R. A. Bullock, clerks.

Rev. E. W. Way, of Savannah Presbytery, was with us during the session and added to the enjoyment of it. Revs. T. U. Faucette and W. T. Walker were received on letters of dismissal. Order was taken for the installation of the latter at Nut Bush and Shiloh and Oak Hill churches.

Licentiate R. W. Hines was examined and ordained to the full work of the ministry as an evangelist, and he was assigned work in Halifax, Martin and Pitt counties.

The assessment and appointments on Oxford church were reduced one-half and her arrearages were remitted. Geneva church received a reduction of one-third. Henderson church was reassessed at $20 for the Presbyterial Fund. All arrearages on all churches, that were willing to have them remitted were remitted up to March 31st, 1894. This does not apply to the arrearages on the last assessment for April. The churches were urged to pay up their arrearges and also their proportion of the debt on Presbyterial Fund as an extra.

The Presbytery is in debt still to her candidates for last year. We need the full amount this year. The formation of Home Missionary societies was urged on the churches. Oxford has already led off in this matter. Mr. Hines was sent to Nahalah and Roanoke one Sunday in each month instead of going to Hyde county.

The following supplies were ordered:

Louisburg: F. D. Thomas, Eugene Daniel, J. E. Thacker. Wilson: J. N. H. Summerell, R. W. Hines. Nahalah; F. H. Johnston. Roanoke: J. E. L. Winecoff. Enterprise: W. D. Morton, W. T. Walker.

Presbytery commended the schools of Rev. T. U. Faucette, of Oxford, and also Elder Jno. Graham, of Ridgeway, to those having daughters to educate.

The Presbytery declined to give approval to the proposed changes in our constitutional law touching licensure and ordination.

The churches were urged to organize more thoroughly the colored work.

[Action taken relative to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN will be found on our first page.]

Encouraging reports were given of the work of Evangelists in the Home Mission fields.

Usually the chief interest of the fall meeting of Presbytery revolves around the report of the agent of Foreign Missions. But as Bro. Bigger had left us and Bro. Farries was detained at home by sickness, the committee to which was referred this subject, could not, from lack of time and data do the subject justice. But a few of the brethren made short talks and the public service on this great branch of our work seem to have been enjoyed. Presbytery has had Candidate H. D. Brown, a student of Davidson College, engaged in colportage work this summer. He thoroughly canvassed Greene, Hyde and Bertie counties, and gave a valuable report at Presbytery of his labors.

The agent of manses made a report disclosing the following facts: There are in Albemarle Presbytery eleven manses valued at $23,400, rental value, $1,800. Insured for $8,600, with about $2,100 debt, mostly in good condition and in a good location, and suitable to the needs of the pastor. The Presbytery recommends that the churches all remember that the manse is not the property of their minister and he is not to be expected to keep it in repair. That the deacons should each year inspect the property and report to the congregation what it needs to render it more comfortable and take prompt measures to meet these expenses.

Newbern and Raleigh churches were urged to increase the insurance of their manses, and Warrenton, Nut Bush and Washington to take out insurance.

That Goldsboro and Tarboro do not allow their manses to suffer from needed painting.

That Nut Bush endeavor at as early a day as possible to make the needed additions to their manse and that Shiloh and Oak Hill be urged to assist in such enlargement.

That in all cases where there is a group of churches, each church shall contribute to the erection or improvement or repairing of the manse where their pastor lives.

As $250 is the amount needed from the Invalid Fund, this amount was apportioned among the churches. Full discretionary powers were given to the committee having in charge the sale of the Second church property in Raleigh.

Rev. F. W. Farries was elected agent of Foreign Missions. Rev. C. M. Wharton was elected agent of Sabbath Observance. Messrs. Summerell, Hines and Brown were appointed a committee to organize churches at Parmele and Everett's if the way be clear. After a hearty vote of thanks Presbytery adjourned to meet during Synod at the call of the moderator.

Newbern, April 10th, 7.30 p. m., was selected as place and time for spring meeting.

STATED CLERK.

NOTES.

Rev. W. T. Walker was installed pastor of Nut Bush church the day following the adjournment of Presbytery. It speaks well for the new pastorate that the congregation was so devoted to their last pastor. A reference from the pulpit to Rev. Carr Moore brought tears of affection to many eyes. Oh, how all classes loved that fearless, true, large-hearted man.

In the ordination services of Licentiate R. W. Hines, the natural interest was increased by the fact that his father, Rev. Edward Hines, was for years pastor of Nut Bush church, and that so many of the young preacher's friends and relatives were present taking the deepest interest in his examinations and enjoying his earnest trial sermon. His dear old mother sat in the congregation, her heart happy in beholding with her own eyes the answer to the prayers which had surrounded her son from his very birth.

The singing! I wish every ear in the Synod had heard it, and I know every heart would have enjoyed it. Dr. Girardeau would have had a telling illustration of his views concerning the worship in song. Mr. Graham has for years led the singing there, and has instructed the congregation in true singing.

What a refined community that of Nut Bush is! Evidences of ante-bellum prosperity are abundant. There was such genuine hospitality. Dignity, grace and piety were so happily blended, with healthful beauty thrown in. But I must not allow my pen to speak with too much emphasis of the charming ladies who attended so numerously, so attentively and so domestically upon the Presbytery. Not that emphasis could exaggerate, but——!

Dr. Daniel preached the ordination sermon, choosing for his subject, "Feed my Lambs." It was a magnificent setting to that gem of a doctrine, Infant Baptism—so dear to every intelligent Pedo-baptist heart.

THE FALL MEETING OF PRESBYTERIES AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

DEAR BRETHREN:—More than a thousand churches of our connection were not heard from at this office during the whole of last year in the way of a contribution to Foreign Missions. The Executive Committee desires to call your attention to this fact, and ask you to aid us in reaching all these churches during the coming month of October.

We would suggest that each Presbytery take the Minutes of the General Assembly and get a list of its own non-contributing churches and arrange for a visitation of them, either by a minister or an elder, who shall hold a service, take the collection, procure subscribers to "The Missionary, and wherever practicable, organize ladies' and children's missionary societies.

Many of these churches we know are vacant and many of them weak and struggling. But wherever there is a band of Southern Presbyterians large enough to be organized into a church, something ought to be heard from them in the way of help for our Foreign Mission work, which is for the benefit of those, who are more needy and destitute than any body to be found anywhere in all this Christian land.

In any case where the Presbytery has had its fall meeting before this communication is read, we respectfully ask the Presbyterial Chairman or Committee of Foreign Missions to take this matter in hand and endeavor to carry out our suggestion.

When we shall see a whole, united church, at work with one accord for this great cause, a condition will be fulfilled upon which there waits a new and larger blessing than any we have yet experienced, on all branches of our work, whether at home or abroad.

Your brethren in the Lord,
The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions.

S. H. CHESTER, Secretary.

THE OLD COUNTRY CHURCHES.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

I have been spending about three weeks in the neighborhood of the old historic church, New Hope, in Orange county. While there I assisted our young Bro. Rev. D. J. Currie, of Chapel Hill in a week's meeting at New Hope church. It was a week delightfully spent and greatly enjoyed. The daily association with old friends, and with Bro. Currie, who has already won the hearts of the people, was exceedingly pleasant.

The congregations each day were large, and the people were so attentive to the Word preached, and so cordial in their hospitality that every one felt that it was good to be there.

My heart goes out to these dear old country churches where the people, in the simplicity of the ancient faith of their fathers, still worship God after the manners and customs of the olden times, and point backward to a glorious record. This church is at least one hundred and thirty years old, and from it have gone forth many streams to make glad the city of God A large number of ministers, especially in the Western States, could point back through their ancestors to this dear old church, and say: "I was born there."

During the meeting and my sojourn with this people five persons were received into the church on profession, and one child was baptized. Several other persons expect to join very soon.

Bro. Currie expects to be ordained to the full work of the ministry at the approaching meeting of Orange Presbytery, and will then be installed pastor of this church in connection with Chapel Hill church. We bespeak for this young brother a bright future, and one of great usefulness. May God bless him and crown his labors with success in this important field of labor.

Long live the old mother churches!

Yours truly,
D. I. CRAIG.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 29th, 1894.

Congress formally adjourned yesterday afternoon. It practically adjourned the day that the House passed the tariff bill, as it has been unable since that time to transact any important business, except by unanimous consent. Two bills which in the opinion of most good citizens should have been passed before adjournment were left on the calendar of the House after they had been passed by the Senate. They were, the bill of Senator Hoar to prohibit the sending or carrying of lottery tickets and advertisements by express, and the bill prepared by the Superintendent of Immigration, to stop the coming of alien anarchists to the United States and to deport those already here upon proof of their character. Lack of a quorum in the House was apparently what prevented action on both of them, although if a quorum had been present action upon them might have been prevented in some other way. The manner in which this Congress dealt with the few bills which came before it in the interest of moral reform was not such as to inspire confidence in its feelings towards the greatest of all causes.

Speaking of moral reform, it is certainly spreading among the people, if not in Congress. As an evidence of this I quote Mr. Blackwell, the Supreme Chancellor of the Uniformed Rank Knights of Pythias, which is this week holding its annual encampment in Washington: "Some years ago the Supreme Lodge granted permission to the Grand Lodges to locally legislate as they might desire upon the saloon element question and the eligibility of owners and tenders thereof to membership in our order. Under this permission several grand Lodges have since declared saloon keepers and bartenders ineligible to membership upon the ground of their business engagements having a strong tendency to the cultivation of immorality, lawlessness, and other disreputable habits in contradistinction to the teachings of our order. Surprising as it may seem to some, it is nevertheless demonstratable that the Grand Lodges which have taken hold of this question and legislated to exclude this doubtful material have not only succeeded in securing the best of material, but they also stand as the most active and progressive among the grand jurisdictions. If it was the wish of the Supreme Lodge to experiment when permission was granted Grand Lodges to locally test this question, I am glad to say the experiment was most satisfactory. In fact, so strongly am I convinced that the step is one in the interest of law, order, morality, respectability and better citizenship, that I am constrained to conclude that the time has come when we, as a great fraternity, should put aside policy, expediency, or any other question of doubt that may stand in the way and declare ourselves the leaders of reform by manfully facing this question and declaring that no saloon keeper, bartender or professional gambler shall hereafter be considered as eligibie to apply for membership in any lodge of our order. Nearly all of our disorders, Sunday desecration and insubordination have come from this element, which seems to delight in the cultivaiion of lawlessness and hoodlum habits. They have been of no benefit whatever to our order in the past but rather, like barnacles upon the craft have greatly hindered our progress in the direction of a higher respectability. Thousands of our most reputable citizens have held aloof because of the presence of this element among our membership, however small. One bartender among a subordinate membership of two hundred becomes the object lesson which the outside world will point for evidence in condemnation of the whole, and the one thousand saloon men in our membership of half a million cast a reflection upon the whole, which most perceptibly affects our claim for the support and confidence of the Christian world." If the leaven keeps working the K. of P. may soon add "Temperance" to the "Friendship, Charity and Benevolence" of their order.

Treasury officials anticipate much trouble and litigation in consequence of the looseness with which many of the schedules of the new tariff law were drawn.

Constitutional requirements having been met, I hereby call a meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery, to be held at Charlotte, N. C., in the Second Presbyterian church, on Wednesday, Sept. 12th, at 11 o'clock, a. m., for the purpose of examining Mr. Sam W. Moore with the view of receiving him under care of Presbytery, as a candidate for the ministry.

Moderator.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

REV. PEYTON H. HOGE, D. D., Editor.

☞All communications for this department should be addressed directly to Dr. HOGE and not to the office of the PRESBYTERIAN.

Third Quarter.—Lesson XII.

Sept. 16.—Jesus at Jacob's Well.

John iv. 9-26. Commit vss. 11-14.

Golden Text. Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst. John iv. 14.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. THE SAMARITANS. For their origin see 2 Kings xvii. 24-41. For the prejudice between Jews and Samaritans see Ezra iv. 1-3; Neh. iv. 2; Luke ix. 51-53; x. 33; John viii. 48. In worship, they held a mixture between Judaism and idolatry (see above); they accepted a mutilated copy of the Pentateuch, but not the other Scriptures, and they had a temple on Mt. Gerizim which they held to be the only sacred place, Deut. xi. 29; Josh. viii. 33. Their priesthood was descended from a certain Manasseh, brother of Jaddua the high-priest, who refused to dissolve his Samaritan marriage (compare Ezra. x. 18). Sanballat aided him in establishing the rival sanctuary of Gerizim. The Samaritans claim that he brought the only true copy of the Pentateuch with him; but it was manifestly altered to suit his purposes.

JACOB'S WELL. Northeast of Mt. Gerizim about half an hour's walk from Nablous on the site of ancient Shechem. It is dug about a hundred feet deep and walled up with limestone. The digging of such a well, when there are copious streams near by, can only be accounted for by the limitations of Jacob's purchase, Gen. xxxiii. 18, 19, and the necessity of making himself independent of his neighbors as to water supply. Why the woman came thither to draw, when there were streams between the well and the city, is best accounted for by Dr. Trumbull's suggestion, that she was drawing, not to carry to the city, but to supply the workmen in the neighboring grain-fields. When she went to the city she left her water jar.

THE CONNECTION. The growing opposition of the Jews to John, iii. 25; the transfer of this opposition to Jesus, iv. 2; his consequent departure, vs. 3. Trace route on map and compare with the longer route used by the caravans to the feasts, avoiding Samaria by crossing the Jordan into Perea and back again into Galilee. Our Lord's last journey to Jerusalem was by this route.

TIME. We have a note of time in vs. 35. It was four months before harvest—i. e., most probably early or spring harvest. This indicates a Judean ministry of eight months after the passover mentioned in ii. 13, 23, of which the only record is found in ch. iii. and iv. 1.

The hour was most probably noon, though some think that John uses the Roman method of counting (like ours) and that it was six in the evening. The request of vs. 7 should be included in the lesson. It was an expression of human want in the Divine Saviour, like that upon the cross, John xix. 28, but doubtless designed to open a conversation for the salvation of this soul.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: The Saviour creating desire, vss. 9-15; the Saviour convincing of sin, vss. 16-18; the Saviour enlightening the mind, vss. 19-24; the Saviour revealing Himself, vss. 25, 26.

Third Step. In the study of this unique conversation we unite the third, fourth and fifth steps into an exposition of the whole passage. The subject, "A soul and its Saviour."

Note the characteristics of the soul that make it typical: (1) A life of toil, vss. 7, 15; (2) A life of sin, vss. 17, 18.

Jesus seeks to create within her a desire for salvation by revealing it as living water, vs. 10. This she at first simply misunderstands; and naturally, for she had no such association with the figurative use of the expression as we, and it was the common term to denote the running water of a well or spring, as distinguished from the standing water of a pool or cistern. She thought of nothing different from what the well contained, vss. 11, 12. Jesus, in language that has become immortal, reveals to her that it is something very different, that its virtue is not temporary, but perennially and increasingly satisfying, vss. 13, 14. But this that tells us of that rest and satisfaction of the soul that nothing of earth can give, tells her only of a supernatural supply of natural wants. She ignores the deeper needs of her soul and seeks rest not from sin, but from toil, vs. 15.

This leads to the abrupt transition by which Jesus appears to drop the subject and turn to another. But it is really to arouse the the consciousness of her deeper need, by convincing her of sin. There is no need of talking to a soul about salvation that is not convinced of sin, vss. 16-18.

The arrow goes home and she becomes an inquirer after religion—according to her ideas of religion, vss. 19, 20. Some, indeed, think that this was only an effort to put the Saviour off from His searching inquiries, but the two views are not inconsistent with each other. When the conscience is partially awakened it seeks a palliative in the forms or externals of religion. It is hard to think that one wholly deludes oneself with the idea that these things are sufficient, but yet in this state there is often very intense earnestness about these questions. Modes of baptism, modes of ordination, forms of worship, seem to be the essential things. Religion appears as a question of priesthoods, and vestments, of postures and places So she, groping in the dark after something that she can call religion, seeks to settle from the lips of a real prophet the long vexed question between the Jews and Samaritans, vss. 19, 20.

To her darkly seeking soul Jesus opens the full light. Religion does not consist in such questions. They may indeed have a right and wrong to them as far as they go (vs. 22), but they are not the essentials of religion. Religion is not a thing of priesthoods and successions, of forms and ceremonies, of times and places; religion is the spiritual worship of a spiritual God; it is the outgoing of the heart of a child to a loving Father, who is ready to bless sincere worshippers however, whenever and wherever they come to Him, vss. 21-24.

But this great central, blazing truth of religion would have done her little good had our Lord stopped here. It would indeed show her what religion was, but how to attain it—that was different. How could she with her poor, sinning soul draw near to this holy God and offer Him a pure and acceptable worship? And so, thoroughly convicted of her sin, and convinced of her helplessness, she reaches out after the Hope of all ages, the Desire of all nations—a daysman (Job. ix. 33), a mediator (Ex. xx. 19)—one who can reveal God unto us, and bring us near to God. Of the promise of such a One even she had heard, and to that promise she turns as her only hope, vs. 25. Then it is "that Jesus gives her that pearl He never cast before swine, and in simple, unmistakable language reveals Himself as the Messiah who could reveal to her this infinite God and create within her those spiritual desires and aspirations that would lead her to true worship and spiritual communion. Now at last she knows the meaning of that living water He had offered, and gratefully receiving His revelation of Himself, she goes off rejoicing in a well of water springing up within her unto everlasting life.

Sixth Step. To recognize the heart of religion; to bring the soul face to face with God and then lay hold upon the Mediator; to drink of the living water He gives, and find in Him pardon, peace and eternal life—this is the practical lesson we should all lay to heart. The lesson is the amplification of Matt. xi. 28

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Get before the class as rapidly as possible the points brought out in the First Step. Then by question and answer draw out the conversation as expounded above, having references read as you come to them but the verses from the lesson repeated as far as possible. Bring home to your scholars the need of a Saviour who saves from sin, by showing them that nothing but heart-worship will be accepted of God, and that before we can render that we need a new heart, that only Jesus can give.

NEW QUESTIONS.

97. What O. T. incident as interpreted in the New (give both references) sets forth Christ as the giver of the living water?
98. Give four different forms of water (with references) that are used to set forth spiritual blessings.
99. Give the two distinct ways in which water sets forth the Holy Spirit and His work.

Every day brings with it many opportunities to learn truth, to shun evil, to do good and by these means to lay the foundations for a true spiritual life in ourselves, and to assist others in doing it; many occasions to do our work. Let us do it while it is day. Let us do it better than we have ever done it before. Let us accomplish more. Let us grow to a riper age, to a fuller spiritual stature, that when the day is done we may all be able to say, in the language of our great Exemplar: "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do."

At the home of her son-in-law, Dr. Frank Robinson, in Lowell, Gaston county, N. C., Mrs. DICY REID, wife of the late Jas. W. Reid, on 16th of August, 1894, aged 70 years, 6 months and 16 days. Mrs. Reid was a devout and consistent member of the Presbyterian church for nearly fifty years. Naturally of a lively and genial temperament, her religion was joy and brightness. As a wife the heart of her husband safely trusted in her, and she looked well to the ways of her household. As a mother the law of kindness was in her mouth; as a sister she was affectionate; and as a neighbor it was a joy to her heart to do an act of kindness

"As a star that is lost when the daylight is given
She hath faded away to shine brightly in heaven."

R. A. M.

Mrs. SARAH ANN WADE, wife of Mr. Marshall Wade, departed to be with Christ, Aug. 18th, 1894. She was 71 years of age and had been a member of Bluff Presbyterian church for thirty years. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

At his home in Rowan county, HUGH KERR PARKS. He was born March 3d, 1870, and died July 9th, 1894, aged 24 years, 4 months, and 6 days.

When about fifteen years of age he was received into the full communion of Bethpage Presbyterian church in which his father is an honored deacon. He entered Davidson College in 1888, and was taken under care of Concord Presbytery in the spring of 1889 as a candidate for the ministry. He came home sick from the commencement having received his diploma of graduation, and also the essayist medal from the Eumenean Society, intending to prosecute his theological studies this fall, but fell asleep on Christ after an illness of several weeks.

Reared in a Christian home, consecrated to God in infancy, he remembered his Creator in the days of his youth, and entered faithfully upon his preparatory work, though often physically unable, determined to equip himself for the sacred calling.

But his Saviour took him unto Himself in the bloom of his manhood. How mysterious, yet, how reasonable; when we remember that his character was perfected. He was pure in his life, simple in his habits, attractive in his manners, of good report among all with whom he came in contact, and gave promise of great moral and intellectual force. A noble young man. He presented the gospel, while preparing to preach, in the school-room; in the class-room; among his fellow students; among his neighbors. We thank God for his beautiful, though brief life, with its many lessons and wholesome influences, and submissively bow to His will.

He passed away peacefully surrounded by sorrowing friends and relatives who had done all for him that loving hands could do, and was "delivered unto his mother," who preceded him several years, by that same compassionate Saviour who comforted the widow of Nain. The sympathies of God's people go out to the bereaved ones.

THE SEPTEMBER CONTRIBUTION.

To the General Assembly's Home Missions work, will be used:

1. Under God's blessing to secure the salvation of our fellow-men now living, who like ourselves will pass away with this generation.

2. To lay foundations in the growing cities, towns and country of the great west, so as to save that part of our country for Christ through coming years. It will be godless if we fail to use the opportunity given by our Lord to preach and teach His gospel there now.

3. As we build up churches there, we have a stronger force to help us send this gospel to the heathen world. Twenty years ago the two Synods of Arkansas and Texas gave $1,368 to Foreign Missions. Since then Home Missionary contributions have helped to plant and to foster churches there and last year they gave $6,433 to send the gospel to the heathen. To aid in establishing churches in our own land is to help the whole world.

A most urgent appeal comes this money to the Central office asking for $700 to place an Evangelist in one part of Florida, where an Evangelist is imperatively needed. The Central Committee lays this call and many others before the people of God. They await your response. They cannot take a step beyond that which you authorize by the amount you contribute. This is the month set apart for this work.

Fraternally,
J. N. CRAIG, Secretary.

Say Soes.

Bedclothes should be mainly of white material and changed once a week in winter and oftener in warm weather.

A hot bath on going to bed, even in the hot nights of summer, is a better reliever of sleepless than many drugs. Inflated parts subside under the continual poulticing of real hot water. Very hot water is a prompt checker of bleeding; and, besides, if it is clean, as it should be, it aids in sterilising our wounds. A riotous stomach will nearly always gratefully receive a glass or more of hot water. It likewise has a wonderful effect on the biliary organs.

The Heavy End Of a Match.

"Mary," said Farmer Flint at the breakfast table as he asked for a second cup of coffee, "I have made a discovery."

"Well. Cyrus, you're about the last one I'd expect of such a thing, but what is it?"

"I have found that the heavy end of a match is its light end," responded Cyrus with a grin that would have adorned a skull.

Mary looked disgusted, but with an air of triumph quickly reported, "I've got a discovery too, Cyrus. It was made by Dr. R. V. Pierce, and is called a 'Golden Medical Discovery.' It drives away blotches and pimples, purifies the blood, tones up the system and makes one feel brand new. Why, it cured Cousin Ben who had Consumption and was almost reduced to a skeleton. Before his wife began to use it she was a pale, sickly thing, but look at her: she's rosy-cheeked and healthy, and weighs 165 pounds. That, Cyrus is a discovery that's worth mentioning."

Young or middled-aged men, suffering from premature decline of power, however induced, speedily and radically cured. Illustrated book sent securely sealed for 10 cents in stamps. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

FOR THE FAMILY.

THE TRUE SUCCESS—LOVE.

Because I love the children, my Sabbath days are sweet;
I hail the still bright mornings, and hasten them to greet;
I look into their faces, and see the love-light there,
And I am always happy in their hours of praise and prayer.

Because I love these children, I long that they shall be
Now, in life's morning, treading the narrow way with me.
I love the little travelers, and pray that they may stand,
With the journey safely over, in the Father's sunny land.

Because I love these childeen, now in their childhood sweet,
I long to bring them closely unto the Saviour's feet.
No joy is like the pleasure of always serving Him;
I long for them to serve Him ere years their life shall dim.

Because I love these children, I would that they should know
How dangerous is the pathway which pilgrims tread below;
But there is waiting ready the Guide of life and light,
And those who cling to Jesus will walk the way aright.

Because I love these children, I point them day by day
To Jesus, blessed Jesus, who taketh sin away;
I ask the gentle Master to give to them a place
Among the willing learners to whom He shows His face.

Because I love these children, I cannot be content
Unless I have them with me when life with me is spent.
Oh, I would bring them early, that in His home above
We may all dwell together—I and the class I love.

Items for Lady Readers.

A bright little woman is Mrs. Ella Luria Hoyle, inventor of the Electric cake beater and dropper, who is at present visiting her family in this city. Since obtaining her patent and winning a medal at the world's fair, Mrs. Hoyle has been travelling almost constantly, establishing agencies everywhere. This brave little woman deserves all the success she has won, and her career is only another case exploding the theory that literary women are not practical, and hence lack business ability. A few years ago, Mrs. Hoyle laid down her pen, on discovering that her lovely home on Canal street had to be sold and that she must become the bread winner for her helpless family, two of whom were orphan girls whom she had raised, promising their mother on her dying bed that she would care for them. She has nobly fulfilled the trust, passing through difficulties that many a man's stout heart would have quailed beneath; but Mrs. Hoyle's devotion to duty is only another exemplification of the beauty of the character of the true Southern woman. At the world's fair, Mrs. Hoyle had a booth in the woman's building, which was the resort of almost all the people from this section, who were interested in seeing the enterprising little lady make battercakes and serve them in the old Southern style. Governor Foster and his staff and Mrs. Foster paid her the honor of calling at her booth and partaking of some of the nice cakes she made. Mrs. Hoyle is very quick at repartee. She used only Southern manufactured goods. One day some one said, as she was serving a great crowd of prominent people who had congregated around her booth, "How generous you are!" "Yes," she answered quickly, "these pieces of cake are like our Southern hearts—light, large and warm always." This reply caused loud applause from the crowd. Then a gentleman standing near said: "You say you are a Southerner and that you invented that cake beater?" "I did sir," she replied gently. "Well," he answered, "we Northern men, gave you a good beating in the war." "Yes," she answered brightly, "but you never beat the courtesy or chivalry out of the Southern gentlemen." This quick retort elicited enthusiastic applause, and was taken up and published in many of the Kentucky and Virginia papers. When Mrs. Hoyle was awarded a medal and patent and was congratulated upon her success, she modestly said; "I owe it all to three noble New Orleans women who helped me to climb the hill; one was the god-mother of my invention, as I call her, who secured my patent and stood by me in my hour of my need. She is the widow of a bank president, and noted for her goodness to many. The other is Mrs. Nicholson, of the Picayune, who gave me the encouraging notices in her paper, which helped me, perhaps, more than anything else."—N. O. Picayune.

Rag Carpets.

I have been making a lot of rage carpet—they are all the "go" here now—and, besides, I had not the money to spare to buy as much as I wanted. One thing I resolved I would not do, and that was to color a lot of bright shades that, no matter how pretty and bright they were at first, would soon fade out to the same dingy hue; consequently my coloring was an awful job, but now I am not afraid the sun will look at my handiwork, for if he does I am sure it will stand the test without fading. Green, which is the very worst color to fade that I know of, if colored with Diamond, Perfection or Handy dyes, is first colored in copperas by dipping the rags first in a pretty strong solution of it, and then in weak lie, letting them partly dry after each bath. The result was somewhat dull-looking greenish-yellow, but when it was put in blue dye the regular indigo blue—it came out a splendid, bright and even green, and, better than all, it is warranted fadeless.

Butternut bark was well soaked in an old kettle out-of-doors in the sun for a couple of weeks, then a fire was built around it to finish the steeping process and a little copperas added to set the color; this gave a beautiful brown. Sumac bobs and bark, used in the same way, gave drab. For other colors I could trust the prepared dyes.—Florence H. in Rural New Yorker.

Things Useful.

Grape Butter.—A superior grape butter is made by taking two-thirds grapes and one-third good, sour apples. Add one pound of light sugar to every two pounds of fruit after it has been cooked and passed through the colander. Boil down like other butter, stirring constantly. Jellies and butters will keep well if only sealed with a piece of tea paper thoroughly wet on one side with the white of egg, and pressed down closely. The egg forms a cement and makes an air tight covering. Keep in a cool, dry place.

Breaded Tomatoes.—The tomatoes should be firm and cold. First get ready a kettle of hot fat roll and sift a quantity of bread crumbs, and beat two eggs. All this is necessary because the tomatoes grow soft and juicy if allowed to stand. Pare and slice them, and after seasoning well with salt and pepper, dip each slice in beaten egg and then in bread crumbs. When all the slices have been treated in this manner dip them again in the egg and crumbs, then place them in a frying basket, and plunge into boiling fat. Cook for about a minute and a half. For six people, about four large tomatoes two eggs and a cupful of crumbs will be required.

A Refreshing Drink.—Now that fresh fruits are plentiful, a delicious drink may be made by mixing two cupfuls of sugar in one of lemon juice, a pint of raspberry syrup, a small pineapple grated, two quarts of water and ice enough to make very cold. These will make three quarts of the drink. It will be found very refreshing of an evening at home, and particularly nice for garden parties or tennis gatherings in the country or lake side resorts.

A Pretty Artistic Trifle.—A very pretty table center is of yellow pongee, the decoration being a graceful group of daisies worked in blue silk, heliotrope and yellow filoselles. The petals are given with long loops of the filoselle sewed down to the ground. This is a favorite way to work flowers, because it is easy, rapid and effective. The center of the flowers are done with French knots of brown, yellow and green silks.

DOWN BY THE SUNLIT SEA.

Oh, it was merry, merry,
Down by the sunlit sea!
I heard the old shore scolding the waves,—
For they can never agree.

Said the shore, "You make me weary,
Oh waves, with your endless song;
You are singing, sighing, and laughing;
You are at it all day long."

Thus did I hear her scold them,
And she might have scolded more,
But the little white waves came running up
And kissed the brown old shore.

Then, with a sound like laughter,
They tumbled back to the sea;
And the shore took that for the kiss of peace,
For never a word said she!

Oh, it is merry, merry,
To watch them at their play!
For the brown old shore and the little white waves
Have the same game every day!

The Thanksgiving Angel.

"Please, mother, wake me up in time to feed my chickens before prayers in the morning," said George; he yawned and stretched and rubbed his eyes with his fists.

"Don't waste any time getting to sleep then," said his mother, "or you won't want to get up when I call you."

"O I won't want to get up anyhow; I never want to get up. I say, mother, couldn't I just as well feed 'em while you are having prayers, and save that much time?"

"Would you really do that, George?" The mother looked hurt.

"Well, you see," answered the little boy, hesitating, "I don't have anything new to say in my prayers every day; it is just the same old thing, and I get sort of tired saying it."

"But if God should say to himself that there was nothing new to give you to-morrow, and he was tired giving you the same things, O, my little boy, what would you do?"

George did not answer; how could he? He kissed his mother and went to bed, resolved to be up and ready for prayers in the morning. But in the morning, lo, what a strange thing had happened! There was no mother, and while George was wondering what had become of her he saw a great angel at his side.

"I am called the thanksgiving angel," said the strange visitor, "and it is my part to take away what people are not grateful for. It has been a long time since you thanked God for the blessing of a good mother."

The day seemed long and dreary without mother, and George was glad to go to bed when night came; but the next morning he found himself too weak to rise.

"Did the thanksgiving angel do this, I wonder?" he asked himself.

"Yes," said the many-toned voice, "you have never been grateful a day in your life for strong health; I have taken it from you.

No mother and no health! How could he bear it? And the next morning when he waked it was as dark as night; darker, in fact, than any midnight George had ever seen.

"O, what have you taken away now?" he cried, for he felt the awful presence near, though he could no longer see the majestic form.

"I have taken away the sunlight," answered the angel. "God has sent his glad sun to shine upon you day after day, but you have not noticed it, much less have you praised his goodness in sending it. It can no longer be yours."

At this George cried aloud, for how could he bear such things? Loneliness and pain and this great horror of darkness? But as he cried out he suddenly awoke, and found that he had been draming.

It was, in fact, early in the morning, too early to hear the dear voice that he had dreamed of never hearing again; but there was the blessed sunshine, just touching the top of Brushy Hill, and the little dreamer thought he had never seen anything so beautiful before.

He sprang out of bed, and felt how good it was to be strong and able to walk and move and work. All life seemed new and sweet now, and without waiting for the prayer bell he kneeled down by his bed and thanked God that he had not taken all these good things away from him, though he had been so ungrateful.

And never again, as long as he lives, will George feel or say that he has nothing special to thank God for while he has home and health and happiness and friends and kindred and sunshine and blue sky, or, indeed, while he remembers the dream of the thanksgiving angel.—Sabbath-school Advocate.

A Story of a Little Boy Who Stammered.

"Whatever you do, do with your might;
Things done by halves are never done right."

"I can't get it, mamma, and there's no use trying;" and Frank threw down his pencil, laid his head on his hands and sobbed aloud.

Now Frank was a brave little boy, who hardly ever cried, so his mamma said, "Why, son, what is the matter?"

"I can't get this sum and I am tired trying."

"How many times have you tried, Frank?" asked mamma.

"Oh, ten times, I guess."

"Ten, times, Frank?" said mamma.

"Well, four or five times, then: and I'm not going to try any more."

"Put your slate and pencil away, Frank, and I will tell you a story."

"A long, long time ago, Frank, there was a little boy who lived in a beautiful country by the sea, called Greece. He was not a very strong boy and of course his voice was weak, and, besides, he stammered. He heard some of the great men of his country speak and he made up his mind that when he grew to be a man he would be a great speaker too. Now in order to be a great speaker you must have a strong voice and speak distinctly; and you know his voice was not strong and he stammered.

"As I told you, he lived by the sea, and every day he would go down to the seashore and put a pebble under his tongue and recite aloud. In this way, it is said, he cured himself of stammering; but his voice was not strong enough—it could not be heard very far—so he used to go on stormy days and shout as loud as he could to try and hear his voice above the sound of the waves. Of course every day his voice became stronger and at last he could hear it above the roar of the waves. He kept on and on until in time he became one of the greatest speakers—orators, we call them—the world has ever known. He never could have been that, Frank, had he given up trying."

"What was his name, mamma?" asked Frank.

"It is a long, hard name for a little boy to pronounce, Frank. It is Demosthenes."

Frank sat very still for a few minutes, then he said, "Mamma, I will get it now."

He took his slate and worked and worked. Suddenly he shouted, "I've got it, mamma!" and brought his slate to show her.—Harper's Young People.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

We note from the catalogue of the High School of Orange Presbytery—a boarding and day school for boys—that Rev. H. C. Kegley takes the post of principal. The old "Bingham School" site and buildings are occupied by the school. We wish all success to it under its new head. The next term begins September 12th, inst.

A man by name of Secrest, was arraigned for wife murder in this State some twelve years ago and escaped on plea of insanity. He soon got into the South Carolina penitentiary for some lesser crime, but on his liberation he was at once seized and brought back to North Carolina to be tried for the original crime, it having become plain that his insanity was feigned.

DOMESTIC.

On Sunday last, and probably the day before, the prairies of Minnesota were afire. The news brought by passengers who attempted to reach Hinckley from Minneapolis is blood curdling in its horror. The train failed to reach Hinckley that town having been wiped out by the flames and endeavored to return over a burning track to Skunk Lake to save her passengers. The train took fire and the engineer was burned, it is feared fatally The train reached the lake but not until some passengers were fatally burned. Those who could waded in the mud and water of the lake up to their waists, or buried themselves in the mud to escape the scorching heat. All along the railroad track, indicating a similar state of things in the country for scores of miles around, were found bodies of persons who had perished in the flames. Hundreds of people died; others were horribly burned; and for the survivors there was neither food nor shelter. Besides Hinckley, the town Mission Creek and Pokegama were totally consumed. Very many farm habitations were burnt. A train that left St. Paul had not been heard from and it was feared was consumed with some 150 persons on board. Duluth, St. Paul and other cities sent out relief trains and brought in hundreds of people.

Judge F. R. Scott, of the U. S. District Court issued an attachment for the person of Bishop Richard Scannell, of the Roman Catholic Church, because of disobedience to an injunction of Judge Scott to prevent the removal of a priest pending a hearing by the court.

An account comes of a terrible drought in western New York. The report is that farmers mourn the loss of crops and fear further havoc by fire and starvation of stock. Counties like Chautauqua and Erie, which have diary interests of great magnitude, are the chief sufferers, but unless ainfall comes speedily and copiously, this entire end of the State will experience a financial loss which it can ill afford. The bordering province of Ontario is similarly parched.

A destructive flood is reported at and around Uvalde, Texas. This is the account: Thousands upon thousands of acres of pasture and farm land are still under water. It is estimated that the damage to crops in the valley of the Leona river will reach $500,000, while in the valleys of the Saco and Sabinet rivers the losses will be fully as much more. Many thousands of cattle, horses and sheep were swept away. About one-half of the houses of Uvalde, a town of 2,300 people, were carried away and there is much suffering there, but no more fatalities are reported there. Nothing has yet been heard from the settlement of seventy-five families several miles below Uvalde, but there are still grave fears that many, if not all of them, were swept down by the torrent. The town of Batesville was entirely inundated, and there was heavy loss of property, but no lives were reported lost. There are several other towns in the flooded district, but they are away from the railroad and telegraphic reach.

EXTRACT FROM MINUTES OF ALBEMARLE PRESBYTERY, AUG. 15th, Ult.,

Relative to its Action With Regard to The North Carolina Presbyterian.

"The [Presbyterial] Agent of the N.C. PRESBYTERIAN called attention to excellent work of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN and to its exceeding value as the Synod's organ of communication among the churches. With high appreciation of the past labors of its proprietor and its corresponding editors, the Presbytery looks forward with confidence to the enlargement of its influence and usefulness under the editorial guidance of Rev. Dr. J. M. RAWLINGS, who, upon the first of October, expects to assume this responsibility.

The Presbytery would enjoin upon all its ministers to call attention from the pulpit to this paper, and to its special relation to the Synod of North Carolina, urging upon our congregations the importance of sustaining it, in order that our people may be thoroughly informed as to all our Presbyterial and Synodical work.

KEEPING COVENANT.

Almost under the shadow of a church which was the yearly rallying place of her scattered children before the war, in a camp-meeting of several days, some of those who had shared the blessings of the services in matured years and in childhood, of which latter class was the writer, with several who had been added to the family from other States, a large company of the descendants of one of the founders gathered at the house of one of these descendants. The scenes and incidents of those meetings were recalled. The preachers and leaders in prayer and song have almost all gone to their reward. One still sings in a church daughter of the old church. There is a melody and a tone in his voice that calls up those good old days.

Recalling experiences we, younger children then, recall the way we were taught to have reverence for God's house and required to attend and be respectful to the leaders and show reverence in the services. The large company speaking for themselves and the eight generations of one of the founders, who are now scattered very widely, declared unequivically that there is no warrant in righteousness for the statement that the requiring of children to attend services gives distaste or aversion in later life. It was shown by our knowledge that requiring children to attend the services of the sanctuary formed for them habits and tastes for such services. It is false to say that right training ever made spiritual services burdensome or gave excuse for the saying of some that they were made to go to church so much when children they did not want to go when older. The proverb is true to our family, "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it." Our hostess testified of a blessing in her own life oft repeated and verified in the community of days or seasons of private or public fasting. Times of fasting and prayer in times of literal drought had been blessed with abundance of rain and in times of spiritual depression and need with seasons of refreshing from the LORD.

Four generations were present in our gathering and four more were traced back to the first known of our ancestors in that church. The lives of descendants were traced as far as known, and through much tribulation and mighty temptations in war as well as peace all had been preserved and had been known as Christians to the latest generation.

Many sons and daughters are far removed from this home centre, but every where they are faithful. Their condition, whether of poverty or wealth, success or failure, sickness or health, and their experiences, whether of gain or loss, pain or pleasure, joy or sorrow, have been varied as others, but the blessing has descended in the peace of GOD from pareuts to children.

Other churches grew out of this church and flourished and the war and poverty wasted the financial strength and depleted the membership of the parent church until services were irregular and the buildings were decaying. One mother prayed for revival of religion and renewal of services and restoration of former strength. The answer came after her death in such a way as to show the faithfulness of GOD and His reward of prayer. He does reward them that diligently seek Him.

These thoughts have arisen out of the service of family prayer, held in that dear home after we had all enjoyed the bountiful dinner so lavishly bestowed, and so well prepared. These families have enjoyed the good things of this life with thankfulness and every generation has been educated in practical home management and the preparation of food. They do not omit family prayer. Morning, noon and night, personal prayers ascend as incense, but these do not suffice. The family altar is erected and there GOD is honored and preparation is made for the day and thanks and worship ascend in the evening. A business man said recently to one of the young men of this tribe. You always can get work and good wages. That must be because of the family religion you have inherited. It was in this thought I marked the reading of the 145th Psalm by the pastor when we were assembled for family worship. The 4th verse reads, "One generation shall praise thee to another." We spoke of the verification of this in the eight generations of the ancestry we were delighted to claim. "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance." "Showing mercy unto thousands (of the generations) of them that love Him." Away with the falsehood that the children can be taken too much to church services. Quite the opposite is true and threatens many now. We need more prayer and more people praying. Give us personal prayer, family worship and strict discipline in the home and more of taking the children to church and we shall have a revival of that honest and strong manhood and lovely and noble womanhood which we sometimes feel sadly constrained to wish for. GOD is faithful. Any failure must be due to man's unfaithfulness.

HERE AND THERE.

THE HIGH SCHOOL OF ORANGE Presbytery certainly has a friend in Rev. E. C. MURRAY, whose unexcellable communication anent the School appears on our fourth page. Do not fail to read it. How applicable is the appeal for Presbyterian institutions in general and for this in particular. A friend intimates that Presbyterians do not support their own institutions like other denominations do. We do not say it, for we imagine human nature is alike in all denominations. But we do know that Presbyterians are remiss in supporting their own home institutions.

MR. MURRAY SAYS: "DO NOT WAIT for that school to succeed before you patronize it, &c." Good advice certainly. Yet how often you hear people say, virtually, "just make your enterprise a success and we'll help you to succeed." Very like this is to reaching out to save a man from drowning when he is crawling up the river bank.

PRESBYTERIANS OF NORTH CAROLINA give your support to the Presbyterian High School and to Davidson College—they are your schools, in every way worthy of your support, and your pride and your appreciation of your own interests should impel you to support them generously and liberally.

THE HIGH SCHOOL ADVERTISEMENT will be found in another place. It does not say—what is a fact—that during the thirty years that the Bingham School was carried on in the High School's present location only three deaths occurred among the pupils; nor does it tell another fact that in location and surroundings the school is unsurpased in North Carolina. We are glad to hear that the prospect is fine for a large attendance.

AT THE LATE INSTITUTE FOR ELDERS and Deacons, at Red Springs, so a friend writes us, one minister in discussing duties of elders and deacons, especially emphasized the fact, that all church members, and officers especially, should have the weekly visits of their own church paper; and he showed conclusively that one who did not take his church paper could not feel the proper interest in the work of the Church, being ignorant both of its success and of its needs.

THE FRIEND ALSO WRITES THAT IT came to his knowledge afterwards that, in number of subscribers to the paper, that minister's charge compared most favorably with many of the charges in much larger towns or cities. [Which is reliable knowledge.] He drew the very fair conclusion that the minister not only preached, but practiced in behalf of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN. [In which again he is entirely correct.]

HERE IS A NOTE WE ARE PLEASED to make: The Rev. D. McNEILL TURNER, D. D., having been restored to his former vigor, by a sojourn of nearly five years in "the land of the sky," at Davidson River, has accepted an invitation to the church at Rock Ledge, a beautiful town, on the bank of Indian River, South Florida. As there are three large hotels, besides numerous private boarding houses, in the place, there is a large population of wealthy and intelligent people, the greater part of the year, affording good congregations for the churches.

INK SPOTS.

Well says Baxter—"God is the caress of all things; the strength of the creation; the joy of angels; the felicity of the saints; the sun and shield of all the righteous; the refuge of the distressed; and the glory of the whole world." "As the fire doth mount upward, and the needle that is touched with the loadstone still turns to the North, so the converted soul is inclined unto God."

* * *

Speaking of his "Call to the Unconverted" he says: "Through God's mercy, I have information of almost whole households converted by this small book which I set so light by—six brothers were converted by reading it; and almost every week I receive letters of some converted by my books."

* * *

In his dying thoughts he writes: "And now, O my soul! Why shouldst thou draw back, as if the matter were doubtful. Is not Thy foundation firm? Is not the way of life through the valley of death made safe by Him that conquered death? Hast thou not found in the long ago the motives and effectual operations of His Spirit? If not whence thy aspirations after God, thy desires to be nearer His glory, to know Him and love Him more? Whence came all the pleasure thou hast had in His truth and ways, and service? Who made it thy choice to set at the feet of Jesus, and count the honors of the world but dross? Thy holy desires are alas! too weak; but they are holy. Thy love has been too cold; but it is the most holy God whom thou hast loved. Thy hopes have been too low; but thou hast hoped in God. Thy prayers have been too dull and interrupted; but thou hast prayed for holiness and heaven. Thy labors have been too slothful; but thou hast labored for God. Thy motives has been too slow; but it has been godward and therefore it is from God."

* * *

This passage from a letter of Mrs. Wesley to her son John when a student at Oxford, seems to me exceedingly striking—"I heartily wish you would enter upon an examination to know whether you have a reasonable hope of salvation by Jesus Christ. If you have, the satisfaction of knowing it, will abundantly reward your pains; if not you will find a more reasonable occasion for tears, than can be met with in any tragedy.

* * *

Somebody has said that what most of us want are models of the art of enjoying life thoroughly and nobly without ostentation and at a moderate cost.

* * *

Dr. Lyman Abbot some years ago published two volumes of selected sermons of Henry Ward Beecher, designed to set forth what he regarded as a fair exponent of the teaching of that well known preacher. In looking over them, the thought in them seems to me somewhat thin, certainly so, as compared with such thinking as Robertson's. Perhaps a Beecher Christian might be much built up by these sermons, a Bible Christian I think would not get much food there. Such an one would be somewhat like the old woman who having heard Stanly said "she felt kind of empty like."

* * *

We sometimes wonder how it is that certain preachers and speakers attract as they do. We forget that what disgusts people of taste and sense, may much impress people who have but little sense, and no taste at all.

* * *

Matthew Arnold says among the books which one will find in the library of the average Philistine, will be Magnall's questions and Ward Beecher's sermons.

* * *

"All men of character have some fixed and leading ideas inseparable from their individuality." One would imagine then that very few politicians have any character; they generally take their leading ideas from what the last Convention of their party laid down as its platform, and leading ideas with them generally mean what will lead to the Legislature or Congress.

* * *

When we read Carlyle every thing is seen against the dark background of eternal mystery; again and again, we pause to meditate on life, death, the "still sad music of humanity," how "our little life is rounded with a sleep" and listen to the voices saying—think, live, act before that sleep comes. How vividly Macaulay describes men and things; in what bright light they shine; but while we read "the thought never suggests itself, we too are passing away into oblivion, our little island of daylight soon shrouded in the gathering mist."

In Carlyle mystery broods like a solemn presence over all things; in Macaulay over none. Macaulay disenchants life of all that is deepest and highest. "His historical figures are groups of individuals, not symbols of forces working behind the veil."

* * *

"Men in the aggregate are not reasonable beings, but with capacity of being made reasonable occasionally, if prejudices are once blown away." Unfortunately these occasions of "being reasonable" are few and far between: and the wind that blows away their prejudices must be cyclonic in its character.

* * *

Brag, Bluster, Blatherskite, Bosh, are the four great idols that the majority worship in the great United States, where "the average man is too much of a religion, and his sayings and doing unduly exalted."

* * *

"The better class of critics never subject to torture the creations of noble minds." It was cold-hearted inquisitors that used the rack and other instruments of torture."

* * *

Mr. Howells sneers at Romance, and believes the world has now put away childish things, and devotes itself to the Realistic. Perhaps so; but for one, I prefer Scott to Howells. The world does likewise. I had rather hear the quaint talk of old Mouse Headrigg than that of Mandy Greer and keep company with the "Antiquary" than Silas Lapham, and prefer to float away into the dreary realm of years agone, and sit by kings and queens, crusaders and knights templars, than breathe the thin, thick air of New England Realism. Sixty years ago the last of Scott's novels was written, to-day two popular editions of them are being published.

* * *

How much the world owes to great sorrow; the disappointments and blighted hopes of Milton live in "Paradise Lost," and "Sampson Agonistes," Dante's Poem is his own tale of sorrows; his own weary journey through life is heard in almost every line. "His great poem it has been said "throbs with human life;" true; but it was Dante's own human life that beat in heart-pulses there.

"Bulk of mankind are careless of theories if happy. One sure evidence of an ill-conducted state is the propensity of people to resort to theories."

* * *

Emerson's lines:

"For what are they all in their high conceit
When men in the bush with God may meet."

are anticipated by Cowley. In his poem, "The Delights of a Garden," we read as follows:

"If we could open and intend our eye,
We all like Moses should espy
Even in a bush, the radiant Deity."

* * *

Horace gave us the last rose of summer before Tom Moore wrote his lovely song:

"Mitte sectari rosa quo locorum
Sera moretur.

"Nor seek thou to discover where
The bush rose lingers late."

* * *

What amount of gush and Yankee-doodle-doo would have been suppressed in prose and verse if people had remembered Burke's words: "We ought to know what people will do with their liberty before we congratulate them upon it.

THE HARVEST.

I see afar the gleam of ripening harvests
Where strong brown arms bind up the golden grain
But in life's harvest that is ever ripening
How few toil on in weariness and pain.

Beyond the azure, heaven's fair fields are gleaming
In that bright day where shadows never fall;
And yet how many hours in idle dreaming
Pass by unheeded, lost beyond recall.

The changing seasons to the past are drifting,
And souls are gathered for the Judgment day;
Between the bud and blossom snows are sifting,
And earthlife passes rapidly away.

But oh! how few the lamp of life are holding
To light the darkness of unseeing eyes;
How few point upward to that blest unfolding
That opes the pearly gates of paradise!

I see the gleaming of the harvests golden
Where sinewy hands binds up the ripened grain
But grander, sweeter, is the story olden
Of Christ, His life of sacrifice and pain.

And life's great harvest on each side is bending,
Whitening and waiting for the reaper's hand;
How few are laboring with a love unending
To garner treasures for the shining land!

Across the skies the evening shades are stealing,
The mists are gone that crowned the hills with haze,
O'er all the landscape vesper sounds are pealing,
And soon will end for aye our pilgrim days.

Oh, reaper, bending 'neath your heavy burden,
Cease not, and weary not, till Christ appear,
Tell of the Saviour's mercy and His pardon,
Remembering eternity draws near.

KNOWLEDGE OF PERSONAL SINFULNESS.

BY REV. S. O. HALL.

"Make me to know my transgression, and my sin."—Job 13:23.

FOR WHAT DOES JOB PRAY?

Not worldly wealth or power, not earthly honors or distinctions. He prays for knowledge. Knowledge with reference to what? Whom? Himself. Not knowledge as to his own greatness or goodness; but, his own sinfulness. "Make me to know my transgression and my sin."

Strange prayer! many would term it. They are unwilling to have their sinfulness revealed to them. They close their eyes to their condition. "For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved."

The writer had just asked in this verse, "How many are mine iniquities and sins?" This partial revelation makes him desire a fuller one. He immediately adds: "Make me to know my transgression and my sin."

The word "transgression" means stepping over. God has drawn boundary lines. To cross these lines is to enter forbidden territory, The idea in the word "sin" is missing the mark. The high aim had not been reached. He had come short. Doing what is forbidden, not reaching what is required. How all-inclusive these expressions!

Job does not refer to the sins of others; but to his own, those of which he himself was guilty, "My transgression and my sin."

This is a wise, comprehensive prayer. Will you make it? If you will, it is sure to be answered. And an answer to it will bring many blessings. Some may be enumerated:

REPENTANCE.

There will be genuine sorrow for sin. It will not be mere regret for sin, that sorrow of the world which worketh death. It will be godly sorrow which worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of. There will be sorrow for sin, because it is sin, and not simply because punishment is dreaded. It will be heartfelt sorrow, grief for having grieved our God.

There will be confession of sin. There will be no keeping silence then.

"I own my ways to be corrupt,
My duties stained with sin."

"My lips with shame my sins confess."

There is readiness to confess before God, before angels, before men. There is readiness to say with Job, "Behold I am vile;" with David, "I acknowledge my transgressions;" with the prodigal, "Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no worthy to be called thy son;" with the publican, "God merciful to me a sinner."

Another element of true repentance will be found, forsaking of sin. He who rightly views his sins will not desire to cloak them, cover them up, conceal them from view, but will confess and forsake them. He loathes sin, and desires to escape from it. Yes, he has every element of true repentance—he brings forth fruits, meet for repentance.

TRUST IN THE SAVIOUR.

He who has been led to see the vileness of his own heart and life will certainly distrust himself. He says: "What can I, a poor, weak, sinful, guilty, hell-deserving sinner, do toward saving myself? I need a Saviour. I am undone in myself. The wisdom, the power needed—none of this is in me. I cannot be my own Saviour. I cannot trust myself to save myself. Some one else must do it, if it is done. Can any of my fellow-men save me? No, they are all sinful, guilty too. They cannot save themselves. I'll cease from man whose breath is in his nostrils. Can any angel in heaven save me? No angel, not even Gabriel, can answer for my sins. Not one of them can give to God a ransom for my soul. My sins would sink them down to hell. All their powers belong to their Creator. All men and angels combined could not save me. I'll make no arm of flesh, no creature-help my Saviour. I need "One Mighty to Save." Thus he is forced, driven up, up, to trust in the divinely-appointed Saviour.

"No more, my God, I'll boast, no more
Of all the duties I have done;
I quit the hopes I held before,
To trust the merits of thy Son."

HUMILITY.

To realize our ignorance, how little we know, will make us humble. To realize our weakness, dependence, utter helplessness,—this will humble us. But to discover our sinfulness in the sight of God, O how this humbles us! The deepest humility comes from a thorough conviction of sin. As knowledge of personal sinfulness increases, humility increases. The best cure for pride is self-knowledge.

How can one who knows his own heart and life be puffed up with pride? See that beggar. He has a piece of bread, the very bread which he needs, palatable, wholesome, life-sustaining. It was given to him. "This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die." It is given for the life of the world. See the beggar with that coat. It is the very coat that he needs, warm, comfortable, becoming to him. Whose righteousness covers you, believer? Are not your graces all borrowed ones? "For who maketh thee to differ from another? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive? now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it?" Such truths tend to bow the haughty head. Boasting is excluded. "Be clothed with humility."

PRAYING.

He who is convinced of his personal sinfulness is sure to pray, to pray from the heart. He does not simply say his prayers, he prays. Feeling the need of forgiveness, he implores it. Mercy! Mercy! is his cry. He begs, he pleads with God for his forgiving mercy. "Lord, be merciful unto me: heal my soul; for I have sinned against thee." "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving kindness: according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions." "Hide thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities." "For thy name's sake, O LORD, pardon mine iniquity; for it is great."

He will not cease begging till he feels that his sins have been forgiven. He cares not for food, for sleep, for the society of others. His sins trouble him. Till they are forgiven, peace is a stranger to him. "Make me to hear joy and gladness; that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice." He says: "I see what justice threatens, I would know what mercy offers. I have heard the thunderings of the broken law, I would hear the sweet tones of the gospel. I have seen Sinai, I would behold Calvary. Thy frowns, O God, how dreadful! Let me enjoy thy smiles. I have seen myself, let me behold thyself, a reconciled Father.

'Great God, Thy nature hath no bound,
So let Thy pardoning love be found.'"

Reclamations.

Those who read the accounts of evangelistic meetings held throughout the country will be struck with the phrase frequently used, that so many have united with the Church on profession of faith and so many more "by reclamation." The idea seems to be that some persons who have once been members by profession but who have become cold and inconsistent in life, have been reclaimed and brought back again by the efforts of the evangelist. This appears to be a novel and decidedly un-Presbyterian way of taking care of Church members. It may be that in certain new places, strangers have come in who were once professing Christians, and who having lived out of reach of their Church have become worldly or sinful. They may desire to renew their vows to Christ, and having no certificate of membership, and being unable to procure one conscientiously, are compelled to come into the communion of the Church by "reclamation." But these cases would appear to be few in number. They can hardly be numerous enough to account for the frequent recurrence of the reception of such members, and the mention of them as part of the results of a revival.

There must be an error somewhere in the view of the relation of members to the Church. Either they are received too hastily into communion, or their training is neglected and they are suffered to lose interest in the things of Christ. We Presbyterians believe that where a soul is truly regenerate, it has received the gift of a new life which cannot be destroyed by sin. There may be temporary backslidings, or protracted conflicts, with doubt, but the promise of the Saviour stand sure, "They shall never perish neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." In a time of revival, the pressure brought to bear on the young is very great and exciting. We have seen boys and girls in much distress, sobbing and kneeling, asking for the prayers of the Church; yet quiet conversation with them the next day has failed to elicit any clear conviction, or any sign of renewal of life. Suppose these young disciples are urged to come forward at once and make profession of faith? Suppose that older but equally excitable souls are hurried into the Church by this forcing process, is it strange that the emotion subsides, and the excitement is mistaken for the essence of religion?

Again, a member of the Church should be impressed at the very outset with the fact that this is the beginning not of a new relation simply, but of a new life. It is not the transplanting of a tree, but the ingrafting upon a new stock altogether. The believer who comes into the full communion of the Church, becomes now a member of Christ's living Body, and receives from him the life which flows from the Head to every member. To contemplate this as a relation which may be at one time kept up, at another discontinued, and then again renewed is to have altogether erroneous conception, as our Church holds and teaches, of the Christian life. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Better to pause on the threshold and have the solemn meaning of the new life impressed carefully, than rush hastily in, and become afterwards harder more careless because of the fancied "conversion" attendant on the excitement of a passing hour. There is of course, danger in neglecting a real visitation of the Holy Spirit. There is danger in putting away an impulse to take the decisive step of confessing Christ. But there is equal danger of filling the rolls of the Church with names which represent no efficient Christian lives, but so much dead material to be worked over again, or else suffered to be a drag on the efficiency of the whole body.

We heard the venerable Dr. Lovick Pierce, of Georgia, a man of eminent piety and abounding labor in the Methodist Church, preach when in his ninetieth year. He spoke against the practice of receiving members "on probation," and said with great earnestness, "The older I grow, and the more experience of the grace of God I have, the more I believe that if a man has the root of the matter in him, he'll stick, he'll, stick!" To which every good Presbyterian will say Amen!—Southern Presbyterian.

Serving Christ From Principle.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

A bright but modest boy in my Sunday-school twenty-five years ago spent his pocket money in buying pigments and brushes. He contributed four or five pictures which were among the gems of the American department in the Chicago Exposition. Love of art, and not love of money has been his inspiration; he painted conscientiously. "I had hoped," said a young man to D' Alembert, "that my paper would have given me a seat in the Royal Academy." "Sir," replied the great philosopher, "if you have no higher motive than that, you will never get a seat there; science must be her own exceeding great reward."

The sinner who comes to Christ with no other motive than to be saved from hell is not likely to be saved at all: his prayer is founded on sheer selfishness. The man who keeps Christ's commandments simply for selfish objects does not really keep them; for the essence and flavor of all Christian conduct lies in loyty to Jesus Christ, and in doing right because he commands it. "Not with eye service as men-pleasers, but as the servants of Christ doing the will of God from the heart;" that is the rule and the test of genuine Christian character. Spiritual adoption does not put servants into the kitchen, but children into the household who work willingly. Whatever they do, they do as unto the Lord heartily; i. e., because they love to do it. Dr. McLaren says in his characteristic way: "The thought of Christ's command and of my poor toil as done for his sake will change constraint into cheerfulness, and make unwelcome tasks pleasant, and monotonous ones fresh, and trivial ones great. In that atmosphere the dim flame of obedience will burn more brightly. as a lamp plunged into a jar of pure oxygen. Unselfish love of Christ is the only true consecration."

When our Master was on earth he encountered and he had to rebuke the spirit which followed him only for the sake of the loaves and fishes. Among his own band of disciples the wretched spirit broke out in requests for a "seat on his right hand" in his new empire which he was expected to establish. There were pitiful wrangles among them as to who should be the greatest. Christ rebuked this miserable selfishness by giving them to understand that whosoever served in the humblest way should stand the highest. It was from this lamentable lack of principle in their religion that the disciples turned cowards in the hour of danger, and all forsook bim and fled. Nor would these men have ever "stood fire" under the tremendous assaults of persecution afterwards if they had not received the wonderful baptism of Christ's spirit on the day of Pentecost. Peter's gravel then turned into granite.

Ministers and Sunday-school teachers make a great mistake when they urge their hearers or their scholars to become Christians for either the rewards of heaven or the escape from hell. We have no right to appeal to a purely selfish motive. Christ must be followed for his own sake, and righteousness must be chosen for its own sake. There is no virtue in avoiding sin merely because it brings a sting in this world and hell in the next world. Iniquity must be abhored because God abhors it. Some people avoid certain sins as a house-cat avoids the cupboard for fear of the cudgel of the cook. Christianity is the dread of sin, not the dread of sin's punishment. No Christian can be trusted under strong temptation unless his inmost soul abhors frand or falsehood, or wanton uncleanness, or crooked practices of every sort. If David had been looking at God, he would not have stopped to look at Bathsheba; if he had abhorred the sin of lechery, he would not have to abhor himself so bitterly afterwards. The occasional shocking fall of a conspicuous church-member undoes the good effects of a score of good sermons, because it looks to the careless eyes of the world as if Christianity had proved to be a worthless delusion. Whereas the real delusion was with the man himself, he cheated himself before he ever cheated the bank or the railway company or the widow who entrusted her property to his keeping. All such defaulters imagine themselves to be temptation-proof until the pressure is put on them; then it turns out that they love gold more than they love godliness. In the West Indies there is an insect that will eat out the heart of an apparently sound piece of timber; when a heavy strain is put on the timber it snaps, and fills the eyes with a cloud of white dust. Under how many a pious exterior may a worm-eaten conscience lurks! Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall.

To resist the pressure of sinful temptation and to practice righteousness requires inward principle, and that to a Christian means the indwelling strength of the Lord Jesus Christ. "Renew a right spirit within me!" is a prayer for every day. The original word signifies a firm, constant spirit that never wavers under wind or storm. Faith is likened to an anchor because it has a holding power; and that comes from the hold which Jesus Christ has on the person who exercises it. "I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me."

The surest preventive of sin is the practice of godliness. When we are busy in serving Christ we have no time to serve the devil. The young Christian who enjoys his prayer-meeting or his Society of Christian Endeavor has no drawing towards the lewd play, or the drinking-club, or the ball-room, or the gambling-table. He or she who walks in the Spirit is not likely to fulfil the lusts of the flesh. Jesus Christ offers himself to every one who repents of sin and accepts him. "Lo, I am with you always!" That is what we mean by Christian principle; it means the abiding presence of the Lord Jesus in the core of the heart, and that presence is an abiding power. Good impulses are abundant, and are often worthless. They will never hold you or me against a strong temptation unless we have the staying power of the indwelling Christ—N. Y. Evangelist.

Take a Stand.

You will not be able to go through life without being discovered; a lighted candle cannot be hid. There is a feeling among some good people that it is so wise to be reticent and hide their light under a bushel. They intend to lie low all the war time, and come out when the palms are being distributed. They hope to travel to heaven by the back lanes, and skulk into glory in disguise * * * Rest assured, my fellow Christians that in the most quiet lives there will come a moment for open decision. Days will come when we must speak out, or prove traitors to our Lord and his truth * * * You cannot long hold fire in the hollow of your hand, or keep a candle under the bed. Godliness, like murder, will out. You will not always be able to travel to heaven incog.—Spurgeon.

THE TWO SEAS.

"When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee."

Each night we are launched on a sea of sleep,
No doubts disturb us, no fears annoy;
Though we plough the waves of the darkened deep,
We know we are safe in the Master's keep,
And the morning brings us joy.

What dread, then, should daunt us, what doubt distress,
When on earth's dark sea we are launched alone?
In that deeper sleep should we trust him, less?
Shall we limit to earth his power to bless?
Will the Father forsake his own?

He made us His children; he bears us to bed;
And whether our sleep be the first or last,
What matters it where our souls are led,
If our trust in the God of the living and dead
Should only hold us fast?

A Divine Message.

One Sabbath evening this summer a very much perplexed and discouraged woman went her way to church. She had been in two minds about going, for the evening was warm and the couch in her chamber looked very inviting, while the unusual quiet of the house and the peace of the hour offered a welcome balm to her wearied nerves. Besides this, she had already attended church once that day and it was an open question whether, in view of a full and anxious week, to begin as soon as Monday should swing wide its portals, it was not her duty rather to stay at home than to go out, even to the sanctuary. However, her conclusion at last was that the vesper service could not be neglected and that her vacant place, should she yield to the solicitations of ease, or even of needed rest, would haunt her through the coming seven days, so, as I said, she went to church.

As always, there was a portion waiting for the hungry child at the Father's table, and it was kneaded of the finest of the wheat. The opening prayers and the responsive reading seemed meant for her, as indeed they were, so simple, so direct, so personal and so uplifting were the tenor of Scripture selections and of earnest petition. And then came the divine message, on the wings of a tender hymn, sung by a girl's silvery voice:

In heavenly love abiding,
No change my heart shall fear;
And safe is such confiding,
For nothing changes here.
The storm may roar without me,
My heart may low be laid,
But God is round about me,
How can I be dismayed?

You have seen a flower, parched and spent for the need of rain, drooping and fading and shorn of its beauty, and then before your eyes the shower has fallen, drenching its roots, filling its cup, washing its petals, and it has taken in, and put on, new life—"The garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." Even while the sweet notes vibrated through the upper room where God's people were assembled, the Master with them, as surely as with the few who loved him and to whom he appeared of old in Galilee, a great tranquility, a heavenly peace and refreshment came to the soul of the disheartened worshiper. A gladness of spirit, a resolution to overcome, a new strength were bestowed on her as the bird-like voice sang on. Then other voices, young and strong, tenor, contralto, bass, joined in the harmony, and the organ chords swelled in a grand accompaniment:

Wherever He may guide me,
No want shall turn me back;
My Shepherd is beside me,
And nothing can I lack;
His wisdom ever waketh;
His sight is never dim;
He knows the way he taketh,
And I will walk with him.

The divine message intended for her reached her in the Lord's house and she was enabled to go forward with renewed energy. But not alone to the hymn, sung by the trained quartet as part of their work for the day, was this message confined. Part of it was in the pastor's prayer that forgot no one, that included every home and heart in the congregation; part of it was in the rarely eloquent sermon, emphasizing practical duty and calling for fidelity in "that which is least." Part of it, and no small part, came through the thought of the pastor himself, speaking as earnestly and with as thorough and conscientious preparation to the smaller evening as to the larger morning audience. Part of it, no doubt, was due to that sort of "Christian Endeavor" which, applied to the individual case, had brought this particular woman to her own pew that summer night.

There is a tendency to ignore or omit or set small store by the evening service on the Lord's day. So long as we have a second service would it not be to our profit, perhaps to our great comfort and joy, to attend it faithfully? Only individual fidelity can remove the reproach that attaches to a thin evening congregation. Crowds are composed of units.—Margaret E. Sangster, in the Congregationalist.

An Old Foe in New Times.

History is ever reproducing itself. Issues old and familiar in the past are continually coming up as issues new and untried for the present. Romanism in its relations to the body-politic is one of these old-new questions for this country. We refer to it now not as a form of church, or a mode of individual religious life, but in its relation to the State. European history is replete with it. Let Germany, England, Huguenot France, and North Ireland tell their tales. This country seems destined to have its experience with the same question. Even now it is assuming a very grave and serious aspect. Issues of a civil, social and political character, novel and without precedent in our life as a nation, are being thrust upon us. Let one but study the present situation in the municipal governments of our large cities, or the Indian educational question in the west, or the public school question both east and west, and north and south likewise. Let him give attention to the Cohensly movement devised by sectarian zeal in Europe as a church policy for America, boldly taken up by a large party of that church here, a movement which led Mgr. Schroeder in his advocacy of it to say it will be seen that the Pope is also the Pope of America, and which led a convention of German Catholics in Dubuque some two years ago to proclaim a "boycott" against the re-election of a United States senator because of patriotic sentiments spoken in criticism of the movement. The propagation of religion with the Romish hierarchy means political supremacy; or political supremacy is in order to what they would call religious supremacy. It is no secret that this land is a prize which they have set themselves to capture, and for which they are straining every nerve. A generation ago Father Hecker so announced in his lectures throughout the country, and this was only an echo of what had been already proclaimed in one of their papers across the sea, "The Roman court expects to be able to control the American Republic," and "we can afford to let the rags of Italy go into the hands of Garibaldi, when we are taking possession of the United States." To this, and as showing their means to that end, the remark is credited to their leading review in this this country, The Catholic World, that "as citizens, electors and public officers we should always and under all circumstances act simply as Roman Catholics."—Mid-Continent.

Truth in Love.

Paul writes to the Ephesians, "speaking the truth in love" (chap. iv. 15). A more literal translation would be truthing in love. The reference is not to what we say merely, but also to what we do. Alford says: "It is the whole being, and not the tongue alone, that is treated of." Cudworth says: "Let us follow truth in love, and of the two, indeed, be contented rather to miss a speculative truth than to part with love. When we would convince men of any error by the strength of truth, let us withal pour the sweet balm of love upon their heads. Truth and love are two of the most powerful things in the world, and when they both go together they cannot easily be withstood."

The persecutors in olden times used to say: "We have the truth, and therefore we anathematize and slay all who refuse to accept it. A heretic must turn or burn." And there are men in our day who claim that if they tell the truth, it matters not what their motive is. Error is to be met with argument, but also with charity. And the truth is not to be told simply because it is true, but only when good will result from telling it. The observance of these two Christian principles would put an end to ecclesiastical denunciation on the one hand, and to social scandal on the other. How important, then, that we try to act upon them ourselves and to commend them to others.

Paul exhorts the Colossians to put on charity (love), "which is the bond of perfectness;" i. e., the girdle which holds together in harmony all the other Christian graces. But in writing to the Ephesians, he tells them to stand "having their loins girt about with truth" (Eph. vi. 14).

An Oriental traveler girded together his loose flowing robes when preparing for a journey; so did a laborer when he began to work; so did a soldier when summoned to battle. The Christian is a pilgrim, a workman, a warrior. He must be ready at all times for active service. But his girdle must be a union of truth and love. They must be braided together. Neither alone is sufficient to enable him to press toward the mark for the prize of his high calling, to work out his salvation, to fight the good fight of faith and lay hold of eternal life.

In the preface to his gospel John says that the incarnate Word was "full of grace and truth" (John i. 14) and in the seventeenth verse he adds: "Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." Grace is love in its revelation to the guilty. It is that love which flows out in the gospel from the exhaustless fountain at the throne. But it is inseparably united with truth, for God is the God of truth. Hence, if we would be Christlike, nay, Godlike, we must blend in our thoughts, our characters and our lives truth with love and love with truth.—Herald and Presbyter.

Cast All Burdens on Him.

Do not trouble yourself unduly; for if you do so you cannot remove sickness thereby, but you may even increase it. If I could do any good by worrying, I would worry away to heart's content, but as it is useless I find it best to let it alone. They tell me if a man were to fall into the sea, he would float if he would remain quiet, but because he struggles he sinks. I am sure it is so when we are afflicted. Fretfulness results in weakening us, in hiding from us wise methods of relief, and, in general, in doubling our pains. It is folly to kick against the pricks; it is wisdom to kiss the rod. Trust more and fear less. If you have trusted your soul with Christ can you not trust him with your sick child or your sick husband, with your wealth, with your business, with your life? "O," says one, "I hardly like to do that. It is almost presumption to take our minor cares to the great Lord." But in so doing you will prove the truthfulness of your faith. I heard of a man who was walking along the high road with a pack on his back; he was growing weary, and was therefore glad when a gentleman came along in a chaise and asked him to take a seat with him. The gentleman noticed that he kept his pack strapped to his shoulders, and so he said, "Why do you not put your pack down?" "Why, sir," said the traveler, "I did not venture to intrude. It was very kind of you to take me up, and I could not expect you to carry my pack as well." "Why," said the friend, "do you not see that whether your pack is on your back or off your back I have to carry it?" It is so with your trouble; whether you care or do not care, it is the Lord who must care for you. First trust your Lord with your soul, and then trust him with everything else. First surrender yourself to his love, to be saved by his infinite compassion, and then bring all your burdens and cares and troubles, and lay them down at his dear feet, and go live a happy, joyful life, saying as I will say, and close:

"All that remains for me
Is but to live and sing,
And wait until the angels come
To bear me to my King."

Toleration and Indifference.

True toleration is a very different thing from indifference. There is a danger that people should be quite tolerant of the differences in particular forms of religious belief, because as a matter of fact they are utterly intolerant of religion as a principle of life and ethics. The unbeliever cannot be called a tolerant man. He has no church in which he believes, and all churches are to him intolerable, as institutions of truth and righteousness. He excludes Christianity from his life, and, if possible, from his home, because he disbelieves in all religious institutions. He cannot persecute by law, but he often concentrates the spirit of rabid intolerance in a sneer or a jest. His very indifference may be but a disguised form of intolerance. Now, the essence of all real toleration is sympathy. The tolerant Christian does not abate one jot his steadfastness and constancy in adhering to his own faith; but he feels that another man, living in the light of another phase of truth, is not to be hated or mocked. Perhaps he is not always to be argued with; but a sincere wish for his enlightenment is perfectly consistent with toleration towards his error. This attitude of considerateness is in fact one of the most persausive instruments of conciliating those who are not believers. It is consistent with the most intense zeal and the most eager enthusiasm, but these two qualities are tempered and directed by love, and the combination thus formed is the virtue of Christian toleration.—The Churchman.

That Terrible Tongue.

In many a congregation the good done by the preacher is fully neutralized by the mischief that a few ever-wagging tongues accomplish. Why will they do it? Chiefly, perhaps, from lack of thought. A little thing apparently. But to it are due what heart-burnings and heart-breakings, friendships destroyed, whole communities embroiled! "Speak not evil one of another, brethren," is a text that should be framed in very large letters on the wall of every church. To say anything that will be likely to work to the harm of another, or prejudice his fellow against him, or create a bad impression concerning him, when there is no absolute need and duty of so speaking, is a sin. It should thus be treated. Far better be silent than be a retailer of idle stories and unkind remarks. Indeed, if the right eye is to be plucked out and the right hand cut off because of their causing to stumble, with even greater fitness might this severe sentence issue against the terrible tongue which slays its millions. But if all tongues were plucked out which have grievously offended, society would come to a standstill.—Zion's Herald.

"Rain From Heaven."

A little girl, when water was scarce, saved as much rainwater as she could. She sold it to the washerwomen for a cent a bucket, and in this way cleared nearly five dollars for the Missionary Society. When she brought it to the secretary she was not willing to tell her name. "But I must put down where the money came from," said he. "Call it, then," replied the little girl, "rain from heaven."

The entire community was stirred. There were sixteen confessions, twelve of whom united with the Mt. Williams church.

Philadelphia Church :—Rev. J. J. Harrell, pastor, had protracted meeting including first Sunday in September. Six days, two services each, well attended. Several additions to membership and six children baptized, one a grandson of the late Rev. Wm. McDonald who was pastor twenty-five years. The old elders who received and supported his ministry have gone, but other godly men hold up Bro. Harrell's hands and are glad to welcome to full communion many young people for whom prayers have been made The venerable John Bain, who built and varnished their brick academy is shut in and was not able to attend the meeting, but enjoyed a visit from his pastor and an old friend. It was so encouraging to hear the Academy bell every day, see the young people crowding in to the halls with school books. God bless the new generations whose fathers lie in the graves around the old meeting house.

Jackson Springs Church :—The people for miles around Jackson Springs have long been noted for their church-going proclivities, so that, with suitable announcement, any preacher might be assured of an attentive and appreciative audience. Such a congregation greeted Rev. J. M. Clark, of Bolivar, Tenn., Thursday afternoon, Aug. 30th, as he opened a series of meetings, to which he had been invited to assist Rev. Mr. Fox. The place, both by the testimony of Scripture and common consent, was a difficult one to fill, for this was the home of his childhood and youth. Thus the prophet was brought to his own country, to speak to large audiences including early playmates, acquaintances and relatives. But Bro. Clark was cordially greeted, and listened to attentively, and as a visible result of the four and one-half day's meeting, nineteen were added to the church, with six others who will probably connect themselves at an early date. Rev. Mr. Clark preached at all the services excepting two. These were conducted by Rev. A. K. Pool, of Union Seminary, whose preaching was "in demonstration of the Spirit and in power." His subjects and presentation were such that the opening impressions of the meeting were maintained to the close. I speak of opening impressions, advisedly, for the earnestness and clear and practical development of the themes of Mr. Clark's discourses, under the Spirit, led sincere inquirers to present themselves at an early stage of the meeting. As we listened to Bro. Clark, both in the pulpit and also among those who needed guidance, we were assured that he possessed in an eminent degree the qualifications of a successful evangelist. Lifting up our eyes to the field of Fayetteville Presbytery, we see it "white already to harvest" and we are impressed with the idea that if this brother could go up and down everywhere, as he did at Jackson Springs, he would, with sickle keen, gather rich sheaves, where, otherwise, much may be lost. Rev. D. Munroe :—Offered his resignation as pastor of the Newton church. At a congregational meeting held last night he requested that the church unite with him in asking the Presbytery of Concord to dissolve its relation. The congregation by a vote of more than three to one refused to unite with the pastor in his request. He will, however, urge that Presbytery grant his request and dissolve the relation.

Candidate W. K. Forsyth :—Has been active in his labors at Yanceyville and Bethesda in Caswell county during his summer vacation, and his work seems to have been greatly blessed. He closed his work at Bethesda August 31st with eight additions to the church.

Rockfish, in Fayetteville Presbytery :—Rev. P. R. Law preached every night for a week at Buie's school-house, near Rockfish church to large and interested congregations and thirteen professed faith in Christ. The following Sabbath ten members were added to the church on profession of faith and three of them were baptized. One was added on certificate making eleven in all.

Ellerbe Springs Church, Fayetteville Presbytery:—We have just closed a glorious meeting at Ellerbe Springs church in Richmond county, N. C. Bro. Black, Synodical evangelist, did the preaching with great power. There were thirty-seven professions and twenty-six additions to the church. Best of all, Christians reconsecrated themselves and promised to attend Sunday-school and hold family worship. Notwithstanding the busy season of the year, the crowds increased day by day to hear the earnest words of the preacher. Many are the hearty "God-speeds" that follow Bro. Black from these good people.

VIRGINIA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Hampden Sidney :—The theological seminary will open on Wednesday, the 5th inst., at 4 o'clock p. m., with an address to the students by Rev. T. R. English, D. D., professor of the English Bible. Contrary to the prophecy of some, the session will probably be full. A large junior class is expected and a number of students are already on the ground.

The 119th session of the college will begin Thursday, the 13th inst., with an address by Rev. R. H. Fleming, D. D., of Lynchburg. The members of the faculty will all be in place for vigorous work and it is hoped that the number of students will be as large as last session. A very important addition has been made to the library during the summer through the munificence of Mr. Joseph McMurran, of Shepherdstown, W. Va., a graduate in the class of 1852, of seventy-two handsomely bound volumes, containing complete sets of the college catalogue, the H. S. Magazine and other valuable magazines and reviews. Things about the college building have been put into complete repair, dormitories whitewashed and cleansed, and everything made ready for the comfort of the next session.

Mrs Hall, of Sherman, Texas, takes charge of the college boarding house and comes highly recommended. Rev. Dr. C. M. Shepperson and family have also become residents of the Hill, and Dr. H. P. Lacy is expected to take up his abode here in a few days. Altogether the outlook for both institutions and the community is encouraging, and in the words of the venerable Rev. Robert Burwell, D. D., of Raleigh, N. C., the oldest living alumnus of both the college and seminary, and a fit representative of each, their friends may say, "The two move side by side—two noble planets—each moving in its own orbit, separate but concentric, each doing its appropriate work. Long may these two institutions move on in harmony, and may no erratic comet come to disturb this harmony or dim their light.

A correspondent writes under date Sept. 8th: The seminary has opened with a very large junior class thirty or more at present Nearly all the middle class have returned—prospects promising for a prosperous year.

THE COLLEGE FOR WOMEN AT COLUMBIA.

The College for Women at Columbia, S. C., under the presidency of Rev. W. R. Atkinson, founded by the Presbyterians of the State, will open its fall session on Wednesday, September the 19th. The music department has three professors of music, specialists respectively in piano, organ and violin instruction; the first two having spent several years in Europe under the best masters. The instructress in vocal culture is a pupil of Wm. Shakespear, of London, of most successful experience of eight or ten years teaching in Southern schools. The Art Teacher has spent several years in Europe in addition to receiving the best advantages North.

The whole corps of teachers has been selected with special reference to their experience and success in teaching, and their moral and religious influence over the pupils.

The daughters of ministers of the gospel resident in the city, or who board in the College, are not charged for tuition in the full collegiate course. But non-residents boarding in the city are charged day-school prices. It is best for all boarders to send a postal to the President announcing their return or entrance.

THE HIGH SCHOOL OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

It is with great pleasure that the writer notes that this school is about to open for its third session. And now, North Carolina Presbyterians, a word to you about your own school—your only Presbyterial high school. That new institution has had a hard struggle for very existence, has had to contend with difficulties well-nigh insuperable. But in spite of all it has lived, has grown, has almost prospered, has made a good name for itself all over the State, and even beyond. And now, with anything like proper support, it will soon be an institution to which every North Carolina Presbyterian may point with pride. But it needs both patronage and endowment, and it will be a shame upon those who ought to support it, if it should suffer for want of either. Do not wait for that school to succeed before you patronize and endow it, but by your gifts and patronage make it an assured success now.

Every friend of Davidson College should watch with keen interest the career of that school, for upon its success depends largely the organization of other Presbyterial high schools, and upon the organization and maintenance of the latter depends largely the future of Davidson College. The writer of this is in a position to realize that one great (I could almost say supreme) need of our church colleges just now is church high schools to serve as preparatory schools and feeders for the higher institutions. The college not surrounded by its own proper preparatory schools is like a factory located in a region producing none of the necessary raw material. It is the boys as well as the faculty and equipment that make the college.

Again, it is to just such schools as that at Mebane that we must look for our supply of efficient church workers and ministers. In Mebane the boys are under the best of moral influences in school and church and town. Not only are the teachers Christian men who realize their pastoral relatien to the boys, but the gentleman who presides over the boarding department is a devout Presbyterian elder, who commands the respect and wins the affection of every student.

If any one, then, wishes to support a most worthy church enterprise, or if any parent wishes to place his son where his whole mental and spiritual nature will be properly cultivated, I commend the High School of Orange Presbytery at Mebane.

E. C. Murray.

ADVANCE OF THE PAPACY.

The following sent out from the "Protestant Associated Press" at Washington City conveys information which we all ought to have and to which we ought to give due consideration :

When Dr. Sunderland declared from his pulpit in the First Presbyterian church of this city that we, as Americans, could not afford to have the functions of our government paralyzed by the decrees of a foreign and usurping potentate, and that the Roman Papacy, whatever might be the professions of its more liberal adherents, was an organization palpably irreconcilable with the spirit of our institutions—when he denounced the Jesuits as an order of men harbored among us, who had been at one time or another expelled from every country under heaven but our own—he planted good seed in good ground, and the Protestant people of the Capital began to reflect and to investigate. The result has been the organization of a bureau of correspondence here for the purpose of furnishing to all Protestant newspapers in the country reliable and timely information concerning the status and movements of the Papists at this center of political activities.

If the battle with the Papacy is yet to come, and if it may be even now at our doors, as Dr. Sunderland and thousands of other well-informed and conservative men believe, it is time to pause and consider the strength and strategic position of that institution as compared with our own, and in doing so we shall find that it has gained possession of nearly, if not quite, all the strongholds which command the public mind except the Protestant pulpit and the free school.

In and around this Capital, we find numerous Popish seats of learning, with hordes of instructors, mainly skillful Jesuits, and thousands of students, all being trained for the higher walks of life and for the priesthood.

Georgetown College, established in 1778, had last year 106 instrctors and 650 students; Gonzaga College, established in 1821, had 11 instructors and 141 students; St. John College, established in 1865, had 13 instructors and 160 students; the Catholic University of America, established in 1889, had 13 instructors and 30 students. The last named is the national university of the Papal church, and is confined strictly to post-graduate work. All these are within the District of Columbia. The total number of instructors they employ is 142; the total number of students last year was 981.

At Baltimore are St. Mary's Seminary, established in 1791, and having last year 11 instructors and 245 students; and Loyola College, established in 1852, which had last year 11 instructors and 219 students.

At Emmettsburg, Maryland, is Mt. Saint Mary's College, established in 1808, and having last year 30 instructors and 198 students.

Besides these collegiate establishments, there are numbers of others such as Carroll Institute, St. Rose's Industrial School, the Academy of the Visitation, the Convent of Notre Dame, St. Dominick's Convent and St. Vincent's School, all within the District of Columbia. The numerous parochial schools, moreover, lend increased strength to these higher institutions, while to meet all this mighty educational force the Protestants have practically nothing but the common schools of the District.

As to the churches, the Papists are equally fortunate, having sixteen magnificent church edifices, the finest structures in the city, except the government buildings. They are the church of the Immaculate Conception; Holy Name of Jesus; Holy Trinity; St Aloysius; St. Cyprian; St. Ann's; St. Dominick's; St. Joseph's; St. Mary's; St. Matthew's; St. Patrick's; St. Paul's; St. Peter's; St. Stephen's; St. Teresa and St. Augustine (negro catholic church).

Among other institutions owned by them and conducted, of course, in their interest, are Providence Hospital, the establishment of the Little Sisters of the Poor, the House of the Good Shepherd, St. Ann's Infant Asylum, St. Joseph's Asylum and the Industrial Home School.

Taking the whole arch diocese of Baltimore which includes the District of Columbia and those counties of Maryland lying west of Chesapeake Bay, we find a Romish population of 235,000, with 150 churches. 47 chapels, 60 stations, 22 orphan asylum, 90 parochial schools, 6 hospitals, 4 ecclesiastical seminaries, 8 colleges, 19 acadamies for young ladies, 2 foundling asylums, 2 asylums for colored children (see Sadler's Catholic Directory for 1894, page 73). Here is perhaps the best organized, the wealthiest, and the most dangerous missionary force in the whole world. This diocese of Baltimore is the head center of the Jesuitical power on this continent, and not only the Jesuits, but the Marists and Redemptorists, scarcely less fanactical monastic orders, are also represented here in great force.

Now, if a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump, is it any wonder that all this mass of Romanism has made the Papacy stronger here than in Rome itself? Is it any wonder that the Romanists have been able to accumulate $13,600,000 worth of property in the District of Columbia, mainly through the channel of Congressional appropriations? Is it any wonder that the Indian appropriation bill, the Sundry Civil bill, and the District appropriation bill, have all become scandalous vehicles for conveying public money to sectarian uses?

In this matter, the only remedy suggested by Congress, a remedy which the Papists will hardly allow to be applied, is a national university. The select committee of the Senate having that project in charge spoke of it in a recent report as follows:

"Among its members there would always be moral heroes superior to the menaces of power as the insidious arts of the most skillful and corrupt devotee of false gods—men able to unmask error and bold to stand for the right at all hazards. The sacredness of truth, freedom of thought, and freedom of speech, will be the inscription upon its portals. It will be not a light-house only, but a bulwark of liberty and a watchtower for the nations of the world.

"The proposed university is also a patriotic necessity.

It is painful to realize that such a scheme as this, so pregnant with great and good results is a mere mirage. But the Jesuitical cabal which holds the balance of power at the Capitol, will as surely throttle it in all the future as it has done in the past. The only hope of successful opposition to the Jesuits lies in their expulsion from the country, and this can be effected only by sending men to Congress who do not place allegiance to party above conscience and religious principles. It needs no university to effect this. It needs only an honest, manly performance of the duties imposed by citizenship in a Protestant republic.

In order that the influence of the Papacy over legislation may be better understood, a document has been compiled from the Congressional Record containing the speeches of Representative Linton and extracts from the speeches of Senators Gallinger, Daniel, Quay and Call on the Indian appropriation bill, which will be furnished to those interested at the price of $2.50 per thousand copies, $1.50 for 500 copies, or 50 cents for 100 copies. This matter is enclosed in envelopes, and franked, so as to be available for distribution without postage. Orders should be directed to Rev. Green Clay Smith, box 338 Washington, D. C.

A CARD.

To the Churches of Mecklenburg Presbytery Receiving Aid for Pastoral Support.

Dear Brethren :—You will remember this order of Presbytery: That in order to receive aid from the Presbytery, each church must certify through its elder, that a congregational meeting has been called to consider the amount asked for and after full consideration the congregation decided that they had done all that seemed reasonable, and since they have paid the full amount promised their pastor, they request —— dollars to be given them from the Presbytery for the next year. And from this action you will see that four things are required :

(1.) Congregational meeting to decide on the amount asked for.

(2.) A congregational meeting to decide on the amount promised the pastor.

(3.) A written statement of these facts to the Presbytery.

(4.) Payment of all dues promised the pastor.

The object of this action is, that churches receiving aid, may soon become self sustaining, so that the Presbytery can extend its aid to other weak fields. It is the earnest desire of the Home Mission Committee, that all of our churches will comply with this request.

ANOTHER STATEMENT.

On the 1st of October, the quarterages of our laborers will be due, and at the meeting of the committee, on the 4th inst., our Treasurer informed us that we would need $440, to meet these demands, and that we did not have a dollar on hand. We hope that this amount will come in during the month of September. The acting chairman was directed to make this statement, and to urge on all of our churches to see that they meet their apportionments, for this cause. If something is not done the Committee of Home Missions will be constrained to report a debt at the approaching meeting of Presbytery in Monroe. To do this in a county where the Lord has blessed our work above all other counties, strikes us as a calamity.

If the churches in arrears will only meet their apportionments, we will meet all of our demands. We hope to receive some aid for this cause in this month from our Ladies' and Gentlemens' Societies. From what we know of the labors of our brethren in this work, unless we are very much deceived Presbytery at its next meeting will hear some encouraging reports. Brethren the Lord has blessed us, in basket and storehouse and let us see that we honor Him with our substance.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

REV. PEYTON H. HOGE, D. D., Editor.

☞All communications for this department should be addressed directly to Dr. HOGE, and not to the office of the PRESBYTERIAN.

Third Quarter.—Lesson XIII.

Sept. 23 or 30.—Review.

Golden Text. The kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye and believe the gospel.—Mark i. 15.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

There are fourteen Sundays in this quarter, allowing for twelve lessons beside the Temperance Lesson and Review. The Temperance Lesson lies outside the scope of this department and the schools that use it are referred to the Earnest Worker, S. S. Times, etc. For those who do not we would suggest a class review on the 23rd and School Review or Examination on the 30th.

Reading Review. Read Matt. i—iv. 12; Mark i. 1—15; Luke i—iv. 14; John i—iv. 43.

Harmony Review. Arrange the events of these chapters in their order from the Annunciation to Zacharias to the Departure into Galilee, writing after each the passages where found. (Note. The lessons are an accurate guide to the order, though they do not include all the events.) Group the events in three periods.

Chronological Review. Fix the following dates A. U. C. (year of Rome): The death of Herod; Re-building of the Temple begun; Accession of Tiberius Cæsar. From these determine the probable date of the Birth of Christ. What year of Rome corresponds with the first of the Christian Era (Dyonisian)? Make a Table (B. C. and A. D.) of the following events: The Birth of Jesus; Visit to Jerusalem (when a boy); Baptism; First Passever (of His Ministry); Departure into Galilee (see last lesson).

Geographical Review. Locate the following places and recall the events associated with each: Nazareth, Bethlehem, Jerusalem, Egypt, Bethabara, the wilderness, Cana, Capernaum, Sychar. Trace the journey to Egypt, the journey to Galilee (through Samaria), and the probable journey from Nazareth to the Passover.

Review by Persons. Recall the connection with the life of Jesus of the following persons:

Gabriel, Mary, Joseph, Shepherds of Bethlehem, Simeon, Anna, Magi, Herod, Archelaus, Doctors of the law, John the Baptist, Satan, John, Andrew, Peter, Philip, Nathaniel, Temple venders, Jewish leaders, Nicodemus, Samaritan woman.

Doctrinal Review. Master the doctrines brought out in these lessons under the following heads:

GOD. Reveals Himself, Luke i. 19; Matt. ii. 2, 12; fulfils promises, Matt. i. 23, etc.; Luke i. 70–75; ii. 26, 29, 30; protects His own, Matt. ii. 13; sends salvation, Luke ii. 68, 69; out of infinite love, John iii. 16.

He is a Spirit, John iv. 24; a personal Father, Luke ii. 49; is omnipotent, Luke i. 37; holy, vs. 49; merciful, vs. 50; the source of all spiritual life, John i. 13; the object of all true worship, John iv. 23; Matt. iv. 10; the sole Lord of our actions, Luke ii. 49.

CHRIST. Eternal God and Creator, John i. 1, 2, compare vs. 14; born of the Virgin Mary, Matt. i. 21–25; Luke ii. 5–7; by the power of the Holy Ghost, Matt. i. 20; Luke i. 35; without sin, Luke i. 35 (last clause); perfect man, Luke ii. 40, 52; witnessed by the Father, Matt. iii. 17; filled with the Spirit, Matt. iii. 16; Luke iv. 1.

Sent to save the world, John ii. 17; from sin, Matt. i. 21; by the sacrifice of the cross John i. 29; iii. 14, 15; by giving the Holy Spirit, Luke iii. 16, to give us new hearts, John iii. 5-8; by revealing God, John i. 18; by overcoming the Devil, Matt. iv. 1, 11; by His companionship and example, John i, 43; by His works, John ii. 11, and words, iv. 25, 26.

THE GOSPEL. Is glad tidings, Luke ii. 10; good wine, John ii. 10, 11; Living water, iv. 14; Proclaims the kingdom of God, Matt. iii. 2; remission of sins, Mark i. 4; full salvation, John i. 12; free salvation, John iii. 16.

Requires repentance, Matt. iii. 2; public confession, Matt. iii. 6; fruits meat for repentance, Matt. iii. 8; new birth, John iii. 3; faith, iii. 15, 36.

SIN. Culminates in the rejection of Christ, John i. 4, 5, 10, 11; iii. 19; is self-condemned, iii. 20; is under God's condemnation, iii. 18, 36; Luke iii; 9; must be repented of, Matt. iii. 2; confessed, vs. 6; forsaken, Luke iii. 12-14; Satan tempts to, Matt. iv. 1; God's word overcomes, Matt. iv. 4. 7, 10, 11; Christ's blood atones for, John i. 29; remission provided, Mark i. 4; Jesus saves from, Matt. i. 21.

WORSHIP. Must be intelligent, John iv. 22; sincere, vs. 23; spiritual, vs. 24; may be rendered anywhere, vs. 21.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Whether in class or school review first get the three periods named and fixed in the mind, and the events of each period grouped in order. Then fix the principal dates. By rapid questioning call for the events connected with the principal places named, pointing to the place on the school map, or in the class letting the scholars find it on the map in their Bibles. For instance, they would be expected to name the events of the infancy, the visit in boyhood, the cleansing of the Temple and the visit of Nicodemus, all when Jerusalem was named; and not to go from the early events to other things and then come back to Jerusalem. In the same way, run through the review by persons. In the Doctrinal Review select certain of the leading doctrines and call for some text to support it. In the class review a few slips of paper may be given out with the text upon them that you want, and the scholars may have them ready to read when called for—after giving an opportunity for some one to repeat.

NEW QUESTIONS.

100. Send us the work called for in the "Harmony Review" above.

This comes from the London Baptist: "A little girl had been rummaging in her mother's trunk. There she found a 'church letter' which her mother had neglected to present to the church into whose neighborhood she had moved. The little explorer rushed into her mother's presence shouting: 'Oh, mamma, I have found your religion in your trunk!' There is a needle-like point in that story for a great many people. With far too many the neglected church letter comes to be about the only part of the old church life remaining. But surely a trunk is a poor, dark, mothy place for one's religion."

A leading clergyman of our denomination is reported to have said to certain officials who intimated that the congregation would be pleased to see their pastor's wife more active in church work: "Brethren, my wife will, no doubt, do better after she has been ordained."

God bless the preacher's wives! That they do all in their power, often going beyond their strength, to serve the Church goes without saying. With no abiding place on earth, and no expectation, in most cases, that they can ever own a roof to cover their heads in old age, and with no adequate provision for their support when laid aside from active service, they do, nevertheless, cheerfully accept their mission, and perform a service for the church the magnitude of which eternity alone can reveal.—Deaconess at Work.

I wonder what sort of a biography might be written of each one of us if we only were to-day what we all might have been. Might have been if we had only just turned a different corner, just kept down a hasty word, just been true to our best impulses, just put aside a great temptation, just practiced a little self-restraint, just had a little more courage; if we had curbed our ambition or smothered our pride or cleansed our imagination; if only some little thing had been different; if our parents had not met with misfortune or had not passed away when we needed their advice; if husband or wife had been just the opposite to what they are, or children or brothers or sisters had taken a different course, what we might have been. Again, I say, look on the other side. Thank God hrough our Lord Jesus for what you have gained, for the strength that has come through deprivation, for the mere outlook upon what might have been. So, with us all, as we look from Nebo upon rewards not ours, it is something, it is a great deal, it is a magnificent glory, that they might have been ours; and it is a hint of what may yet be ours, if through a true penitence, a holy resignation, a Divine peace, we bow before the ordinances of the Eternal God. This leads us to the thought that we would repeat again and again—that, although Moses did not get the grand prize that bathed his eyes, he yet, by true penitence, obtained something better: he fell asleep, and entered the "City of the New Jerusalem," the land for all consecrated souls.—*C. WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., Sept. 5th, 1894.

That the state of the business of the Treasury department is an unfailing indicator of the state of the business of the country has for many years been accepted as an incontrovertible fact in Washington. For that reasons the business of the Treasury department, which has for some week past shown large and increasing receipts of cash, has been highly gratifying, not only to the administration but to everybody, because it indicates that the tide has turned and that the business of the country, so long in a depressed condition, is once more steadily improving. Secretary Carlisle is very much pleased at the present condition of the Treasury as well as with the prospect for a continued increase in the cash receipts. It is all the more pleasing to him because although hoped for it was not expected. In round numbers the receipts of the Treasury for July and August of this year exceed the receipts for the same months last year by $25,000,000. Three or four months ago another issue of bonds was regarded as almost a certainty. Yesterday Secretary Carlisle said he felt confident that all obligations could be met without another issue of bonds.

The Supreme Lodge Knight of Pythias is still in session here and will be for the rest of this week and probably longer. The question of shutting out those connected with the liquor traffic has not been decided, but it has been favorably reported, and at a meeting of the W. C. T. U., Chief Chaplain Sanderson said after commending highly the proposed reform: "The order is opposed to the liquor traffic, and I am thoroughly satisfied that the day of victory is coming." The few members of the Supreme Lodge who are opposed to the reform must be of the same opinion, as they are now trying to get action postponed until next year.

About the time Congress reassembles lovers of ethnology will find a rare treat arranged for them in a large hall of the National Museum, consisting of all the material pertaining to the history of the Pueblos and allied tribes of Indians which the Smithsonian Institution has been accumulating for years, so arranged as to give even the casual visitor a comprehensive idea of the manners and customs of the aborigines, their trades, sports, religion and pastimes, by a series of striking object lessons. No such historical lesson has ever been prepared as that which these plans propose and it is now merely a question of arranging the material, all of which is on hand. This is being done under the personal supervision of Mr. Frank Hamilton Cushing, whose remarkable experiences during a six years' residence with these Indians are too well known through Mr. Cushing's lectures and newspaper and magazine articles dealing therewith to need any detailed notice here. Suffice it to say that Mr. Cushing learned their language, was adopted into a tribe, and made a thorough study of their modes and methods, besides collecting a vast amount of oral information from the older Indians concerning the doings of their ancestors; all of which makes him peculiarly well fitted for the task that has been entrusted to him. Speaking of one portion of the exhibit, Mr. Cushing said: "Upon one side of the hall, above the rest of the collection, we shall arrange a cliff-dweller's home, as large and complete as there is room for, with the ladders and brush awnings and other accessories reconstructed as nearly as possible from the remains, which give abundant material from which to work. From these remains I should say that we can carry the tribal history back 700 years before the invasion of the Spaniards." Of his life among the Indians Mr. Cushing says: "I look back on my life among the Pueblos as a thing that can never be repeated, and that I would not forego for all the misery that went with it, for it was life in a new atmosphere, in the dawn of humanity."

"This morning nine millions of children, under the instruction of a million teachers, gathered in the Sunday-schools of America alone." I wonder if this extract from last Sunday's sermon of Rev. M. Ross Fishburn, will make every person who reads it think as I did—of the grandeur and magnitude of the work that is being done by Christianity.

At his home in Wadesboro, N. C., Aug. 25th, 1894, WILLIAM A. McKINNON, in the 44th year of his age.

Mr. McKinnon was born near Mt. Gilead, in Montgomery county, N. C., of sturdy Scotch parentage. In early life he worked on the farm, which inured him to hard labor. This doubtless contributed to his strength of body and balance of mind. When a man he chose the carpenter's trade in which he rapidly pushed himself to the front and became contractor. Best of all, he was a Christian, whose character bespoke the workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

As a Christian, he was earnest, prayerful consistent; and showed by daily walk and conversation that he had been with Jesus. No better testimony to this fact do we need, than the implicit confidence of his brethren. A short while before his death he was elected to the eldership of Sharon church, in which he early dedicated his life to the Master—and where all had learned to look to him as a wise counsellor and warm friend.

As a man, he was esteemed and honored by many friends in a large section of the State. It is a common remark that "Mac had no enemies." Though never married, his home at Wadesboro was often the scene where friends and relatives gathered to spend pleasant hours in his genial company. Deep was the gloom which fell upon many hearts when his illness was announced—fervent the prayers for his recovery. But a few more nights of anxious watching, a few more restless tossings, and the silver cord was snapped. The soul of William A McKinnon had passed into the Church of the first-born and the general assembly of saints above.

Life's duty done, as sinks the day,
Light from its load the spirit flies,
While heaven and earth combine to say
"How blest the righteous when he dies."

He leaves two brothers and three sisters to lament his loss. May the God of all grace give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness—and at last administer to each of them an abundant entrance into that upper and better kingdom to be forever with the Lord. A. K. P.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

I have had wonderful success selling Dish-Washers. Have not made less than $8 any day, and some days $15. Nearly every family buys one. They are cheap, durable, and do the work perfectly. You can wash and dry the dishes for a family in two minutes, without touching your hands to a dish. I believe any lady or gentleman, anywhere, can do as well as I am doing, as I had no experience. Anyone can sell what everyone wants to buy, and every family seems to want a Dish-Washer. Write to the Iron City Dish-Washer Co., E. E. Pittsburg, Pa. They will send you full particulars and help you as they did me. I do not write my experience boastingly, but because I think it a duty I owe to others in these hard times. MARTHA B.

I can most sincerely commend your school to the attention of the public; and for two reasons: First that the instruction given is that of conscientious as well as competent teachers, and that the pupils receive in your family that careful attention as to health and comfort which cannot be had elsewhere except at their homes.

FOR THE FAMILY.

THE TONE OF VOICE.

It is not so much what you say,
As the manner in which you say it;
It is not so much the language you use,
As the tones in which you convey it.

"Come here!" I sharply said,
And the baby cowered and wept;
"Come here!" I cooed, and he looked and smiled,
And straight to my lap he crept.

The words may be mild and fair,
And the tones may pierce like a dart;
The words may be soft as the summer air,
And the tones may break the heart.

For words but come from the mind,
And grow by study and art;
But the tones leap forth from the inner self,
And reveal the state of the heart.

Whether you know it or not—
Whether you mean or care—
Gentleness, kindness, love, and hate,
Envy and anger, are there.

Then would you quarrels avoid,
And in peace and love rejoice,
Keep anger not only out of your words,
But keep it out of your voice.

TWO LIVES.

BY BETTIE HOLLAND.

In a stately mansion in a crowded city there lived a girl. She was the idol of over indulgent parents. Her every wish was gratified. Servants came and went at her bidding. Everything that wealth could afford was lavished upon her. She learned to think only of self and to receive whatever was done for her as a matter of course—as homage she believed of a right was due her. Thus nurtured in an atmosphere of luxury and self-indulgence, she made little individual effort. She was a child of fashion revelling in gayety and frivolity, caring absolutely nothing for anything or anyone that did not contribute to her passing pleasures. She did not drink in the deep meaning of life; she sought not out the hidden springs of action; she was a stranger to the high and noble impulses of the soul. She even looked down upon all sorts of work with a feeling of contempt.

Here was a life of idleness and ease. During intervals of that intervened between exciting social events, novel in hand, she would languidly recline on the sofa and thus dreamily while away the hours, or gloomily reflect upon hours passed, hours that were not always fraught with the fulfillment of hopes, but which were sometimes laden with disappointment and chagrin. Thus she grew morbid and cynical, and dragged out a dreary, aimless existence. So that on the threshold of nature, womanhood, when the bud of promise should have burst into the full blown rose, it was dwarfed and diseased and gave signs of decay. Evidenely premature old age had set in. As the years rolled on she was borne nearer and nearer to an old age from which she shrank—an old age as uninviting as it can only be to those who fritter away their youth in vain pursuit of pleasures that soon pass away.

One bright morning she arose feeling that years were swindlers and life a cheat. While thus brooding she wandered out she scarcely knew where, so occupied was she with her thoughts. She felt not the genial warmth of the sunshine, she heard not the songs of th birds. Naught in nature had charms for her. Weary of life she wished to avoid every one. At last she stopped at the backyard fence and looking over vacantly stared into the street. Soon she was awakened from her reverie by a lightsome song sung in low, sweet tones, by a youthful maiden who briskly trudged along with a basket of clothes on her arm. There was the light of intelligence and love in her eye; the buoyancy of youth, of energy in her step, and simple, natural grace in her manner: "Good morning" said the maiden, cheerily looking up. The woman of the world stared at her, at first—then abruptly said: "Stop a moment! Tell me why it is you can be so light-hearted, so cheerful. I should be miserable at such work. Indeed, any work is irksome to me." The maiden paused with wonder in her eyes. "And why should I not be happy? I have work to do, and something to live for." "A washer-woman happy! I—I—cannot understand." "Then I will help you understand." You see my father is dead, mother is an invalid and we are dreadfully poor. I must needs work for a living. Left as strangers in the city, this, at present, is the best I can do. But why do you shrink away, as it were, from the mere mention of work. Labor disgraces no one, but rather the manner of doing it. I am happy because I am thus enabled to help myself and others and then I have some leisure which I spend in reading. So you see I have no time for gloomy thoughts. I can have the good and noble, the great and mighty of all time for my companions. I try to do my work well. And into the web of stern duty I try to weave threads of beauty. E'en in the foaming suds I sometimes see castles peopled with lives so good and true that I want to be as good and beautiful as they. Then I have a little class I try to teach and oh! you do not know how their eyes kindle with delight when I tell them stories I have read. I try to scatter a little sunshine as I go, and somehow my heart always feels a little brighter and some life is made a little brighter." "And this is why you seem so happy?" the woman ventured to ask? "Yes, have I made it plain?" "I think I understand." "Then good-day, I must go," said the maiden, as she hurried along. The woman murmured as she slowly turned away. "How strange! how strange!" I would that I were as happy as she, but alas, it can never be."

Girls, who read this, there are two ways through life as is strikingly shown in the lives portrayed in this story. There can be no true pleasure found outside the path of duty. Idleness does not bring happiness. Luxury cannot purchase it for us. The simplest peasant may be as happy as the proudest prince. Cultivation of mind and heart should go hand in hand. We should live for others and not for ourselves alone. This do and life will be ennobled, work will be dignified, and life, death and the great forever become one grand, sweet song.

Things Useful.

Pear Salad.—Make a syrup of one teacupful of granulated sugar, half that amount of water, and a heaping teaspoonful of sliced green ginger root; strain and set in a cool place. Pare, quarter and core six ripe, juicy pears, put in a salad bowl, pour the cold syrup over and set on ice.

To Preserve Green Tomatoes.—Weigh out half as much sugar as tomatoes, after they are washed, peeled and halved. Let stand in sugar over night; cooked slowly, until they are as thick as you wish; season with lemon to suit taste; keep in open jars or seal tight, as you like.

Powdered soapstone and salt in equal proportions, wet with water, will make an everlasting and fire proof mending for the lining to stoves; it is much less expensive and troublesome to procure and put in place than new fire bricks. Don't let fire spoil the stove because the brick needs mending.

Pineapple and banana salad may be made by slicing the fruit in circles of about half an inch in thickness, arrange these in a dish and pour over them a dressing made as follows: Take a half pint of water and a few spoonfuls of white sugar, boil for ten minutes and set to cool. Pour over the salad when quite cool. Both fruits must be peeled.

Sweet Pickles of Ripe Cucumbers.—The ripe, yellow cucumbers, many of which are yearly left in the fields after the few selected for seed are gathered, make an excellent sweet pickle and delicious chow chow. To make the sweet pickles, select ripe cucumbers, peel them lightly, cut them in lengthwise strips and remove the seed. Lay them in a light brine, made by adding a cup of salt to a gallon of water. In twenty-four hours remove them from the brine, rinse them, put them in a saucepan and cover them with vinegar. Cook the cucumbers in this sweet pickle very slowly on the back of stove till they are clear and transparent. Add whole cinnamon, cloves, a tablespoonful of cassia buds, a teaspoonful of mace blades and two ounces of green ginger. Pour the pickle in a stone jar, cover lightly, and in two mouths' time begin to use it.

OLD DAME CRICKET.

Old Dame Cricket,
Down in a thicket,
Brought up her children nine—
Queer little chaps,
In glossy black caps
And brown little suits so fine.

"My children," she said,
"The birds are abed;
Go and make the dark earth glad,
Chirp while you can!"
And then she began,
Till, O, what a concert they had!

They hopped with delight,
They chirruped all night,
Singing, "Cheer up! cheer up! cheer!"
Old Dame Cricket,
Down in the thicket,
Sat awake till dawn to hear.

"Nice children," she said,
"And very well bred;
My darlings have done their best.
Their naps they must take;
The birds are awake,
And they can sing all the rest."

Inside Weather.

It was no use watching the clouds; it was no use gazing out of the east window or the west, for the whole sky was gray, and the rain was coming down as if it meant business; indeed, it did mean business; it meant corn and wheat and oats in the fields, and peas and onions and lettuce in the gardens.

But inside Mother Bennet's nursery it meant two sober little faces and two disappointed little girls. For Miss Nina Graves had promised to come for Kitty and Belle in her pony cart, and take them out to look for trailing arbutus. If it had been "Spring-beauties or "Blood-roots," it would not have mattered so much, for they grew exerywhere. But the sweet, blushing arbutus is shy and rare, and is a good hider, and does not come where little feet can easily run.

"I believe it always rains when I want to go out," said Kitty.

"Not always," said mother; it didn't rain for the May-queen party last week, nor the day you went out to grandma's."

"Well, 'most every time, then," grumbled Kitty.

"Why don't people 'vent something to stop rain?" suggested Belle, "like they stop small-box."

"Vaccinate the weather?" cried Kitty. "Did you ever hear the like?"

"No, but a charm," explained Belle, "so that I could say some strange words, and wave my hands about—so—and the clouds would fly."

"Some people can do that," said Mrs. Bennet.

"Why, mother, really? Did you ever know anybody who could do that?"

"Yes, and so have you. No, I can't tell you who it is now, but I'll do something better; I'll send Charles down with waterproof and umbrella, and ask Mrs. Guest to let Polly come and spend the day with you."

"O, mother, do you think she will? How perfectly lovely! Please hurry, mother, and tell Charles not walk so slow."

Now, perhaps, you will think that Polly Guest was very beautiful, or very clever, or very great in some way, since our two little girls were so delighted to hear of her coming, but she was none of these things.

Charles came back, holding the umbrella over a slim little figure, which quickly sprang out from the waterproof's wet folds, revealing a merry-faced little girl, plainly, even poorly dressed, but with a wealth of smiling good humor. Her lips smiled, her eyes smiled, the dimples in her rosy cheeks smiled; the very tousled little curls on her head seemed to be nodding and laughing.

And it was always so; if you wanted to do her way, why, good for you! If you didn't want to do ner way, O, all right; let's try yours, and in every way, let's have a jolly good time.

If it rained now, or if the sun shone, Belle and Kitty could not tell, but the pony cart and the trailing pink and white blossoms were forgotten, and merrily sped the hours.

Presently mother came in with her kitchen apron on. "Time to wash and brush for dinner, she said.

"Dinner time?" cried Belle, "why we've just had breakfast."

"You have just had a long, happy morning, said mother; "didn't I tell you I knew somebody that could 'say words and wave her hands about so,' and make the clouds fly?"

"Why, mother, did you mean Polly?"

"I did just mean little Polly; the sun always seems to shine where she is."

Polly's blushing little face looked more smiling than ever at such sweet praise, but she laughed outright when Kitty said in sober earnest:

"But you see, mother, Polly is different. Polly always has good weather inside of her!"—Reformed Church Messenger.

Lady Maud.

Kitty was a little girl who liked to have her own way, and always thought she knew better than any one else what was best for her, and so she was often in trouble. One day her father said he would take her to the creek to fish, and Kitty said Lady Maud must go too.

Now Lady Maud was a beautiful wax doll, with lovely yellow curls, and she was dressed in pink silk. Kitty thought a great deal of her, for she was a birthday present from an uncle she loved dearly.

'I think you would better not take the doll Kitty,' said her father; 'young ladies don't go fishing dressed in pink silk."

But Kitty would not consent to leave the doll at home. When she reached the creek she put the doll down on a stone under a tree near the bank, and she was sure Lady Maud was safe. But a little later she heard a loud grunt, and looking around saw a wild hog rooting near the stone on which the doll sat. Kitty jumped up with a loud cry, and the hog rushed away; but in passing the stone it knocked the doll down the bank, and Kitty saw the water close over her darling.

The creek was deep at the spot, and Kitty's father had to fish a long time for Lady Maud. When he drew her out from the water at last, her wig was soaked off, the paint was all washed from her face, and the pink silk dress was ruined.

Kitty cried until she was almost sick; but it was a lesson for her. She learned, through the loss of her doll, that her father was wiser than she after all.—Florence B. Hallowell, in Sunday-School Visitor.

ALL ALONE,

both in the way it acts, and in the way it's sold, is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

A long procession of diseases start from a torpid liver and impure blood. Take it, as you ought, when you feel the first symptoms (languor, loss of appetite, dullness, depression). As an appetizing, restorative tonic, to repel disease and build up the needed flesh and strength, there's nothing to equal it. It rouses every organ into healthful action, purifies and enriches the blood, braces up the whole system, and restores health and vigor.

MRS. GOEDERT.

Mrs. SUSAN GOEDERT, of Rice, Benton County, Minn., writes: "I have taken three bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and feel quite well and strong now, so that I am able to do my work without the least fatigue."

It is independent in all things, and does not change its views through fear of losing a few subscribers by advocating what it knows to be right.

SHE DIDN'T TAKE WITH THE GENTLEMEN.

She was refined, intelligent, and not bad looking, but somehow she never seemed to take with the gentlemen. They didn't like her listless ways; they said she hadn't any "snap" about her. Poor girl! she was suffering from functional irregularities, and it was actually impossible for her to take much interest in anything. But a change came. One day she heard of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. She procured a bottle, and she had not taken half its contents when she felt like another woman. Now she is in the enjoyment of perfect health, and has suitors by the score. No woman need suffer from functional irregularities and weaknesses. The "Favorite Prescription" is a safe and certain cure for all the weaknesses to which women are peculiarly subject.

Resolutions Adopted by the Synod of North Carolina.

The Synod of North Carolina, gratefully sensible of its obligations to the North Carolina Presbyterian for publishing and disseminating not only the news of its churches, but the actions of all its Presbyteries and agencies, adopt the following resolutions:

1st. The North Carolina Presbyterian is an indispensable agency for promoting and maintaining every enterprise in which the Synod is engaged.

2d. That the success and efficiency of all its enterprises would be vastly enlarged by a largely increased circulation of the paper."

3d. Synod's agent of Publication, in co-operation with the agents of Publication in the Presbyteries, is instructed to concert measures for securing this greatly to be desired result.

RECEIVING OR REJECTING.

The words, "Behold I stand at the door and knock," were addressed through the apostle JOHN to a church. This church was one of the seven churches of Asia selected to receive dictated messages from JESUS at the right hand of GOD, as representatives of Church condition and life. This one at Laodicea was a possessor of great wealth and stands for any church which has wealth, being increased in goods, so that the temporal wants are all supplied and there is a formal worship and a punctilious service, without spirituality and such a church does not know its true condition. It does not realize that CHRIST is outside and that the Church without Him in the midst, however, rich in this world's goods is "poor and wretched and miserable and blind and naked."

In appropriateness these words appeal to any individual Christian who has everything that wealth can furnish and is so filled and pleased as not to know the real soul poverty with CHRIST outside the door of the heart. Much more may the message be repeated to any one and every one not a Christian, but satisfied with the good things of this life and refusing to admit CHRIST into heart and life.

It is most important that the cold church and comfortable Christian should have JESUS in the midst. There is much creature comfort possible without this, but no real joy, no spiritual strength, no heavenly happiness. The words of praise and worship, without Him, will be as sounding brass or tinkling cymbal. The house of GOD will be as an open sepulchre when He is outside, no matter how complete its conveniences and appointments of comfort, how elaborate its forms, how exact its relations of part to part and each to the whole of a service, man pleasing and perfect to the intellectual or aesthetic taste.

The good of life depends on having JESUS in the heart and in the home. He cannot be received fully into either without being likewise in the other. They are combined in that beautiful custom of some families of placing an empty chair at every meal with the thought and wish that JESUS would be a guest, in His own presence or in any stranger whom He might send and who might be received in His name

There are four examples and illustrations in the gospels of receiving JESUS into the heart and home or rejecting Him. He was in the country of the Gergesenes when He cast out the legion of demons and permitted them to go into the herd of swine. It is not plain that this was a rebuke for having kept swine. Still the Gergesenes would not receive JESUS into their hearts or their homes because His presence had injured their business. This is still true of men that they do not want to be Christians and to receive CHRIST into their hearts and their homes because they may have to give up their business or their way of conducting it or working on the Sabbath. They prefer to have Him go away. Alas, they know not what they do, what darkness they invite, what degradation they incur, what death they secure by sending Him away. Still self-interest is preferred to eternal good. Another case was that of the Pharisee who received JESUS into his house not into his heart. He thought to compliment Him by this, as many men now think to do in wishing to have Him a guest either by being courteous and hospitable to His ministers, or being desirous that wife and children should be Christians and even urging them to attend church and have home religious training. Such say they think religion a good thing for the family and home but not for themselves. It matters not how they receive JESUS into the home but not into the heart.

The centurion received CHRIST into his heart but thought himself unworthy to receive Him into his home. This was a mistake. Coming into the heart JESUS always enters and blesses the home, and this man who thought himself unworthy and his home too humble to receive JESUS had the blessing even on his servant. So it is that receiving JESUS into the heart secures His blessing not only upon the family and friends but upon every servant of the household. That is indeed most blessed. Oh, LORD fill our hearts, enter our homes and bless every member of our households, we should pray.

There was a place where JESUS loved to be. He was there a welcome guest—MARY and MARTHA and LAZARUS received Him into their hearts and into their home. They loved Him and trusted Him and communed with Him. He was their Friend. They trusted in Him as SAVIOUR. They worshipped and served Him as LORD. They loved Him as FRIEND and BROTHER. He loved to rest in that home. He had sympathy in those hearts. When others scoffed or despised they loved and mourned. When He was persecuted they were tender and their home was His refuge. Hence that home has become a typical home and the hearts there what we wish ours to be. He waits and knocks to be received into our hearts and homes, to bless and sanctify. Is He received or rejected?

HERE AND THERE.

THE PAINFUL INTELLIGENCE IS conveyed by notice in our obituary columns of the death of the eldest daughter of Rev. T. P. BARCLAY, of the Synod of Virginia—and the sister of Rev. JONAS BARCLAY of our own Synod. We condole with the brethren in this afflictive dispensation.

OUR READERS, ONE AND ALL, OUGHT to know that WHITTET and SHEPPERSON, publishers for the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, have recently enlarged to four issues monthly the Children's Friend, making it the cheapest periodical issued by any denomination for their Sunday-schools. They have in the same direction enlarged and improved the Earnest Worker, Lesson Quarterly and the Lesson Leaves. They have also added a Primary Quarterly, specially for the use of Primary Classes, while for the Little Folks we have had prepared a series of "Pictorial Bible Lessons," illustrating the subject of the weekly lesson by pictures beautifully printed in bright colors, that cannot fail to be attractive to the children and helpful to the teachers.

We note the change with great pleasure. We have before us the periodicals, bright looking and most admirably gotten-up typographically. Our Church has reason to be proud of this department of its business.

COPYING FROM ANOTHER PAPER WE stated that the N. C. College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts had opened with one hundred and eighty students and was expecting fifteen more—it should have read fifty more. Prof. A. Q. HOLLADAY, president of the Institution writes making this correction and says further:

"Half of that fifty have now come and some thirty or forty more are expected. We have a splended body of young men in our Young Men's Christian Association and I am glad to be able to say there is no hazing, no dissipation nor disorder of any kind, and work is progressing as smoothly as if it were the middle of a session."

ON THE 13TH DAVIDSON COLLEGE opened with over one hundred students on the grounds. The number when all are in will probably be larger than last year. The professors have returned from their vacations invigorated and ready for the best work. Prof. MARTIN will have for his assistant in the chemical laboratory, Mr. J. D. McDOWELL. The buildings are in good condition; some desirable changes have been made in routine of college life and altogether things look bright for Davidson.

WE ARE SENDING OUT REMINDERS to our friends who owe us. Some have overlooked payment a long time—others less time and a few are just entering upon another year. We hope all will make special effort to respond favorably.

THE PROPOSED REVISION.

The Minutes of the last Assembly are now generally in the hands of our ministers, and the exact terms of the proposed amendments to the chapter on Licensure and Ordination can be carefully examined.

The writer, while heartily in sympathy with the revision, is impressed with two or three blemishes, and the question arises in his mind, how can these blemishes be corrected without endangering the success of the amendments as a whole? Let us take a glance at the blemishes themselves.

1. The last paragraph of the proposed revision—the conclusion of Art. XI., was not a part of the original report, but was appended subsequently (Minutes p. 222.) It was debated as if it were an antagonistic measure, being the substance of the minority report. It was known in the Assembly as the Mecklenburg Overture. The writer heartily endorses its substance, and does not consider that there is the least antagonism between it and the measure as a whole. But, inserted where it is, it does not convey the idea intended by its movers. "This rule" was intended to refer to the rule of Art. VI. as the Book now stands, while the rule just preceding it in its present position is quite different.

2. Art. XII., is not referred to in the revision and of course stands unchanged. This, as to substance, is as it should be. Presbytery should have the same power of recall over a limited license as over the unlimited license. But there are expressions in that Article that need modifying, as the "considerable time" has generally been understood to mean a period longer than the proposed limited term of license.

3. In Art. VI. of the revision the provision for a Presbytery departing from the rule as to limited license appears totally out of place. It looks almost as if it had been retained from the former article of the same number, which referred to an entirely different matter. License should mean the same thing throughout the Church, and if any are limited all should be limited.

Now these defects appear capable of easy correction, and that in such a way that the main substance of the revision can go through this year. In voting "Aye" upon the Revision we can except the last paragraph of Art. VI., and of Article XI. Then all the rest of the Revision, if it commands the vote of a majority of the Presbyteries, would on its enactment by the next Assembly become immediately the law of the Church. This law would contain no blemish except the verbal one of the Art. XII., and would have no defect except the lack of the provisions of the Mecklenburg Overture, defining the minimum requirements for what are generally known as "extraordinary cases." These could be sent down by the next Assembly, the latter taking the place of the redundant Art. V., which is not changed in the present revision, thus saving changes of number.

Accordingly the writer intends proposing to his Presbytery the following action:

The Presbytery of Wilmington consents to the proposed changes in the F. of G. ch. VI., Sections V. and VI., with the exception of the concluding sentence of Sec. VI., Art. VI., beginning "whenever any Presbytery," etc., and the concluding paragraph of Art. XI. beginning, "But whenever," etc.

And Presbytery further proposes to the General Assembly the following additional changes in Sec. VI., to wit:

For Art. V., substitute the following: When a candidate, in the judgment of Presbytery, cannot profitably pursue the usual course of studies, but exhibits gifts that give promise of edification to the Church, Presbytery shall order his course of study accordingly. But in all such cases, the candidate shall be required to take a sufficient course in the English Bible, fundamental theology, and (before ordination) in Church history and government, together with such other studies as the circumstances may permit.

And for Art. XII., substitute the following:

When it appears to Presbytery, before the expiration of a Probationer's term of license, that his services are not edifying to the Church, it may, if it thinks proper, recall his license; and it shall be its duty to do so whenever the Probationer shall, without necessity, devote himself to such pursuits as interfere with a full trial of his gifts, and due prosecution of his studies, according to his license.

Hoping that these views may be of some use to others and may help to secure what we are all striving for—the best system attainable—I subject them to the searching scrutiny of the Church.

LETTER FROM ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

BRO. MCLAURIN:—I returned last night from Burlington, where the Orange Presbytery Sunday-school Convention assembled at 10 a. m., on Tuesday Sept. 11th, and where at 8 p.m., the Presbytery of Orange convened. Our moderator, Bro. Shields, of Roxboro, was sick and unable to be present, and the last moderator, Bro. Seabrook, asked your correspondent to preach the opening sermon, which I did, from St. John 21:22. "What is that to thee? follow thou me." We were assembled in a church whose pulpit was covered with habiliments of mourning—the sad tokens of a pastor's recent death—the church too was crowded with a large congregation bereaved and saddened by such a providence. It was hard to realize that a little over only two months before, Jas. L. Currie was in that pulpit—in the prime of active life, and looking forward with a pleasing hope to our assembling in that church with him and with his attached charge. These circumstances suggested the propriety of opening the Presbytery convened there, with such a text and topic, and with the consideration of the many questions that are often started and discussed—why this and that event is permitted to occur, so strange and baffling, so contrary to our view of what is wisest and best, about which Jesus says to us, as he said to Peter: "What is that to thee? follow thou me."

We had an exceedingly interesting and I am sure a most profitable meeting. They had not adjourned when I obtained leave of absence. A memorial paper in reference to Bro. J. L. Currie's death was ordered to be prepared and was read on Wednesday evening at 8 p. m., and by a standing vote ordered to be sent to the family and to your paper. After which was held a popular meeting in the interest of Foreign Missions, conducted by Rev. R. E. Caldwell, and at which very interesting and stirring addresses were delivered by Alexander, Turnbull, McIver and E. W. Smith. There was a full house to hear them, and a collection was taken up amounting to $25. The next day at 11 a. m., another equally interesting meeting was held on the subject of Home Missions in the Presbytery of Orange, and reports were given of work in Stokes county, in Person county, in the Caswell field, and in Wilkes county. I wish that all the 4,550 church members in the 52 churches of Orange Presbytery could have heard Brothers Miller, Robinson, Alexander, Coppedge, E. W. Smith and others as they pointed to the pillar of cloud and fire, leading the way and work of the Lord, and to the manifest and unprecedented tokens of God's presence and blessing. His voice was saying, "Go forward." A collection was taken up and a little over $36 was raised and handed to Bro. Miller to help him towards a church building for which he plead in the course of his address.

An exceedingly encouraging letter was read from the trustees of Davidson College to the Presbytery of Orange as one of the Presbyteries controlling Davidson College. I think you could publish nothing in your paper more gratifying and welcome to the majority of your readers, than this letter, signed J. Rumple, secretary.

Mr. Geo. W. Watts, of Durham, was elected trustee to fill the unexpired term of Bro. Currie, deceased.

The following paper was passed by unanimous, and I think, cordial vote:

"The Presbytery of Orange has learned with pleasure that the Rev. Dr. James M. Rawlings, of Virginia has purchased half of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, and after the 1st of October the paper will have the benefit of his experience and be under his editorial guidance. Dr. Rawlings is known to most of us as an unusually popular and successful minister of the gospel—having had charge of some of the largest churches and been entrusted with some of the most important interests of church, and educational and evangelistic enterprises in the Synod of Virginia and in other Synods. His health requires him to lessen his labors; and we heartily welcome him to our Synod and to the "Old North State." We believe his connection with the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN will add greatly to the enlargement of its interest, influence and usefulness; and the Presbytery enjoins upon all its ministers, as the Presbytery of Albemarle has done, to call attention from the pulpit, and through other agencies to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, and to make special efforts, at this time especially, to increase in all our congregations the circulation of a paper, so useful and so indispensable for church and religious information in all our families."

Other interesting matters were discussed, but I do not propose to weary you and your readers any further. The Presbytery resolved to hold an adjourned meeting at Chapel Hill on Friday, before the 5th Sabbath to ordain if the way be clear licentiates Currie, Bradshaw, and Kegley, and to instal them as pastors over respective churches, (on the 5th Sabbath), that have called them.

The result of the primary in the Ashland, (Ky.,) district, considered in its moral aspects, is certainly a cause for rejoicing. We breathe freer.

WAITING.

I.

I have my dreams as you do, yet for me
There can be no fulfilment; but to dream
Is pleasant sometimes. Just to let these seem Realities brings comfort. To be free
From earthly circumstance, to climb in glee
High as my soul can reach, and feel the beam
Of glory on my brow—who does not deem
It good to sometimes dwell in Fantasy?
O tender heart and true! be what you will,
Who have the power. I, though I stay below
And watch you as you rise to heights elate
Begrudge you nothing; dreams that you fulfil
I feel the beauty of. Tis yours to grow
Ever and ever; mine to stand and wait.

II.

To wait: it is not wearisome; each day
Brings something; newer needs, or lessons caught
From yesterday, a stream of sunshine fraught
With gold that glitters, though it fad s away
After a little. Nothing comes to stay,
Success or suffering. To wait is naught,
When waiting means to serve. Yea, I have thought
(To stop and think, or even stop and pray,
When duty calls, is not alone unwise
But somewhat selfish) that 'tis better so
Than to be carried upward by the swell
Of great Ambition. Ah, to wait! there lies
Something beyond the waiting, else I know
I could not be content to say—'Tis well!

KNOWLEDGE OF PERSONAL SINFULNESS.

BY REV. S. O. HALL.

"Make me to know my transgression, and my sin."—Job 13:23.

[CONCLUDED.]

WATCHFULNESS.

No one who is aware of his condition by nature will fail to be watchful. No one who rightly views his past sins can easily be led to repeat them. He will watch as well as pray. He will watch and pray not to enter into temptation. He will watch and pray, pray and watch, watch while he prays, pray while he watches.

He profits by the sad experiences of the past. He calls to mind his past temptations. He has discovered his weakness as never before. The Evil One has gained too many victories. If watchfulness cease, he will gain more. It will not do to cope with the adversary unaided by divine strength. Creature-weakness will be supplemented by divine power. It will never do to be off guard. Temptations are many and strong. The Christian must be ever on the alert, guarding every avenue of approach, not knowing when the attack will be made, not knowing in what guise the enemy will come.

SUBMISSION TO THE DIVINE WILL.

Murmurs, complaints, objections to the divine orderings of events never come from the lips of one who realizes the enormity of his own guilt, his own sins. Riches may make themselves wings and fly away as an eagle toward heaven, the most severe financial losses may suddenly overtake him, his health may become wrecked, the sorest bereavements may visit him, death invade his home, the most trying dispensations of providence be his—he is thankful, cheerful amid it all. He can say with Jacob: "I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies, and of all the truth, which thou hast shewed unto thy servant." He says: "I have many dark days, but I have bright ones too. I am so unworthy, so sinful, how merciful in God to permit me any brightness at all! I deserve to be cast off forever. My troubles are many, but they do not equal in number my blessings. Many troubles turn out afterwards to be blessings—they were blessings in disguise. My sorrows are many, but they are fewer than my sins. He hath not dealt with me after my sins; nor rewarded me according to mine iniquities. Thy will be done."

CHARITABLENESS.

It is an ancient saying that every man carries on his shoulder a wallet, which contains his own faults and those of his neighbors. But he has the wallet so adjusted that his own faults are behind him, he does not see them. The faults of his neighbors are before him, his eyes are always upon them. He who is painfully aware of his own imperfections, failings, blunders, sins, will not be harsh, censorious, uncharitable in judging his fellow-creatures. He will have more of the spirit of the publican than of the Pharisee. Engrossed with thoughts of his own sins, he will not look with proud disdain upon others. He feels that he might have committed the very sins which they committed or even worse, if placed in similar circumstances. He seeks a favorable light in which to view their sins. The meanest people, are always the hardest upon those who come short. They are doing things far worse than the things done by those whom they so severely condemn. The best persons are always the most charitable. While they condemn the offence, they pity the offenders and long to win him to the right. There is with them no secret rejoicing at the downfall of others. They call to mind some of their own past short-comings. "I do remember my faults this day."

A FORGIVING SPIRIT.

The heart alive to its own sinfulness before God will not be spiteful, revengeful, unforgiving. Place cannot there be found for such feelings. They are wholly foreign to such a heart. They would not there find lodgment, admittance. They must seek a more congenial soil in which to flourish, to grow.

He who sees himself in need of much forgiveness will imitate Joseph who forgave his brethren, though they had badly treated him. He will imitate David who spared his enemy Saul, when he could so easily have taken his life in the cave of Adullam. David's men urged him to kill him. He will imitate Stephen who dying amid a shower of stones said, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." Yes, he will in some measure resemble his Saviour, who prayed for his murderers: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

Our Saviour is very explicit in his teachings on this point. "Forgive and ye shall be forgiven." "And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any; that your Father which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses."

The subject is viewed in this light: Do I hope for forgiveness at the hand of a merciful God? Then I must be forgiving. Against whom did my brother offend? Against me, a poor, weak, erring creature. Against whom have I offended? The Great God in Heaven. My brother offended against me seven times. I have offended against God seventy times seven. Only a hundred pence is owed to me. I owe God ten thousand talents.

HIGHER APPRECIATION OF SALVATION.

In addition to the graces above enumerated, there will be a higher appreciation of the whole plan of salvation through the merits of another—redemption through the Lord Jesus Christ.

Here on earth it will be the better appreciated. The blacker our sins appear to us, the brighter will seem the light which streams from the cross. He who has most deeply realized his own sinfulness, will most prize the blood-bought, and freely offered salvation. "Make me to know my transgression and my sin." For never, never, never till conscious of destitution, does a soul appreciate or accept the riches offered by Christ. Until convinced of the disease of sin, the remedy for sin is never taken. More than a vague feeling of sin is needed. Until the sinner sees himself in the tattered rags of self-righteousness, he never puts on the robe of Christ's righteousness. How necessary that the Holy Spirit convince of sin!

And in Heaven, no doubt, the highest anthems of praise will ascend from those who have had the deepest insight into the workings of their once-depraved hearts. They will see that it was all of grace, grace alone. Then will they say: "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake."

The nature which is all wood and straw is of no use, if we are to do well, we must have some iron in us.—Canon Farrar.

OUR DUTY TO JESUS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Although our Lord gave his disciples the broad command to go into all the world and preach the gospel unto every creature, he himself confined his personal ministrations to his own race. In fact he stated explicitly "I am not sent save unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." As millions of these lost sheep are still wandering in all the darkness and desolation of unbelief, surely we who have been grafted into the good olive tree, ought to consider it our supreme duty to do what we can to bring them into the light of truth.

They are hard to approach; but it is none the less our duty to use every effort to reach them. There are three classes of Jews, the rich and ignorant, the learned and poor, such as the journalists, professors and politicians of Europe, and lastly the poor and ignorant, who constitute the great majority. The two latter classes are those whom the Christian missionary finds most hopeful. The very poor are humble and pliant; and even if they admit and listen to the truth for the sake of the loaves and fishes of Christian charity; still our Lord himself discards not such. The learned class have logically trained minds and can see the force of an argument. Take them on their own ground. The challege of their own learned Rabbi, Gamaliel who said, "If this work be of men, it will come to naught. But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it, lest haply ye be found even to fight against God." Place before the mind of any educated Jew, the wonderful results of Christ's religion. Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews is at this day acknowledged as sovereign by more nations, and more powerful nations than any sovereign who ever reigned on on this earth. Even in material splendour, the Christian nations far surpass in wealth, power, learning and moral force, anything that has ever existed since the world was created. Surely it ought to destroy at least, the hatred of the Jew to the Christian religion, to see a sovereign of his own race so highly honored. Their own reason ought to teach them that the work of Jesus of Nazareth was the work of God; and has been proven such, by the developments of history. It is true that Rome carried the early Church into the wilderness of error, just as the Hebrew Church wandered, through unbelief, into the wilderness of Arabia, and it has taken centuries to retrace her steps. Even yet the Reformation is not complete. The Gentile churches have been reconciled by the casting away of the Jews, but they must wait until the receiving again of these outcast people (brethren of our Lord) before they become spiritually alive from the dead. "For, if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the Dead. Romans 11th chap. 15th verse. Surely with this magnificent promise staring us in the face, from the open page of the New Testament, we ought, for our own sakes, strive for its fulfilment. The conversion of the Jews will bring to us Gentiles, spiritual life from the dead. And then will the grand promise to Abraham also be literally fulfilled, "In thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. Has ever so glorious a meaning been put into a single sentence?

May the time soon come when every true Christian may be a true Jew; and every true Jew become a true Christian. Not until then will the Reformation commenced by Luther become completed. Not until then will either Jwes or Gentiles have their minds opened to understand all the prophecies and all the Scriptures. Let us organize missions entirely for the Jews, knowing that the receiving of them will be truly "life from the dead." Preach the gospel through Christian Jews as our Lord did, and the full millennial glory will dawn.

At the Open Door of Autumn.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Summer brings to us many and such varying experiences that our feelings are very different, as different indeed as we are ourselves, when we approach the open door of autumn. There are those who find in the summer their rest, their only vacation time, and they absorb great draughts of fresh air, and live in the sunshine, seeking the sea or the hills as their tastes and their purses dictate. But to a greater host than these, summer means a period of excessive toil, of working hard in the house or in the field, of finding the longest days too short for the crowding cares and imperious duties.

Naturally these two classes, if we may limit our thought just now to these, approach autumn's glowing doorway in moods which are the opposite each of the other's. The summer pleasure-takers, refreshed in mind and body, are ready for a new campaign. If they are workers, as most Americans are, they bring back to the task an elan, a delight, an access of power which is beyond price. They are like the children beginning school after the holidays. Everything goes with a rush, a swing; nothing wearies. The depression of routine has been overcome. There is the charm of novelty in the old rut which seems again like an untrodden path. Who does not know and enjoy this rare enthusiasm beginning again when the hour of work flies as if it had wings, when one is, so to speak, re-incarnated in a house of flesh which has been renovated and strengthened and established in good order.

But the farmer's wife, who cooked and swept and scrubbed for a house full of gay summer boarders the whole three months, her sister who carried on her household operations with an increased family and the minimum of help during the heat, have indeed the satisfaction of seeing their gains in whatever money has accrued to the domestic exchequer; but, aside from this, they are usually too weary to care very much for our harvest home rejoicings.

It is of them I am thinking, to them I am writing. I wish I could lift all my tired sisters by a sheer effort of my will to the breezy upland where I sit to-day, twenty-five hundred feet above the sea level. As far as the eye can see extends the mountain line, billowy, grand, majestic. Cloudscape and landscape are alike beautiful, and here I am doing what I wish I could persuade you to do—enjoying the luxury of idleness. We women need to be told over and over that there is for us, at certain seasons, no better gospel than that of folded hands.

The daughters who are so used to seeing the mothers always busy and always uncomplaining, may pardon a reminder that they have a privilege here. By stress of persuasion, or perhaps by a little tactful plotting and planning, get mother—and father, too—off for a little journey in the golden September. They will make every imaginable excuse, and put a dozen stumbling blocks in the way of their going, but loving persistence can overcome these, and the thing to be accomplished is to get them away.

It, of course, never seems to parents that they can be spared. A mother going away for a single day leaves as many directions behind her as if she were to be on the other side of the globe for a twelve-month. She lingers at the gate, and calls back, "Remember this; don't forget that; be sure to have dinner ready when John comes home; take grandma her cup of tea at four, etc., etc.," and when finally she turns the bend of the road, or the cars whirl her half way to her destination, she still regretfully thinks of something she ought to have said or done. Once fairly away this mood relaxes, and she is able to let go the home burdens and worries, so that when she returns from one of her infrequent outings you see with surprise how much younger she looks, how bright are her eyes, how much lighter her step.

To women who have arrived at the early or the later autumn of their years there are lessons if they would heed them in Nature's own way of carrying on her housekeeping. She works in spring and in summer, but when autumn comes, she robes herself in glory and sits still amid her ripened vineyards and her reaped fields.

Not the less, even in this hour of fulfillment, are her quiet plans being laid, her processes going tranquilly on. But she is serene, sweet, and richly dowered.

So should a woman be, when, youth passed, with her sheaves of experience she faces the twenty-five or thirty years which remain to her, in which to do wider work for her generation than that which she has already done in her home. Her children are grown up and out of her hands. Some of them are married, some are teaching, others in business; all have taken up their lives for themselves. This is the mother's hour, first for wise resting, next for wise undertaking. She must not suffer herself to be laid upon the shelf. Let her mark out for her own steps some road along which she may profitably travel.

One of the most successful and best known among American women, a woman whose knowledge of art and of applied science has made her famous, and who did excellent work at the World's Fair last summer, laying us all under lasting obligations, did nothing in public till her children were grown. Then she stood at the open door of autumn, elected to do something more, and valiantly began her work. Another and most charming gentlewoman, who has made herself the familiar acquaintance and the protector of the birds, writing of them in their little homes and haunts, only undertook this study and this writing when she had passed forty-five. Our village improvement societies, our clubs for study, and our Church work, many sided as it is, tax the energies of women who have the discretion, the judgment, the aplomb which bright and shadowy years have given them. They are our autumn queens.

The thing to avoid is a certain giving in, an acknowledgment even to one's self that the day has gone by. I have seen women begin deliberately to die at forty, absolutely losing their hold and fading away, through a sort of idea that this was the appropriate mental state, and rather in the order of holiness and piety than otherwise. Never was there a greater mistake. When one set of duties is accomplished, pass into the upper class, and so on, higher and higer, until one day the Master calls you to the fullness and richness of the life at home.

In a little talk of this kind one can but indicate faintly many problems. For some of us the path bristles with difficulties, and when this is not the case it is worse, for it is apparently hedged up. But courage: To the soul which trusts and hopes there is always a way out of every hard place, always a way on, always a gate of deliverance. And no better time occurs to look for this than now, when our Lord has spread the board and we sing in thankfulness the song of those who are "bringing in the sheaves."—Interior.

Come Nearer.

But you have come to Christ already and found relief? Then come nearer, nearer still. The closer your communion with Christ, the more comfort you will feel. The more you daily live by the side of the Fountain, the more you shall feel in yourself "a well of water springing up into everlasting life." John iv: 14. You shall not only be blessed yourself, but be a source of blessing to others. In this evil world you may not perhaps feel all the sensible comfort you could desire. But remember you cannot have two heavens. Perfect happiness is yet to come. The devil is not yet bound. There is a "good time coming" for all who feel their sins, and come to Christ and commit their souls to his keeping. When he comes again they shall be completely satisfied. They shall remember all the ways by which they were led, and see the need-be of everything that befell them. Above all, they shall wonder that they could ever live so long without Christ, and hesitate about coming to him.

GOLD DUST.

In Thee is every type fulfilled,
In Thee is every yearning stilled,
For perfect beauty, truth and love;
For Thou art always far above
The grandest glimpse of our ideal;
Yet more and more we know Thee real
And marvel more and more to see
Thine infinite reality.

MAGAZINES.

Blue and Gray. This magazine should gain in popularity both North and South. It is fair and just to both sides and any veteran no matter on which side he fought can read its well filled pages with pleasure and profit.

The current number, now before us contains an article on Antietam—Sharpsburg from the pen of Col. A. H. Nickerson (U.S.A. retired) in which the Colonel makes some forceful comments on the generalship on either side of that great battle. Capt. John H. Stevenson, continues his interesting "Adventures of an American Naval Officer Abroad." Dr. Conrad, C. S. N., describes the capture and burning of the U. S. Gunboat "Under Writer," a daring and brilliant feat. These are all fully illustrated in the best style. The whole magazine is filled with other short pointed and pithy articles and should be seen and read to be appreciated. It is published by the Current Publishing Co., Philadelphia, at $1.00 per year. Sample copy, ten cents.

Help From on High.

On the morning of the battle of Waterloo, the British and the Dutch forces were ready to begin the fight, but Blucher's Prussian soldiers had not yet come up. They were expected, however, in the course of the day, and Wellington, relying on them to carry out the schedule, determined to open the action. The order was given; the shrill whistle of bullets, the sullen roar of the cannon awoke the echoes of the quiet country side, and a dark cloud of dust and smoke settled over the smiling Belgian meadows. Fiercer and fiercer raged the conflict, as the slow, death-laden moments passed, and no Prussians appeared. By and by the French began to gain upon the allies, who, hard-pressed and discouraged, ever and again scanned eagerly but vainly that quarter of the horizon whence help was to come. Meantime the Prussian division had been trying manfully to meet their engagement, in the face of unexpected difficulties. So great were these that, at length, as the story goes, the officers of the staff went to Blucher, and said:

"We cannot do it. The roads are too heavy. The soldiers are tired, utterly disheartened; they refuse to go further. We must give it up; we are not responsible to achieve impossibilities."

Blucher could but acknowledge the truth of all this, but he was much disturbed by it. After some more parley he went out to speak to the army. Riding up and down before the weary, mutinous troops, he called out to them, in ringing tones, that reached far down the line: "My men, I have promised the British that we will be there. Would you have me break my word?"

The soldierly appeal went home. With a mighty shout they answered it, and with unswerving, dogged resolution they pushed on, after that, through the long, hard march, to save their leader's honor and their own. And so it was that just when the allies' last courage was failing them, and they were ready to give away before the repeated onslaught of Napoleon's soldiers, they caught sight, all along the sky, of a row of points of light—the sunshine on the Prussian spears. And soon the day was theirs.

You have a battle to fight, the great battle against the wrong and for the right. You are not strong enough to fight it out alone—not nearly strong enough. To win the victory, you need a heart brave and true and new, instead of the weak, failing one you have now, and no power of yours can make the change. But you have an ally, who pledges himself to bring his forces into your soul, and renew its strength and insure its victory. Shall you then call in this almighty aid, and wait with folded hands till it comes? No, a thousand times no! Begin the fight as Wellington did, trust as he did, to your confederate to hold to his engagement, and you will conquer, as he did.

But on that day of Waterloo Wellington ran a tremendous risk. Suppose the Prussians had refused to respond to Blucher's appeal; suppose the heavy march had proved indeed impossible; suppose they had reached the battlefield twenty minutes later; what then? Why then, in all probability, history would have read very differently—would, perhaps, have pointed at the famous Englishman as a rash, foolhardly commander, who ought not to have staked the destinies of Europe on so great a hazard. If there be any man or woman or child on this earth to-day, who shall say: "Trusting in God to renew the spirit of my mind, I mean to begin at once to strive against the old man, and to struggle for the new man," will he run any risk? None; not the smallest. There are no unforeseen obstacles, no impassable roads, between you and Jehovah. Go forward, then, and fight. The battle is the Lord's. He has "promised you to be there," and he will never "break his word."—Forward.

Temptations.

How can we avoid these temptations? Some temptations cannot be avoided; others can. If we have formed the appetite for strong drink, we can in some measure avoid the temptation to gratify the appetite by keeping away from the place where such liquor is sold, and by forsaking the company of those who indulge the appetite.

But there are temptations which cannot be avoided. They come to us when we are alone; they come without warning; they come unexpectedly. It is our business then, not to avoid, but to conquer. As Luther said: "We cannot prevent the swallows from flying over our heads, but we can prevent them from building their nests into our hair." How can we conquer?

1. By having our minds imbued with the principles of God's word. It was in this way that the psalmist expected to conquer. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee." It was in this way that Christ met and foiled the tempter. But with the knowledge of the word there must also be a willingness to obey it. Eve knew what God had said to her, but she trusted in the devil's word rather than in God's.

2. By realizing that God's eye is upon us, and that He is near to help and uphold. Others had been doing wrong, but Nehemiah said: "So did not I because of the fear of God." It was this sense of God's presence that enabled Joseph and Daniel to overcome their temptations.

When we look to Jesus we can reverently say.

"Temptations lose their power,
When Thou art nigh."

Principles and Their Application.

A rebellion against Romanism has been threatened by rum in this country. The saloon-keepers, nine-tenths of whom are in good and regular standing in that communion, feel that a hint, or something weaker, has been directed by some of the Roman Catholic ecclesiastics against their business, and they are very heated in their threats as to what they are going to do about it. True, Bishop Watterson did not say that saloon-keepers should not remain members of church societies or of the Church. He did not say that if they did not quit selling liquor in unlawful and disreputable ways they must leave the Church. What he said and did was a much milder and softer thing. Saloon-keepers must not be officers in these societies, and in the future should not be admitted to their membership, and if they sell in an unlawful way they should mend their ways, or—quit the saloon business. And Satolli has stood by the Bishop in his rulings for his own diocese. Of course these rulings do not apply to other dioceses, and yet saloon-keepers in general have had their feelings hurt, and feel that they have been treated discourteously, as it were, by those from whom they should have expected courtesy, and courtesy alone. And so the threat has been made in various parts of the United States that if the Roman Catholic Church undertakes to carry out this policy there will be trouble.

Certain ecclesiastics have been interviewed on this point, and have stated that while the principles of these rules and decisions are good their influence must be largely moral, and that there is a great deal of difference between principles and their application. And we greatly fear that this is the casuistry that will still keep Rome from any real opposition to rum.

It is right in this direction that moral shipwreck lies for a church or an individual. For an individual to assent to a certain course as right and not to follow it, this is to "hold the truth in unrighteousness;" this is to make right a theory, but not a practice. For a church to hold certain principles and then not apply them is to divorce morality from religion.

The Church of Rome has set a most melancholy example of this. While holding to much evangelical truth, she has not only tolerated, but has taught, so much that is pernicious, in faith and morals that some of the worst errors in doctrine have been held by her, and some of the worst crimes of history have been perpetrated by her authority. And it has come to be a well-known fact that for one to be a communicant in that body does not guarantee that he shall be free from gross violations of the moral law. These people may have been taught principle and beliefs, but with too many, alas! their application has been a different thing.

This is not a railing accusation, and we all of us do well to question ourselves as to our own lives, and the application to ourselves of the principles to which we have given assent. Do we insist on practicing what we believe as to Christ, the Church, the Sabbath, the Bible, prayer? We know the truth as to these, or, at least, we know truths about them. Do we know our duty and do it? Happy then are we. Do we know our duty and do it not? This is the way to make shipwreck of faith. This is the road that leads to utter moral ruin.

Christ's reproof of the Pharisees was for this very thing. They were right as to doctrine, belief, principles, but they divorced life from faith, and became dead while they lived. The Sermon on the Mount contradicted the Pharisaism that "principles and their application are different things." To the Pharisee they might be. To God and the true child of God they must ever be the same thing.

Assent to the truth, and then stand by it whatever the consequences. Though the heavens fall, though life be forfeited, stand by the faith. This leads to confession of Christ, and to his service. This leads to a reading of God's Word, and to living by it. This leads to prayer, and to a life as in God's sight. This leads to a life whose actual practice shall be on the high plane demanded by righteousness. To believe and not to do; to hear and not to obey; to assent and not to put in practice—this is to destroy the possibility of developing good character, and of exerting good influence. To profess and then to follow on; to see the duty and then to do it whatever may result—this is to be spiritually vital and effective; this is to do the will of God, and to be alive and to abide forever.—Herald and Presbyter.

Your Light—Not You.

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven."—Matt. v. 16.

Let your light shine—not you. It is this which has often given the gravest handle to the world—men have too frequently made use of God's light to show up their own gifts or graces. There are lamps so loaded with painted figures and ornamentation that the light does little more than display these, and there are people who are for ever speaking about God, but it is not difficult to see that their God is made strictly in their own image, and so they darken with self the light that should speak for the Light of Lights. Michael Angelo was accustomed to stick a candle on his pasteboard cap, so that he might not fling the shadow of himself on the work he was doing. This is a great, a covetable grace in things spiritual, which we all need to seek after. "Let your light shine before men"—not upon them, like a policeman's lantern flashed suddenly before a detected frightened criminal—but before them with steady winsomeness that cannot fail in the end to attract their thoughts and hearts. I knew a rich and godly merchant who was solicited for a subscription for a philanthropic object. He was busy, but at once said he would give £5. On the sheet being presented to him on which to sign his name and gift, he saw that a neighbouring merchant had subscribed £50. "What's this? what's this? he asked; "this matter must be more important than I thought. Tell me more about it," and in the end he subscribed £50 also. By the first merchant letting his light shine, the second one saw his good works, and so he also glorified the Father whose Spirit was in them both, "but," as he said, "if I had not seen that man's light I would not have known the importance of this work." How many good works languish alone for want of a little light cast upon them!—not that we, but that our Father may be glorified. How differently all things look when light is cast upon them! How the dullest country lane becomes as a bit of Paradise in the bright sunshine! Even so may the self-evident light of love for God shed such a beauty on the commonest deed done for His sake as to lift men's thoughts unconsciously to the great Fount of all goodness and gladness. So let your light shine.—London Presbyterian.

The Hasty Word.

To think before you speak is so wise an axiom that one would hardly think it needful to emphasize it by repetition. And yet in how many cases the hasty temper flashes out in the hasty word, and the latter does its work with the precision and the pain of the swift stiletto! Singular enough, the hasty word oftenest wounds those who love one another dearly, and the very closeness of their intimacy affords them opportunity for the sudden thrust. We know the weak points in the armor of our kinsman and our friend; we are aware of his caprices, and ordinarily are tender and compassionate even of his vanities and small fancies and whims, but there dawns a day when it is written in the book of fate that we shall be as cruel as we are loving. We are cold, or tired, or hungry. We are anxious over unpaid bills, or our expected letters have not arrived, or one of the children is ailing, and we dread the outcome of the malady. So politeness fails us, fortitude is vanquished, philosophy is in abeyance, and we say that which we repent in sackcloth and ashes. But though the hasty word may be forgiven, it is not at once forgotten. It has flawed the crystal of our friendship; the place may be cemented, but there is a shadowy scar on the gleaming surface. Oh, if the word of haste had but been left unspoken; if the strong hand of patience had but held back the sword as it was about to strike! —Harper's Bazar.

FOREIGN MISSION COMMITTEE NOTES.

A regular meeting of the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States was held in Nashville, Tenn., on Sept. 10th, 1894, commencing at 9 : 35 a. m.

The meeting was opened with prayer.

The Treasurer read his report for August 1894, showing $4,877.17 received from all sources during the month ; balance on hand August 31st, of General Fund, $4,616 91 : Congo Boat Fund, $10,358.95.

A letter from Rev. J. L. Stuart, of Hangchow, China, dated July 2d, was reported, in which he mentions seven additions to the Church, and twenty-three applications for baptism. Sixteen of the applicants were kept waiting in order to test their fidelity.

On motion it was ordered that Rev. H. B. Pratt be sent to Cuba as soon as the way is clear.

A letter from Mr. Pratt dated August 8th mentioned twenty-four additions to the Church as the result of two meetings near San Marcos, Texas.

Rev. A. T. Graybill, in a comm.unication of August 21st, referred to the expected return of himself, and Messrs. Lee and Gunn to Linares, Mexico, at an early day.

A number of other letters from missionaries were reported to the Committee.

Miss Annie Dowd, now at Seattle, Washington, was authorized to return to Japan if her physician considers it safe for her to do so, and suitable arrangements can be made.

Mrs. S. R. Gammon, nee Miss W. B. Humphreys, of Virginia, and Miss M. Blanche Dunlap, also of Virginia, were appointed missionaries, and assigned to the work with the Southern Brazil Mission.

Rev. B. H. Franklin, now of Nashville, Tenn., who had been previously appointed a missionary, was authorized to go to China as soon as the way is clear.

Mr. W. Butler Harrison, of Lebanon, Ky., was appointed a missionary, and China designated as his field.

Mr. W. C. McCluer, of St. Charles county, Mo., was received under the care of the Committee with the expectation of his being appointed a missionary at some future day.

Rev. S. R. Gammon, Mrs. S. R. Gammon and Miss M. Blanche Dunlap were authorized to proceed to Brazil as soon as arrangements can be made for their journey.

The usual routine business was attended to by the Committee.

News from the East dated as late as August 13th indicated that our missionaries were not in danger at the time.

The appeals for more laborers, sent in by some of our workers are constantly becoming more and more urgent. The destitutions in the lands of darkness are awful. Who will go and work for Christ?

The following extracts from letters have been kindly furnished us from the Foreign Missions office :

From Rev. C K. Cumming, Maiko, Japan, dated August 17th, 1894 :

"We are all under many obligations for the kind thoughtfulness at the home office that prompted the message. We, in Japan, are now, in no danger at all. The seat of war is Korea, and we here, have been in no way affected by it, as yet. The success of the Japanese has been so phenomenal heretofore that the idea of our being in danger has not suggested itself. From what we can learn definitely the Chinese have, practically, been driven out of Korea, and the Japanese soldiers have advanced into China beyond Cheefoo, and have actually captured one of the outlying points of defense of Peking itself. On the sea, also, the Japanese forces have been successful. This is what report says ; part of it needs confirmation, as yet. The Japanese talk as if confident of final victory—and their discipline and dash show well in contrast with the lack of discipline and the sluggishness of the Chinese. What the final outcome may be we can't yet tell, of course. We can't tell to what an extent China may finally be aroused and what she may then do. But it does not, at present, seem as if we will be in any danger. However this may be, I again, in behalf of the Mission, express my appreciation, of the thoughtfulness that prompted the cablegram."

From Rev. S. I. Woodbridge, Chinkiang, China, dated August 8th, 1894 :

"Just now China is at war with Japan. The latter is undoubtedly in the wrong in wanting to annex Corea. Several battles have been fought. Japan has a superb army and navy and I think will defeat this country. The Society in China which is always seeking to overthrow the present dynasty is called the Ko Lao Hwei. If China meets with reverses this society will rise against the government. It may be very serious for us all in this part of the country. The poor Chinese are ignorant of nationalities and nationals. Whether the work will suffer remains to be seen. God will over-rule all for His own glory, we may be sure. It may be that the time has come for the overthrow of China. The Lord has been patient so long with these millions of idols and unrighteousness in high places. If a new China does arise it seems to me that our work will be furthered. In the meantime every day brings us news of horrible bloodshed. I am preaching away, anyhow. The summer has been quite hot but is cooler now. You have heard of the death of Mrs. Haden, and little Georgia Graham. Pray for the kingdom and for us."

A letter from Rev. D. G. Armstrong, Jr., of Lavras, Brazil, announces the expected return of himself and wife, and Miss Arianna Henderson to the United States of America. Mr. Armstrong's address after October 1st is to be Sa'em, Va. Mrs. Armstrong's failing health necessitated the change. Miss Henderson returns for a rest after about ten years of faithful work. Her health is not good.

Concord Presbytery :—Met, at Bethphage church on 11th inst. Rev. R. P. Pell, moderator ; Rev. J. A. Ramsay and Ruling Elder S. C. Rankin clerks. Rev. J. M. Rose preached the opening sermon. Presbyterial sermon on Observance of the Sabbath was preached by Rev. A. T. Graham. First church Concord presented a call for services of Rev. W. C. Alexander, of Mt. Airy. The pastoral relation between Rev. D. Munroe and the Newton church was dissolved.

The Centennial of Bethphage Church :—Was observed during the late session of Concord Presbytery. Rev. Dr. Wm. W. Pharr presided over the exercises. Rev. Dr. J. Rumple, a son of the church, preached a sermon and Rev. B. F. Wilson delivered an address. A historical address prepared by Mr. R. W. Fleming was read by Dr. J. L. Lafferty. Addresses were made by Rev. Dr. William W. Pharr, Rev. R. S. Arrowood and others. Bethphage has given five of her sons to the gospel ministry : Rev. J. Rumple, D. D., Rev. Thomas J. Allison, Bev. Walter W. Killough, Rev. J. E. L. Winecoff ; Rev. Thomas E. Winecoff.

In its one hundred years of existence, seven pastors have cared for this church : Rev. John Carrigan, Rev. James B. Stafford, Rev. James Elijah Morrion, Rev. Walter W. Pharr, D. D. ; Rev. William W. Pharr, D.D. ; Rev. R. S. Arrowood, and the seventh and present pastor, Rev. W. M. Shaw. Rev. William W. Pharr enjoyed the longest pastorate, 26 years, and during this time was the trying four years of the late civil war. At the close of the war, Bethphage lost every colored member ; they went out in a body, 40 of them. But long ago, the church recovered from this depletion, and is now in flourishing condition, out of debt, full benches of elders and deacons, four missionary societies, a good Sunday-school, and a large and consistent membership.—[Extracted from the Charlotte Observer.]

Whiteville :—We closed an interesting and profitable meeting here last Tuesday evening. Rev. W. H. Evans, of Salisbury, Tenn., a Methodist brother did the preaching. The services were held in the Methodist church. Bro. Evans preaches the Word with great earnestness and simplicity. The good Lord blesses the labors of His faithful servant. The churches in this place were greatly revived.

The entire town was stirred. Twenty-six came out and publicly professed their faith in Christ. Twenty-one of these united with the Methodist church, three with the Presbyterian church, and two will join the Baptist church, at the first opportunity. There are many others, we trust, who will soon connect themselves with the several churches of the place. Bro. Evans will hold a meeting next week, in Bartlett, Tenn., and the prayers of our good people follow him.

Little River Church, Orange County :—We have recently had a very pleasant series of meetings at Little River church. Our minister, Rev. H. S. Bradshaw, commenced services the second Sabbath in August and closed on Friday following. Rev. R. E. C. Lawson arrived on Monday. He came to us in the fullness of the gospel, and his preaching was, "In demonstration of the Spirit and of power." Twenty-three were received into the church. Two by baptism, nineteen on profession, and two by certificate. This church an unusually interesting service on the second Sabbath in September. Rev. T. U. Faucette, of Oxford, preached to a large congregation in the morning, choosing for his subject, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." After which the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. Two persons were received into the church on profession. After a plentiful dinner spread in the grove, the congregation assembled for a second service, conducted by our much esteemed minister, Rev. H. S. Bradshaw. Bro. Faucette was a beloved pastor of this church about twenty years ago. While many faces were new to him, all gave him a cordial welcome, and were delighted to be visited by one that was so near and dear to our parents, and of whom we have heard them speak so often. His stay with us was short, but will be long remembered. May heaven's richest blessings abide with him through the vicissitudes of life.

Peace Institute :—This staunch and beautiful Presbyterian ship glided out upon the voyage of another session last week, with sails full set and cheery colors flying. The corps of teachers is complete, with the valuable accessions of Prof. Darnall (son of the Rev. Dr. Darnall) and Prof. and Mrs. Bryant (formerly of Stonewall Jackson Institute) in the department of music. The student body is large and the number of boarders greater than has been present at any opening for many years On last Sabbath the pastor of the Presbyterian church in Raleigh delivered the opening sermon in the presence of a large congregation from Phil. 3 : 12, "I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus.' At night another large audience had the pleasure of hearing an admirable and instructive sermon from the Rev. Edward Mack, of St. Louis, upon the soul as the temple of God. Eleven members have been recently added to the church. D.

Charlotte C. H. and Drake's Branch :—Your correspondent, the pastor of the historic church of Charlotte C. H., Va., and of its youngest daughter at Drake's Branch, is en route to the Virginia mountains for a brief season of rest and recuperation. This pastorate, begun so happily a year ago has been attended with the blessing of the Good Shepherd, and has been marked by an encouraging degree of success. The present writer, who succeeded the Rev. J. M. W. Elder in the evangelistic work under charge of the First Presbyterian church of your city, assisted on last Sabbath in the installation of this beloved brother as pastor of Bethlehem church, in Charlotte county. The Rev. Dr. C. C. Hersmann, of the Seminary preached a most uplifting sermon from Eph. i. 6. After which his assistant delivered the charges. Thus was formed this sacred and tender relation between a devoted pastor and a noble congregation. Their church building, recently dedicated by the Rev. W. W. Moore, D. D., is one of the handsomest country churches to be found. The pastor and family are living in the nice new looking manse near by, and, as their many friends will be pleased to learn, are well and happy.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

[Correspondence of the N C. Presbyterian.]

Work in Chesterfield County :—Just home from a trip of eight days in Chesterfield county, S. C. Joined teams with a godly Baptist brother in a meeting at Ruby in that county, eight miles north of the court house. It was a central point and the large crowd at the first meeting kept increasing in size and interest to the very last service, which numbered over 600. Twenty-five publicly professed their faith in Christ, and there were near 100 requests for prayers by inquirers each night for the last three nights of the meeting. A good Presbyterian brother of Scotch descent entertained us, though he is not a member of the church, as no Presbyterian church is in reach.

Pee Dee Presbytery, South Carolina, covers this territory. Lancaster and Chesterfield counties offer a fine field for Home Missions. They have some weak organizations which could and ought to be made the basis of an earnest effort to extend Presbyterianism in those counties. The community in which we held the meeting was purely Baptist, and regarded us with suspicion, but, when they found we preached Christ and Him crucified, were attentive and urgent for us to return soon. Would that the South Carolina brethren would put an earnest man in that field. A.

Indiantown in Harmony Presbytery :—The Southern Presbyterian says : We had a gracious visitation of the Holy Spirit at our mid-summer communion at Indiantown church. There was only the simple service of the communion after two days preaching by the pastor. The Church was greatly revived. The whole membership seem to experience the influence, and five were added to the Church on examination ; three came from the Sabbath-school, the other two were reared in the communion, one a young man recently married, the other a young mother of a family, and all seemed to feel deeply the gravity of the step they were taking.

DOMESTIC.

Rev. Dr. S. B. Jones, a noted educator of the Methodist Church, died at Spartanburg, S. C., a few days ago in his 59th year.

Rev. Walter C. Clapp, an Episcopal minister, has become a convert to Roman Catholicism and was received into the Church of the Apostle in New York city. He is 32 years of age and it is supposed will become a priest.

The Independent says : One of the principal items of interest in connection with the Ocean Grove exercises during the past summer has been the completion and dedication of the new auditorium seating about 10,000 people and costing $66,000. It is a beautiful building mostly of glass and iron ceiled with Georgia pine. But the most beautiful thing about it was that at its dedication it was entirely free of debt. It is said to be the largest building anywhere exclusively devoted to Christian worship.

FOREIGN.

A dispatch from Shanghai to the Central News says that the foreign missionaries in the Shin King province are fleeing to New Chwang, fearing violence at the hands of the Chinese soldiers, who, it is reported, are burning Christian chapels.

An Imperial edict of the Chinese ruling powers was issued expressing sorrow at the murder of James Wylie, the Scotch Presbyterian by Chinese fanatics in the Minchwang district. The Viceroy, Li Hung Chang, held the Mandarian commanding in the district responsible for failing to preserve order and protect the foreigners. He was degraded from office and heavily fined. The soldiers who actually assailed Mr. Wylie and the officers in command, who made no effort to prevent the murderous attack, were promptly beheaded by Imperial order. The European protests against this murder were so strong that the Viceroy spared no effort to mete out condign punishment upon all concerned. A further order directs that the mission house which was destroyed by the fanatics shall be rebuilt at the public cost, and that a special tax shall be levied on the district for affording a pecuniary recompense to the relatives of Mr. Wylie.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

Memphis Presbytery : The matters of Licensure and Ordination and Evangelists in Foreign Fields were postponed to spring meeting. After free discussion a proposition from the Presbytery of Western District for consolidation with this Presbytery was agreed to and an overture to Synod anent the matter was adopted. Messrs. Percy Irwin, J. O. Shelby and W. R. McCalla were received as candidates for the ministry. In view of the recent lynching atrocity within the bounds of the Presbytery resolutions were adopted bearing "most emphatic testimony against any and every attempt on the part of individuals te take the law into their own hands," and stating that "so long as we are blessed with an organized government and the forms of law all forms of mob rule are crimes against God and the State, and directly subversive of morality and civil order."

Presbytery of Augusta : At a special meeting on Sept. 4th inst., Rev. Dr. James Woodrow was dismissed to unite with the Presbytery of South Carolina. In dismissing him the Presbytery unanimously expressed :

1st. Its high appreciation of his great learning and ability, his conscientious regard for the law of the Church and unwavering fidelity to every duty, his abundant labors and distinguished services in the cause of Christ, his purity of character and devoted piety.

2d. Its profound regret that his honored name is no longer to appear upon the roll as one of its members.

3d. Its abiding respect and love for him, and the earnest prayer that the blessing of God may rest upon him in his new relations.

Concord Presbytery : Minutes from the stated clerk have not yet come to hand, but a few jottings of proceedings are given in the column of "Religious Intelligence."

UNION SEMINARY MAGAZINE.

This is a magazine published by the students of Union Theological Seminary, Hampden Sidney, Va. It is just entering upon its sixth year. During these six years it has become an almost indispensable part of the seminary. The magazine has just come under a new management which proposes to make it more emphatically a seminary magazine than ever before. It is their purpose to have more contributions from the faculty and those connected with the seminary, who are specialists in their several departments. To this end Dr. W. W. Moore has again kindly consented to favor the magazine with a series of his delightful articles extending through the entire year. The general subject of this series will be, "The Testimony of the Ancient Monuments to the Truth of the Bible." These articles will be invaluable to every Bible student.

There will also be another series extending through the entire year by the Rev. Dr. T. C. Johnson, Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity. The general subject of this series will be,' 'The Organization of the Individual Church in the New Testament Times." Those who have read the vigorous articles from Dr. Johnson's pen in our Church papers recently know that there is a treat in store for the magazine readers this year. Besides these regular series there will be articles from the other members of the Faculty. We give a partial list of the articles which will appear in the September-October number.

"Conditions of Success in the Gospel Ministry." Rev. T. R. English, D. D. ; "Reminiscences of John Randolph," Rev R. L. Dabney, D. D., LL.D ; "The Cruciform Corroborations of the Early Na ratives in Genesis," Rev. W. W. Moore, D. D., LL.D. : "Were Infants Members of the New Testament Church ?" Rev. T. C. Johnson, D. D.

Besides these there will be many shorter articles making altogether a magazine of seventy-two large pages of reading matter, this makes a very valuable magazine—well worth the subscription price which is only the nominal sum of one dollar per year.

The magazine is in such a financial condition that it needs additional subscribers. It does not beg but gives "value received." Are there not many among the friends and alumni of the seminary and in the Church at large who will come up lo the help of this whole enterprise on the part of the students ? All subscriptions should be addressed to NOTICE.

Ministers and elders who expect to attend the approaching meeting of Wilmington Presbytery, to be held at Hebron church, in Duplin county, commencing the 11th of October will please notify me at once at Kenansville so that homes may be provided in advance, and it is absolutely essential that those who propose to come by public conveyance should thus notify me; as the church is twenty-two miles from the depot and conveyances will be provided only for those who notify me of their intention of coming. Delegates will be met at Magnolia on the W. and W. road on Wednesday evening the 10th, carried out to Kenansville to spend the night, and over to the church next morning. Those who come by public conveyance may expect to remain until Monday morning, as it will be impossible to get them back there before that time, and it is to be hoped that delegates will take due notice thereof and govern themselves accordingly. We hope to have a full meeting of Presbytery as all will be amply provided for.

TEMPERANCE SCHOOLS.

The laws of North Carolina require the public schools of the State to use text books which will set before the pupils the nature of alcohol drinks and the ruinous physical effects of their use. It is a good law, but the impression abroad is that it is not observed by county superintendents. We do not know how this is. Instil temperance knowledge into yonr children and the barrooms will go. Here is the law :

[Laws of N. C. session of 1891 ; pages 154, 155 ; chapter 169.]

"Section 1, That the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and special instruction as to their effects uoon the human system, in connection with several divisions of the subject of physiology and hygiene, shall be included in the branches of study taught in the common or public schools of the State of North Carolina, and shall be studied and taught as thoroughly and in the same manner as other like required branches are in said schools, by the use of text books in the hands of pupils and orally in case of pupils unable to read, and shall be taught by all teachers and studied by all pupils in all schools in this State supported wholly or in part by public money."

"Sec. 2. That the text books used for the instruction to be given in the preceding section for primary and intermediate grades shall give at least one-fourth of their space to the consideration of the nature and effect of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and the text books used in the highest gaades of the public schools shall give at least twenty pages to the consideration of this subject."

Sec. 3. That no certificate to teach in the public schools in this State shall hereafter be granted to any applicant who has not passed a satisfactory examination in the study of the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics and of their effects upon the human system, in connection with the several divisions of this subject of relative physiology and hygiene."

"Sec. 4. That it shall be the duty of the proper officers in control of any school described in the first section of this act to enforce the provisions of this act, and any such officer, school director, committee, superintendent or teacher who shall refuse or neglect to comply with the requirements of this act, or shall neglect or fail to make proper provisions for the instruction required and in the manner specified by this act for all pupils in each and every school under his control and supervision, shall be removed from office and the vacancy filled as in other cases."

"Sec. 5. This act shall be in force and effect from and after the first day of August, eighteen hundred and ninety-one.

Ratified the 27th day of February A. D., 1891."

COMPARATIVE STUDY OF THE GOSPELS.

No effort to construct a continuous narrative of the Saviour's life has proved entirely satisfactory. Nor will this appear strange when it is remembered that no one of the Gospels gives a full account of his life, and that no one of the evangelists was careful to follow closely the chronological order. John's narratives are most nearly chronological in their order, but he limits his record to accounts of particular events or occasions in the life of Jesus, and hence is quite incomplete. In view of these things, it is only by the most careful comparison of the Gospel records with each other, and with other historical records, that we can reach anything like a connected account of what Jesus did and taught. The object of this article is to give some hints as to how the Gospels may be studied and compared by those who wish to follow the life of Jesus continuously.

Any attempt to determine either the exact period or the length of Jesus' life, will bring to notice the fact that the Gospel records are very meager both in chronological data, and in references to persons and events of contemporaneous history. The only chronological data given by Matthew are his references to Herod the king, to Archelaus, to Herod the tetrarch, to Pontius Pilate, and to Caiaphas the high-priest. In no place does he assist us by naming any particular year. Mark gives still less. He speaks of Herod the tetrarch, whom he names, Herod the king, and of Pilate the procurator. Luke is more specific. He speaks of Zacharias "a priest of the course of Abijah;" gives the length of time between the announcement to Elizabeth and that to Mary; mentions a decree of Cæsar requiring a census of the empire; gives the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar as the year in which John Baptist began baptizing; gives the age of Jesus at the time of his baptism; speaks of Herod the tetrarch, and of Annas and Caiaphas as high priests. John mentions only Pilate and Caiaphas. Besides this he gives certain data, and indeed all that we possess, to assist in determining the length of Jesus' ministry; there are three passovers, mentioned by name, a feasts of tabernacles, a feast of dedication, and "a feast of the Jews," the name not given, perhaps a passover. All of these occurred during his public ministry.

A comparison and combination of these data, furnish the basis on which to construct a theory both as to the time and the length of Jesus' life. By a careful comparison of these statements with each other, and with contemporaneous Roman and Jewish history and customs, we can reach quite satisfactory results.

Turning to a study of the record of the events of Jesus' life, we find occasion for the most careful comparison. This is clearly shown by an examination of the records of his birth. Only Matthew and Luke give any assistance here; but their records are quite different. Matthew tells us only of the visit of the angel to Joseph, of the birth at Bethlehem, of the visit of the Magi, of Herod's persecution, and of the flight to Egypt and the return to Nazareth. Luke gives quite a different record. He mentions the annunciation to Zacharias at Jerusalem, and that to Mary at Nazareth six months later; the visit of Mary to Elisabeth; the birth of John Baptist; the occasion of Joseph and Mary's presence at Bethlehem; the birth in the stable; the visit of the shepherds; the circumcision; and the presentation at the temple. The only fact mentioned by both is the birth at Bethlehem.

A comparison of these two records raises the question: Where in Luke is the place for the events connected with Jesus's birth as recorded by Matthew? There is much confusion here in the minds of Bible readers We have heard persons speak of the visit of the shepherds, and of the Magi, as though they occurred on the same night. A hymn in a recent Christmas exercise, after speaking of the visit of the sheperds, says:

"Wonderful was the star in heaven
Guiding the Magi to the stall,
Where in a crude and lonely manger
Jesus was born the Saviour of all."

(Italics are mine.) The Magi did not come to the stall. A comparion of the Gospel records reveals the reason for the mistake. Matthew says nothing of the shepherds, and Luke says nothing of the Magi; but Luke says that the visit of the shepherds was on the night of the birth, while Matthew says the coming of the Magi occurred, "When Jesus was born in Bethlehem." These records, if not carefully compared with other statements, very easily lead to confusion. But when it is discovered that we are told by Luke that Jesus was born in a stable, and by Matthew that the Magi found him in a house, we may see that here is at least a hint that the visits did not occur on the same night. This hint is strengthened by the fact that when Mary presented Jesus in the temple forty days after his birth, she came with "a pair of turtledoves or two young, pigeons" the offering of the poor; it seems reasonable that if previous to this time she had received the "gold, frankincense, and myrrh," she would have been able, as she certainly was disposed, to come with the offering prescribed in the law (see Lev. 12). These, with other considerations, render it quite probable that the events of Matthew 2, find their place in Luke 2:39, following the return from Jerusalem to Bethlehem not mentioned by Luke; Luke omits any reference to the flight to Egypt.

If we turn to study the records of the events of the public life of our Lord, we shall find abundant need, and reward as well, for the most careful comparison. In Matthew 3:13 to 4:11; Mark 1:9-13; Luke 3:21, 22, and 4:1-13, we have the record of the baptism and temptation of Jesus. The verses immediately following those cited seem to say that, after his temptation, the Lord entered immediately upon his Galilean ministry. This impression will be heightened by the statement of John 1; 43, that Jesus went to Galilee immediately after the occurrence of events that were evidently closely connected with his baptism. But a study of John 1:19 to 4:54 will render it quite clear that neither one of the returns to Galilee there mentioned by John is the return mentioned by the synoptists as above cited, but that the return mentioned by them occurred later. In defense of this position, note the following: In John 1:19 to 4:54 we have what is quite surely a continuous narrative; but this narrative begins, evidently, with events immediately connected with Jesus' baptism and temptation, before he had secured any disciples, and while John was yet engaged in baptizing at Bethabara, or Bethany, beyond Jordan; it closes with Jesus at Cana in Galilee, with John very evidently yet engaged in his work, though having removed to "Ænon near to Salim" Within the period covered by this narrative of John, Jesus had visited Cana in Galilee, and Capernam also; returned to Jerusalem to a passover; from thence went into Judea, where for some time he taught and baptized; went thence through Samaria to Cana in Galilee a second time. All this seems to have been done while John was yet teaching and baptizing. But the return to Galilee mentioned by Matthew and Mark, as above cited, which was quite surely the same as that mentioned by Luke, was occasioned by the fact that "John was cast into prison," and hence after his work had closed. These considerations lead to the conclusion that there is a break in the narratives of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, immediately after their record of the baptism and temptation, and that the connection is to be supplied by that which we find in John 1:29 to 5:47, which leaves Jesus again at Jerusalem. Hearing at that time, very probably, of the imprisonment of John, he withdrew from Jerusalem, and with his disciples returned and entered upon his Galilean ministry, as Matthew, Mark, and Luke declare.

There is evidently a break also in John's Gospel, at the close of chapter 5. In this chapter, we see Jesus at Jerusalem, as above stated, while chapter 6:1 presents him crossing the sea of Galilee. But by a little care we can supply the gap quite satisfactorily. A comparion of Matthew 14:15-33; Mark 6:34-53; Luke 9:10-17, and John 6:1-21, shows clearly that these are parallel records, each being an account of the feeding of the five thousand. This shows where John 6:1-21 fits in the synoptic Gospels, and gives us the record of Matthew 4:11 to 14:15, and the corresponding parts of Mark and Luke, with which to supply the break in John. That this disposition of the material furnished by the synoptists at this place is allowable, is rendered reasonable by the fact that, while they show that the feeding of the five thousand occurred after the death of John Baptist, they show as well that the beginning of the connected record dates back to while he was yet living, and that the events by them recorded transpired in the intervening period. If this arrangement of material is correct, then between the close of John 5 and the first verse of John 6 there was an interval of about a year *

* * * * * * * * *

As to a method of studying, comparatively, the Gospel records, I may suggest that I have found, for myself, the best plan to read each Gospel separately, and make a complete list, as I read, of every event mentioned by each writer, along with any chronological data furnished; then, with this and a good reference Bible, compare the records, watching carefully for the slightest variations in expression which may indicate special shades of meaning. I do not think any study more remunerative to the Bible student than the most careful comparison of the Gospel records.

May we all, as we study, be led to believe ever more fully that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God;" and, believing, we shall "have life through his name."—Rev. C. J. Kephart, in Sunday School Times.

*This is upon the theory that the feast of John 5:1 was a passover, as the writer thinks is probable.

The sample weighs 33 ounces, and when dug had branches running off toward Haywood, Madison and Henderson counties.

DOMESTIC.

Two families dining together at Tampa, Fla., last Sunday partook of ice-cream made from condensed milk. Members of both families were taken violently ill and it is thought two of the children will die.

Hugh Brown sued the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company for $20,000 damages for loss of his right arm in their service. The jury awarded $10,000.

The planters of Mississippi are represented as much depressed at the outlook for cotton. Heavy and incessant rains have caused rust, rotting, shedding and sprouting of bolls.

A cyclone blew a train of cars from the track on Cairo branch of the Iron Mountain road in Missouri. Two men were killed and a score of people injured, many of them fatally. This is the account: The train and the cyclone met, and the wind lifted the entire line of coaches and landed them at a distance of 20 feet from the track, almost turning them completely over. Those who were not hurt seriously hastened to free themselves and rescue those who were not so fortunate. While these efforts were making fire broke out adding to the terrors of the occasion.

A wealthy cotton firm of New Orleans sued the Illinois Central Railroad for $500,000 for loss of cotton by fire. The claim was the fire originated by sparks from a switching engine. The judge decided that the burden of proof rested with the claimants and they did not meet the requirement.

A boy ten years old, son of Ferdinand Ward (of the famous firm of Grant and Ward) and living with his uncle at Putnam, Conn., was kidnapped on Thursday of last week while on his way to school. He was recovered from two men in a buggy at Webster, Mass., and the men captured. The boy will come into possession of $80,000 when he becomes of age.

Congressman Morse, of Massachusetts, was sued by Helen M. Cougar, a woman's suffrage advocate, for $25,000 damages. The verdict was in favor of the defendant.

About $60,000 has been collected in Minnesota for the benefit of the sufferers by the forest fires in that State.

A special to the N. O. Picayune from Scranton, Miss., says: A new and unforseen danger threatens the pine forest of the western portion of Jackson county. News has just been received from Vancleave that a small caterpillar that travels in crowds like the army worm has attacked the pine trees, completely denuding them of foliage. It is said that they congregate in such immense numbers that the limbs of the smaller trees bend beneath their weight. One gentleman informed the Picayune reporter that he has seventy-five acres of timber land. He estimates half of the trees have been attacked and covered with worms. They appeared about twelve days ago and are traveling southeastward. So far, it cannot be definitely stated whether they will destroy the timber or not.

God in His mysterious Providence has called from a thrice stricken family, in the midst of his usefulness, JESSE LEE KENNERLY, in the 28th year of his age; the stay and support of his mother, "and she was a widow." He was one of the few who discard the pleasures of youth and devote their time to the comfort and support of others. The church and Sabbath school of Mooresville have lost a faithful member and the community a kind and obliging neighbor.

FOR THE FAMILY.

NOW I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP.

The fire upon the hearth is low,
And there is stillness everywhere;
Like troubled spirits, here and there
The firelight shadows fluttering go.
And as the shadows round me creep,
A childish treble breaks the gloom,
And softly from a farther room
Comes: "Now I lay me down to sleep."

And, somehow, with that little prayer
And that sweet treble in my ears,
My thought goes back to distant years
And lingers with a dear one there;
And, as I hear the child's amen,
My mother's faith comes back to me,
Couched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hands again.

Oh! for an hour in that dear place!
Oh! for the peace of that dear time!
Oh! for that childish trust sublime!
Oh! for a glimpse of mother's face!
Yet, as the shadows round me creep,
I do not seem to be alone
Sweet magic of that treble tone—
And "now I lay me down to sleep"

Items for Lady Readers.

Celia Thaxter, the poetess, died suddenly at the Appledore House, Isle of Shoals, on Sunday night, August 26th. She was born in Portsmouth, N. H., June 29th, 1835. When a girl she went with her father and mother to live at the lighthouse on White Island, and she has never willingly left the ocean since. The family moved from the lighthouse when she was ten years old, but they went to another island, Appledore, Isle of Shoals. In 1851, when only sixteen, she married the late Levi Lincoln Thaxter, her guardian and teacher, a Browning scholar. She then went to the mainland to live, but always returned to Appledore in summer. In speaking of her writing she once said: "I never sought the public ear, but writing and publishing were forced on me. I had written some verses in pencil on an envelope I happened to have in my pocket and sent them to a friend, a lady whom I knew sympathized with my homesickness for the sea. She gave them to a relative connected with the Atlantic; he handed them to James Russell Lowell, then editor of the magazine, who christened them "Landlocked," and quietly printed them in the Atlantic without a word to me, and the first thing I knew I saw my verses in print, to my profound astonishment. After that I had to write, for my kind friends, James T. Fields and John G. Whittier, and others insisted on it. 'Write—thee must—it is thy kismet,' said the great, good poet, and so I did."—Banner.

Founding of the King's Daughters.—"How little did we dream in 1886 of what 1894 would bring forth; that 'In His Name' would be on hospitals, over day nurseries, the motto of our kindergartens, the token of innumerable works of love. Behold what God had wrought," so writes Mrs. Margaret Bottome, president of the order, in one of her delightful "Heart to Heart Talks." Mrs. Bottome was president of the first circle of ten ever organized. Mrs. Théodore Irving suggesting the name of the service, "The King's Daughters," telling the assembled girls: "You are all daughters of the king, only some of you are naughty daughters, but still his daughters." "I love to think;" continues Mrs. Bottome, "that since she has passed into the beautiful beyond, that it was she who suggested the name, for it is not difficult for her now to see the Daughters of the King in Japan and India and China—yes, in all this world, for the little silver cross with 1886 on it belts the world to-day. It was Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson who suggested the silver cross as a badge of the order, and so the beautiful story of the founding of a great order is told."

Apropos of the war in progress between China and Japan, a great deal of interest is manifested by women generally as to the character of the present empress of Japan. It is not generally known that the empress, who recently celebrated her wedding, is not only a very plain woman but a very intellectual one, with great strength and beauty of character. Her particular hobby is the Peeresses' School, which she has established in Tokio.

Women Druggists.—Nearly 400 women in the United States are graduates of pharmacy, and a majority of them have charge of hospital drugrooms, or are engaged as dispensary clerks in large drug stores. A large wholesale drug store in the North employs a woman as buyer, in which capacity she travels over Europe.

Things Useful.

Flat-irons will not yellow linen if they are first rubbed on a cloth saturated with kerosene.

Butter put into clean pots and well surrounded with charcoal will keep good for twelve months.

All traces of mud can easily be removed from black clothes by rubbing the spots with a raw potato cut in half.

Minced Ham on Toast.—Mince finely a half-pound of ham, already cooked, and mix with anchovy boned and washed. Add a little cayenne and pounded mace; beat up two eggs and mix with the mince, and add just sufficient milk to keep moist; make it quite hot, and serve on small rounds of toast or fried bread.

Cream Biscuit.—Beat the yolks of six eggs and six ounces powdered white sugar together for fifteen minutes, add a little essence of vanilla and three ounces of flour, mix all gently together, then add to the mixture a gill and a half of thick sweet cream that has been beaten to a froth, stir lightly together, then fill small paper cases with the mixture (these cases are sold under the name of rameqiun casas.) When the cases are filled dust the biscuit over with white powdered sugar and bake in a moderate oven. These are nice either hot or cold.

As fritters bananas are excellent. Sliced, fried and sprinkled with powdered sugar in the old Creole way, they are very good. Made into a pudding by slicing them, placing a pudding dish with alternate layers of sponge cake, the whole being soaked with beaten egg and baked, they are not to be despised. Preserved bananas are also delicious. Boil together a pound of sugar, a half pint of water, the juice of one lemon and one orange. Skim this, and when it is syrup-like put in six peeled bananas, sliced in two. Cook for about twenty minutes and serve cold. To bake bananas loosen the skin, so that the fruit may be slipped out, but do not take it out until after the baking, which must last a half hour. Then remove the loosened skins and cover with a sauce made by boiling half a cup of water five minutes, and adding a teaspoon of butter and the juice of half a lemon.

HEALTHY CHILDREN

come from healthy mothers, and mothers will certainly be healthy if they'll take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Nothing can equal it in building up a woman's strength, in regulating and assisting all her natural functions, and in putting in perfect order every part of the female system.

"Favorite Prescription" is indeed the "Mothers' Friend" for it assists nature, thereby shortening "labor."

DR. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir—I took your "Favorite Prescription" previous to confinement and never did so well in my life. It is only two weeks since my confinement and I am able to do my work. I feel stronger than I ever did in six weeks before.

TICK TACK.

"See the neat little clock, in the corner it stands
And points out the hours with its two pretty hands;
The one shows the minute and the other the hour
As often we see in the high church tower.

The pendulum swings inside the long case
And sends its two hands round its neat little face,
It never should go too slow nor too quick,
But swing to and fro with a tick, tick, tick.

So must I, like the clock, my face happy and bright,
My hands quick in motion must always do right;
My tongue must be guarded to speak what is true!
Wherever I go and whatever I do."

—Our Little Men and Women.

Allan's Sermon.

One rainy Sabbath, too wet for Johnnie to go to church, his parents left Allan at home to take care of him. The playthings were all put away except kitty; so Johnnie played with kitty until he made her angry by taking her up by the ears, as Allan took up his rabbits. Then she jumped out of the window, and Johnnie saw her no more that morning.

"Allan," he said, "I wish I could just go and look into my box of playthings. I won't take out one. I just want to look at them; that wouldn't be breaking the Sabbath, would it?"

"It would be going into temptation," said Allan; "and you know you prayed this morning, 'Lead us not into temptation.'"

"O dear!" sighed Johnnie, "then I wish I was at church."

"Come," said Allan, "I will preach you a little sermon."

"Well," said Johnnie, "I will listen."

So Allan took the great Bible and found this text, which was so easy that Johnnie could read it himself, "I am the door."

"Here is a little text for a little boy who is four years old," said Allan, "for it has just four words in it, one for every year.

"The first word is 'I.' That has only one letter in it. This means the Lord Jesus, the good Saviour who loves little children.

"The second word is 'am.' That has two letters in it. When Jesus says, 'I am the door,' of course he doesn't mean that he is a door like that you shut just now; but this little sermon is to show how he is like a door.

"The third word is 'the,' which has three letters. Jesus says the door because there is only one door into the kingdom of heaven.

"The fourth word is 'door,' which has four letters in it. A door lets people into the house; and if there was no door, they could not get in. So the Lord Jesus lets his people into the kingdom of heaven; and if it was not for him, they could not get in at all. A door keeps out the rain and the dogs and the thieves, and so Jesus keeps away all evil and hurtful things out of his beautiful heaven.

"Now, when you want to go into a house, you go straight to the door; and so, if want to go into the kingdom of heaven, we must go to Jesus and ask him to let us in."

So Allan knelt down, and little Johnnie by him, and they prayed to the dear Lord to make them his own good children, so that they might go into his beautiful city when they should leave this world.—Union Gospel News.

How Kittie Took Care of Her Mother.

It was very dismal when Kittie opened her eyes that winter morning, and saw that her mother was still in bed, and looking very ill.

"Are you sick, mamma?" she said, touching her face with her soft hand.

"Yes, Kittie, I feel real sick; my throat is that sore and all filled up like." Then she closed her eyes again. Kittie was a brave little girl, and so, though it was very cold, for the fire was quite out, and the sun, which usually shone in so bright and warm, was hid behind the clouds, and the whirling snow filled the air, and the wind blew in all about the loose windows and came under the door, she hopped out of bed and hurried on her clothes. She put on her outside sack, too, and then ran to the stove and tried to kindle the fire. But the wood would not burn, for it was damp as well as large.

"Oh," thought Kittie, "if I only had some kindling." And then in a minute she had some in her hand, for she remembered her one little treasure a pretty little butter-box which she had picked up in the street. She meant to cover it sometime for a work-box, and put her little thimble and spool of thread in it, and take it to the evening school as the other girls did. But now she gladly broke it into bits, and oh, how quickly it lighted up, and the big sticks caught fire, and soon there was a fine blaze. Pretty soon the kettle boiled, and Kittie made the tea and carried a cupful to her mother, who raised up a little and tried to drink it, and felt a little better.

"Now, mamma" said Kittie, "what shall I do next?"

"I don't know," said Mrs. Burns, sinking back on the pillow; "try to keep warm, my darling', and eat a bit of breakfast."

She looked very ill, indeed, and Kittie felt her heart sink.

"She must have the doctor," she said; "Oh, how can I get him?"

She was only eight years old, and her mother had never let her be in the streets, or left her alone much, as she took in washing, and so Kittie was not used to fighting her own way as so many children are.

But she was a sensible little girl and a good scholar, and now she tried to think for herself what to do.

She did not like to ask any of the women in the house to come in, for she and her mother were different from the rest, so she sat down and wrote a note to her teacher:

"Dear Teacher:—My mamma is very sick, and can hardly speak a work. I must stay and take care of her, so will you please send a boy to get a doctor to come and see to her?

"Kittie Burns, 27 Flatbush Street."

This note she folded carefully, and went quickly down stairs and put it into the letter-box near by.

She directed it to "Miss Lena Bowers, Schoolhouse No. 10."

And now she got some breakfast for herself, a little meat and bread, and some hot milk, and then went again to her mother.

She was breathing heavily. Kittie remembered that when she had a sore throat her mother always put a cloth dipped in hot water on it, so now she determined to do so, too, for her mother.

It was hard work for the soft little hands to wring out the hot cloth, but she did it, though the tears would come into her eyes, and somehow she roused her mother enough to let her put it on her throat.

She kept doing this, till, oh joy, she opened her eyes and said: "Oh, that is good, very good; put more on, Kittie."

Miss Bowers did not get the note till just as school was out, but she went herself for a doctor she knew was always willing to help the poor people, and accompanied him to the tenement house where Kittie and her mother lived. When she got there they found Mrs. Burns breathing quite easily, though still suffering from sore throat and fever.

The doctor examined her, and then said: "I think she would have been past help if the hot water had not been applied," and asked where the nurse was.

When Kittie said, "I am the nurse, sir," he looked very much surprised, and said, as he put his hand upon her head:

"You are a very good, able nurse indeed, my child, and have very likely saved your mother's life."

Then he prepared some medicine for the sick woman to take every hour, and went away, but Miss Bowers stayed until Kittie could get a good nap, and attended to the medicine for her.

The next day Mrs. Burns could sit up in bed, and in a few days was well.

Don't you think Kittie was a very happy little girl?—The Standard.

For thin biscuits take half-a-pound of flour and the yolk of one egg. Beat the egg and add it to the flour, then pour in sufficient milk to make a very stiff paste. Beat this well and then knead it. Roll out the paste as thin as possible, then cut it into nice-sized biscuits. Bake them for about 20 minutes in a slow oven.

The best place to keep a sponge is in an open basket of wire.

The acids of the apple are of singular use for men of sedentary habits, whose livers are sluggish in action, those acids serving to eliminate from the body noxious matters, which, if retained, would make the brain heavy and dull, or bring about jaundice or skin eruptions, and other allied troubles. Some such experience must have led to the custom of taking apple sauce with roast pork, rich goose, and like dishes. The malice acid of ripe apples, either raw or cooked, will neutralize any injurious acids.

A good cough mixture is made in the following manner:—Five teaspoonfuls of linseed to one quart of water. Boil this for some time and strain it, now add to this liquid three tablespoonfuls of brown sugar, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, and a very little pepper. Take a little of this when the cough is troublesome, warmed if possible.

Resolutons Adopted by the Synod of North Caro lna.

The Synod of North Carolina, gratefully sensible of its obligations to the North Carolina Presbyterian for publishing and disseminating not only the news of its churches, but the actions of all its Presbyteries and agencies, adopt the following resolutions:

1st. The North Carolina Presbyterian is an indispensable agency for promoting and maintaining every enterprise in which the Synod is engaged.

2d. That the success and efficiency of all its enterprises would be vastly enlarged by a largely increased circulation of the paper."

3d. Synod's agent of Publication, in co-operation with the agents of Publication in the Presbyteries, is instructed to concert measures for securing this greatly to be desired result.

WORD AND WORK.

Two years ago two elders of our Wilmington churches feeling that much of their business had been done in Brunswick county, and that they ought to do something for the spiritual good of its people, gave their word that if a suitable man could be found they would guarantee his support for the summer vacation from Seminary. Their word meant work and Mr. L. W. CURTIS a licentiate of Chickasaw Presbytery was secured. He came in May and worked for four months, by the courtesy of other churches and in destitute districts preaching once a month at several points. He visited from house to house, urged increased interest in Sabbath-school and church work, sought out the few Presbyterians in the county and awakened a desire to have some Presbyterian preaching and the formation of Presbyterian churches. There was neither of them in the county before. Mr. CURTIS worked under the direction of the Home Missions Committee of Presbytery and his work of the first summer moved that committee to secure his services for the summer just past. He has closed his work in the county, for this summer and leaves this week for Princeton to spend the Seminary year in post-graduate studies before going to the Foreign field, probably as a missionary to the Laos.

Dr. HOGE reported recently the definite results of his work at a point in Town Creek district where Presbytery will be asked to organize a church—and where with plans prepared by Dr. HOGE, they have most of the lumber money necessary and a central and suitable piece of land, and have begun work upon a building to be ready for use very soon. They have a large and earnest Sabbath-school and attend week day as well as Sabbath services in large congregations. These services are to be held monthly during this fall and winter.

I have just returned from the lower district of the county near the South Carolina line, having visited many families and preached for several days in the Alliance building near Shallotte. There was need of this work as a help to other churches of the district. At the close of these services a warm regard for Mr CURTIS was shown and a grateful appreciation of his personal visits and work and preaching was manifest. There was an urgent request for him to return next summer until his departure as a missionary. Several expressed a desire to have a Presbyterian church at Shallotte camp and members of all churches asked to have a preacher to hold Sabbath services once a month until next spring with the hope of having a church and regular services. They pledged financial aid in such work. The work of Mr. CURTIS has been altogether tentative, and while not finding openings for our Church in other districts has shown an open door and much work for us to do.

In these visits to the few Presbyterians I was asked what would be the effect of the arrangement with Dr. RAWLINGS. This gave opportunity to speak freely of the fact that the word of our people and preachers had been in the interest of the PRESBYTERIAN, but often it had not been followed by work to increase its circulation. It is not understood that the editor took the paper after fine editorials had failed to make financial strength and success. Hence the Presbyterians of the State cannot understand the need of work to increase the subscription list in order to decrease the subscription price. The entrance of Dr. RAWLINGS upon the editorial management and control will permit those of us who have enjoyed our labor of love for the cause of CHRIST in contributions to this department during the past few years to resign into abler hands this by no means light labor. We do this the more gladly as we know the ability of Dr. RAWLINGS to do this work and it will necessarily create a policy for the paper in passing all questions through one mind. We stand pledged to help as we may be able and asked. Let me beg of our ministers and members to consider that the paper will not do its appropriate work merely by the ablest editorials and unless all work to increase its circulation. It is the Synod's paper, whether we say so in word or not, and it is our duty to work for it. The present management has sought to make the paper what our people need and desire so far as the income would justify, and some of us have gladly done gratuitous work to help in this. The Synod and our Presbyteries expect the free use of its columns for Church news and the publication of papers and records of Church work while sometimes saying it is not the organ of Synod. This is not wholly just. Let the brethren consider and act accordingly. We all wish the new management success. Then let us send in items of Church news. Let us not leave these brethren to search for these in secular or other preferred papers when the news will be days or weeks old. As we may rightly expect to claim the use of its columns for Synodical work, let us give it the support of Synod. Let us by word and work secure subscribers and we may justly expect increased value and decreased subscription price of the paper.

Finally let me ask for occasional words of appreciation and encouragement to the editor and manager and working force of this most delicate and difficult work to help, though it cannot please, all.

THE FIRST NUMBER OF THE CHILDREN'S Missionary, published monthly by the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, at Nashville, at 25 cents per year is before us. It serves the purpose for which it is gotten up admirably. This number is devoted to Korea and is embellished with several cuts which will attract and greatly add to the interest which the articles will excite.

This fills a long felt want amongst us. The editor Mr. RANKIN has given great care and is at his best, and we do hope our people will send lots of subcribers. Every family should have a copy.

REV. DR. JAMES M. RAWLINGS HAS arrived and on 1st prox. will assume editorial charge. We trust this arrangement will meet cordial appreciation and that friends will make special effort in behalf of the paper.

EARLY LICENSURE.

We have received valuable communications on this subject from Rev. J. W. Rossbro, D. D., Rev. E. W. Smith, D. D., and Rev. W. T. Hall, D. D., too late for this issue, that we will publish next week Below we publish a communication from one of our most progressive young men, and extract from a private letter to one of the editors a few pungent sentences from a venerable minister, one of the most modest of men, but one of our most accomplished scholars.

HOW THE PLAN WILL WORK.

I am in favor of the proposed change for the following reasons:

1. The spirit of the existing law will remain. The Book unquestionably contemplates, before licensure, a certain degree of knowledge; between licensure and ordination, the practical trial of gifts before the people, the judgment of the people manifested in a call, and a final examination of all the evidence by Presbytery. The theory is excellent, but it has failed in one important particular. Ordinarily the trial of gifts has been made before licensure. Licensure is sought in order that a call, virtually in hand, may be formally received, and a man is often licensed one day and "in due time" ordained the next, it being presumed that the "Probationer" has "received from the Church a good report," and has "devoted himself diligently to the trial of his gifts" during the night-watches.

The reason for this state of things is obvious. Our candidates preach and preach acceptably at the close of the first seminary term. They are in demand. The Assembly has refused to close their mouths. They cannot seek licensure until after two years of study. There is no cause for seeking it then. Hence we have unlicensed preaching and licensure itself often made farcical. The proposed plan requires a man to seek licensure before preaching, and it declares what hundreds of our churches have found to be true in fact, that a college course, a year in the seminary, and a working knowledge of the English Bible, and the Confession of Faith, will enable him to try his gifts to the edification of God's people.

2. The proposed plan will elevate the standard of education. Our theoretical standard is high. Our actual standard is low. The fatal defect of our present system is that the examination for licensure and ordination are the same. There is a tendency to slur over the first because of the second and to neglect the second because of the first. It is a "matter of record" (I quote from an actual case) that the first examination has been passed. I recall another instance where the candidate for ordination was asked simply if he was of the same mind as at the previous examination. The knowledge of laxity in these examinations is an incentive to laziness at the Seminary. Practically the standard of theological education is fixed by the length of the Seminary course. An increasing number of students leave the Seminary after two years of study. They have the right to apply for licensure then, and after licensure Presbytery cannot refuse ordination. Under the new plan the Presbytery is required to insist upon the "regular course" after licensure; and the examination for ordination is to be "close particular and thorough," and upon a wider range of subjects than heretofore. The standard is to be tested not by the entrance examinations but by the requirements for graduation.

Moreover the preaching of the students is of inestimable value to them, as a necessary part of their education. They have a good fund of practical knowledge when they enter upon the full work of the ministry, and their experience shows them their needs, while the opportunity is given of satisfying them, by proper study and reading. May the new plan soon be adopted!

THE THEORY OF LICENSURE.

I am conservative to the backbone, but my friends in power generally appear to occupy a menacing attitude in opposition to any suggestion of improved methods. At my age it is natural to shrink from conflict. So I turn to my junior brethren, hoping and praying that they may have wisdom and courage to reform our Church in the direction of the Scriptures. Conservatism is a positive curse when it assumes that no progress for the better is possible.

Your position seems to me unassailable. Our brethren are deluding themselves with hair splitting distinctions between preaching and preaching.
